CROWN PRINCE MERE THIEF

Looted Chateau He Had Occupied and Destroyed Articles He Could Not Carry Away.

PARIS, Sept. 30. — Crown Prince Frederick William, during the first days of the battle of the Marne, had his headquarters at the chateau of the Baroness de Bays, near Champeaubert, Marne, famous for its collections of art objects. The Baroness de Bays writes, says The Paris Temps, thus:

The crown prince plundered the whole place. He stole medals, old arms, rare and precious vases, tapestries, icons, curios and gold souvenirs most dear to my family. He caused to be packed choice pictures and pieces of furniture, but some of these cases were left in the hasty flight of the Germans."

The baroness affirms, according to The Temps, that the German crown prince stamped with his heel upon the portraits of the Russian Emperor and Empress in the chapel of the chateau.

ANTWERP ATTACKED.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 30. — (Via London.)—The Germans have commenced their attack on the first line of the defence of Antwerp, according to despatches received by the Amsterdam papers. Moll, which is an important railway junction near the Dutch border, was occupied by the Germans, Sunday and Monday the Germans, who again occupy Malines, began a bombardment of forts Waehel and St. Catharine. It is believed that heavy Austrian artillery is being used.

Lierre, according to a message to the Handelsblad, has been under shell fire since early morning. The people at first hid in the cellars, but subsequently fled to Antwerp, being joined by fugitives from the surrounding villages. It is reported that many houses have been destroyed and some of the inhabitants killed and wounded. One shell fell on a hospital, killing nine persons.

OFFERED GERMAN BONDS.

But Germans Refused To Accept Them as Equivalent To Cash.

OSTEND, Sept. 30.—Burgomaster Max of Brussels continues to withstand the force of German tyranny single-handed. After repeated attempts to collect at least a part of the levy made on the city, the Germans issued a final warning that it must be paid at a certain time. When the hour arrived Burgomaster Max appeared with a considerable number of German bonds, which he insisted represented cash. The militant authorities refused to accept the paper and he was thrown into prison, being released when the municipality finally gave up $6,000,000 to their heavy-handed conquerors.

Germany Cannot Have Coal.

LONDON, Sept. 30. — The British Government is taking steps to put a stop to the supplying of coal to the few German cruisers which are at large. Dutch steamers are being examined, and in this way a check has been put on commodities being shipped to Germany through the Netherlands, and the big Dutch steamship lines announce that they will only accept cargoes from America consigned to the Netherlands Government, which, to avoid a breach of neutrality, must see to it that this cargo does not get into Germany.

"No Alum"

must be the watchword when the housewife buys baking powder.

Alum is well known to be a powerful astringent, and should never be used in food.

Prof. Geo. F. Barker, M. D., of the University of Pennsylvania, says: "I consider the use of alum baking powder highly injurious to health."

Food economy now, more than ever, demands the purchase and use of those food articles of known high quality and absolute purity and healthfulness.

Farm Labour The Chief Solution of Unemployed Problem

TORONTO, Sept. 29—Farm labour, as the chief hope for the solution of Ontario's unemployment problem, was the substance of a report on existing conditions, submitted this afternoon to the general executive of the Ontario Industrial Association by a special committee.

One feature of the report was the suggestion that if no other employment could be found for men, they should be enlisted and trained as soldiers, providing they were physically fit, being given board and lodging in return for military service. This would provide an efficient body of men who could be called out if necessary, and would, at the same time, insure the needy of a livlihood.

An Unusual Winter.

The report says in part:

"Reliable information received from many sources warrants the fear that the coming winter will witness unemployment upon a scale never before experienced in Canada. Already there is much more unemployment than usual, and the outlook for the immediate future is such to cause anxiety. Competent leadership, careful planning and ample capital are indispensable if we are to meet in any adequate way the situation now facing us."

The policy laid down by the Executive Committee, the report continues, is to supply remunerative employment as opposed to direct relief. It is also pointed out that the value of the work planned as a remedy for the situation is in direct proportion to its speedy productiveness. The production of supplies which can be marketed—farm products, pulp wood, live stock and the like—are of the first importance.

"No Idle Land in 1915."

"It is evident," continued the report, "that the war will be of considerable advantage to Canadian agriculturists, and it has been urged by those competent to pronounce an opinion that the best service Canada and Canadians can render the Mother Country and her allies is to increase the quantity of agricultural products available for the people of these countries at the earliest possible moment.

"Hence the association's motto — 'No Idle Land in 1915.'" It is well known that very few farms in Canada have been worked to full capacity during the past few years. Now, as never before, the farmer is afforded an opportunity of supplying world markets at the most remunerative prices. To secure adequate results the farmers will need to employ more labour. Ther is practically no limit to the increased production which Canadian farmers can enjoy in 1915 if they have an adequate supply of help to assist them."

Farm Help is the Best.

Farm help, therefore, is suggested as the most important outlet for the unemployed, and with a view to making full use of this factor, most elaborate arrangements are being made by the Central Committee.

As another means of providing employment, the construction of roadways is recommended. The great value that would accrue to municipalities in the continuation of municipal and public works despite the financial depression is also pointed out.

As a further means of relief to those out of work and who are financially embarrassed through the force of circumstances, it is suggested that a municipal loan bureau be established for the purpose of making loans on satisfactory security to deserving people. A rate of six per cent. is suggested.

A committee has already been organized to co-operate with the Toronto Industrial Comittee to apportion a part—about $500,000—of the one million dollar Patriotic Fund for an employment bureau a loan bureau and for relief in the city. The charter has been applied for from the Government.

"Relief Work" is Useless.

In conclusion the report says: "Your committee is opposed except as a last resort, to what is known as 'relief work,' that is, work which is of no actual value now or in the immediate future to the community in which it is done. Such work is, of course, preferable to alms or indiscriminate charity, as there is no doubt that the physical exertion required of any unemployed man or woman as payment for relief improves the morals of the applicant.

"Before relief work of the usual character is resorted to, municipalities are urged to organise the unemployed into drill corps. Those drilling could be paid a sum sufficient to provide board and lodging, or the municipality could provide board and lodging to all those enrolling their names, without pay. It is also suggested that the municipalities should assist in the recruiting of the permanent force in Canada, by requiring all applicants for relief, who can pass the necessary physical examination, to enlist. The Federal authorities have decide to increase the permanent force, and your committee will suggest to them that arrangements be made with some of the large municipalities to provide recruits in accordance with the plan outlined above."

FRANCE WILL NOT BE TEMPTED BY PEACE TALK

PARIS, Sept. 28.— The Temps this afternoon in an editorial under the caption, "The Snare of Peace," says the latter is equally as dangerous as war. The Temps expresses fears that the absorption of all minds in the tragic duel now proceeding may blind the people to the work that is being caried on to divide and paralyze the allies by deceitful prospectives of a so-called honourable arrangement.

The paper adds:

"The London and New York papers bring details of the latest effort in this direction, which undoubtedly will not be the last. The English, with clear common sense, refused for a moment to be enveloped by this turning movement, which was tried in America. The French will show the same firmness, and once more the inventors of underhand combinations will have laboured in vain.

"The ingenious means of American mediation, which tended to bring to the front the respected influence of President Wilson, has failed. It was found to fail now that the United States has been enlightened by the conflagrations in Belgium and France in regard to the type of humanity which imperialistic Germany represents. The President has refused to compromise himself in risky mediation, which would only end in dividing and misleading the efforts of those who are defending themselves, while aiding the aims of their aggressors.

President Wilson, before embarking on the mediation which had been suggested to him, asked the Berlin Chancellery to specify its intentions somewhat. The Chancellery replied substantially that Germany would willingly listen to mediation proposals, but absolutely cannot do so while England keeps on declaring that the war must be war to the knife and without mercy.

"Germany, according to the reply of the Chancellery, is willing to admit that the chances of war are equal at the present moment, but insists that the empire must be kept intact in Europe, and it must remain master of its destinies. If these conditions are not granted Germany will fight while a single man remains."

The Temps brands this response as a new manifestation of the unhealthy pride of the Imperial Government, which believes itself to be intangible and infallible. The paper concludes by saying: 'France in council with her allies will not be the voice of feebleness. No more than England or Russia will she bend beneath the test of war nor allow herself to be tempted by the snare of peace."

REPORTS ARE UNOFFICIAL

Say Von Kluck is in Retreat With Allies in Full Pursuit—Motor Cars Are Gathered In

TALK OF SURRENDER

LONDON, Sept. 30.—A Paris despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. says:

"It is stated here to-night (Tuesday) that the German right has been entirely broken and is now being pursued by the allies. All the automobiles in northern France have been requisitioned for the purpose of pursuit.

"Armored motor cars with mitrailleuses are also being used to pursue the retreating enemy.

"The official communication issued at three o'clock demonstrates unmistakably that the Germans have been surrounded in the Somme Department, the French front extending further east.

"It is officially stated that Peronne has been recaptured."

The foregoing message has been referred to the British official press bureau which, while not objecting to its publication, takes no responsibility for its correctness.

The report is current that Gen. von Kluk, commanding the German right, opened a peace parley on Sept. 26 with Gen. Joffre, offering to surrender if his men were allowed to retire to Germany and guaranteeing that they would not again take part in the war. According to the story, Gen. Joffre flatly refused to consider such terms and directed that the attack continue. It is said the army of von Kluk is slowly disintegrating under the terrific assaults of the last few days and that a general backward movement has already set in. Large quantities of ammunition and many guns are being abandoned, according to the rumor.

The tighter censorship is felt in the absence of news from the seat of war where the greatest events are taking place. New estimates of German casualties place the German losses at 300,000 and those of the allies at 100,000.

An official statement made by the press bureau last night confirms previous statements that the German position on the Aisne was chosen and prepared long before the battle began.

Late reports reaching Paris state that the German right wing is now retreating from its fortified positions between the Aisne and the Somme rivers.

It is also reported that the allied armies have succeeded in cutting the German line of communication, and that part of Gen. von Kluk's army is in grave danger.

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 30. — (Via London.) — Travelers arriving here from the Kiel Canal say that the Germans are busy placing new ordnance, which the Krupp Works has been experimenting with for the past two years, on the armored cruisers and dreadnoughts.

The canal is described as being crowded with warships, including the largest battleships. The arsenals are busy day and night, and long trains arrive continuously with immense guns for the ships.

The Germans are reported as declaring that the whole fleet will soon be ready to fight.

EYES ON SOUTH AFRICA.

Kaiser's Plans Would Make Boers' Hair Stand on End, Says Botha.

LONDON, Sept. 30. — A despatch to the Reuter Telegram Co. from Cape Town says that in the course of a speech addressed to five thousand people at the town of Bank, in the Transvaal, Gen. Louis Botha, Premier of South Africa, emphasized the necessity of loyalty to the British Empire.

Declaring that the policy of neutrality was absolute nonsense, he pointed out that if a German warship came to Durban and imposed a levy of five million pounds sterling on them it would help the people very little to say that they were neutral.

He justified the exportation of South Africans to support the Imperial Government. He said he had information regarding German ambitions concerning South Africa which would make the hair of his hearers stand on end. The fact of the matter was that the German Emperor wanted to go down to posterity as a second Napoleon. Incidentally he also wanted a place to send Germany's surplus population and South Africa appealed to him as a suitable place.

CARDIFF, Wales, Sept. 30.—(Via London.) — At a big meeting here yesterday, over which the Earl of Plymouth presided, David Lloyd George, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, spoke of the Government's decision to raise a Welsh army of 50,000 men.

Mr. Lloyd George, who delivered a rousing speech, said that Glamorganshire already had recruited 16,000 and Monmouthshire 12,000 men. He frankly told his hearers that the recruits were not going out for a picnic, but for a stern enterprise, which would involve hardships, wounds and danger, but, he added, a vast majority would return and would have glorious memories to the end of their lives—memories that they would not barter for all the gold in the Bank of England.

He pointed out that under conscription Wales would be compelled to contribute 350,000 men, but that a volunteer army of 50,000 men would be just as good as a forced army five times that number.

Canada Serves Final Notice of Dropping of Fisheries Treaty.

OTTAWA, Sept. 30. — Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has notified the United States Government that the proposed treaty between Canada and the United States regarding the taking of food fish in boundary waters is now definitely dropped and Canada assumes freedom of action to make such regulations of her own as she deems necessary. The treaty was drawn up four years ago by Dr. David Starr Jordan for the United States and Prof. Prince for Canada. The Canadian Government agreed to it, but opposition was raised by certain interests in the United States and approval of the treaty by Congress was delayed from time to time. The present administration at Washington when it came to power seemed anxious to have the treaty adopted, but the opposition continued, and, the time limit set by Canada having been exceeded, the Dominion Government has decided to wait no longer.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

Certain of the figures he could make nothing of; but he concluded rightly they were totem-signs, and that they represented all which still remained of the art of writing among those barbarous remnants of the once dominant, powerful and highly cultured race of Americans.

He counted more than two hundred freshly built piles of stone, but whether any of these contained more than one body of the Folk he could, of course, not tell. Allowing, however, that only two hundred of the Folk and one hundred and sixty of the Lanskaarn had fallen, he readily perceived that the battle had been, for intensity and high percentage of killing, sanguinary beyond all battles of his own time.

Under the walls, too, the vast numbers of boulders which had been thrown down, the debris of broken weapons, long and jaggedly barbed iron spear-points and so on, indicated the military ardor and the boldness of the fighting men he now had to dominate and master.

And in his soul he knew the problem of taming, civilizing, saving this rude and terrible people, was certainly the very greatest ever given into the hands of one man and one woman, since time began!

Along the beach he found a goodly number of empty revolver-shells. These he picked up, for possible reloading, in case he should be able at some later time to manufacture powder and some fulminating mixture.

He asked the patriarch to have search made for all such empty shells. The Folk eagerly and intelligently cooperated.

With interest he watched the weird sight of scores of men with torches rolling the great stones about, seeking for the precious cartridges. From the beach they tossed the shells up to him as he walked along the top of the fortifications so lately the scene of horrible combat; and despite him his heart swelled with pride in his breast, to be already directing them in some concerted labour, even so slight as this.

Save for some such interruption, the life of the community had now settled back into its accustomed routine.

With diminished numbers, but indomitable energy, the Folk went on with their daily tasks. Stern concluded the great funeral ceremony, which must have taken place over the fallen defenders, and the horrible rites attending the decapitation, boiling, and hanging up of the trophies of war, the Lanskaarn skeletons, certainly must have formed a series of barbaric pictures more ghastly than any drug-fiend's most diabolical nightmare. He thanked God that the girl had been spared these frightful scenes.

He could get the old man to tell him nothing concerning these terrific ceremonies. But he discovered, some thirty yards to southward of the circle of stone posts, a boiling geyser-like pool in the rock floor, whence the thick steam continually arose, and which at times burst up in terrific seething.

Here his keen eye detected traces of the recent rites. Here, he knew, the enemies' corpses—and perhaps even some living captives—had been boiled.

And as he stood on the sloping, slippery edge of the great natural caldron, a pit perhaps forty feet in diameter—its margins all worn smooth and greasy by innumerable feet—he shuddered in his soul.

"Good God!" thought he. "Imagine being flung in there!"

What was it, premonition or sheer repulsion, that caused him, brave as he was, to turn away with a peculiar and intense horror?

Try as he might, he could not banish from his mind the horrible picture of that boiling vat as it must have looked, crammed to the lip with the tumbling, crowding bodies of the dead.

He seemed still to hear the groans of the wounded, the shrieks of the prisoners being dragged thither, being hurled into the spumy, scalding water.

And in his heart he half despaired of ever bringing back to civilization a people so wild and warlike, so cruel, so barbarous as these abandoned People of the Abyss.

Could he have guessed what lay in store for Beatrice and himself should Kamrou, returning, find them still there, a keener and deadlier fear would have possessed his soul.

But of Kamrou he knew nothing yet. Even the chief's name he had not heard. And the patriarch, for reasons of his own, had not yet told the girl a tenth part of the threatening danger.

Even what he had told, he had forbidden her—for Allan's own sake—to let him know.

Thus in a false and fancied sense of peace and calm security, Stern made his observations, laid his plans, and day by day once more came back toward health and strength again.

And day by day the unknown peril drew upon them both.

CHAPTER XXXI.
ESCAPE?

Who could, indeed, suspect aught of this threatening danger? Outwardly all now was peaceful. Each waking-time the fishers put forth in their long boats of metal strips covered with fish-skins. Every sleeping-time they returned laden with the fish that formed the principal staple of the community.

The weaving of seaweed fibre, the making of mats, blankets, nets and slings went on as probably for many centuries before.

At forges here and there, where gas-wells blazed, the smiths of the Folk shaped their iron implements or worked most skilfully in gold and copper; and the ringing of the hammers, through the dim-lit gloom around the strange blue fires, formed a chorus fit for Vulcan or the tempering of Siegfried's master-sword.

Stern took occasion to visit many of the huts. They were all similar. As yet he could not talk freely with the Folk but he took keen interest in examining their household arrangements, which were of the simplest. Stone benches and tables, beds of weed, and coarse blankets, utensils of metal or bone — these completed the total.

Stern groaned inwardly at thought of all the arts he still must teach them before they should once more even approximate the civilization whence they had fallen since the great catastrophe.

Behind the village rose a gigantic black cliff, always dripping and running with water from the condensation of the fogs. This water the Folk very sensibly and cleverly drained down into large tanks cut in the rock floor. The tanks, always full, furnished their entire supply for drinking and cooking. Flat, warm and tasteless though it was, it seemed reasonably pure. None of this water was ever used for bathing. What little bathing the Folk ever indulged in took place at certain points along the shore, where the fine and jet-black sand made a good bottom.

Along the base of the vast cliff, which, broken and jagged, rose gleaming in the light of the great flame till it gradually faded in the luminous [illegible] they carried on their primitive cooking.

Over cracks in the stone, whence gas escaped steadily and burned with a blue flicker, hung copper pots fairly well fashioned, though of bizarre shapes. Here the communal cuisine went steadily forward, tended by the strange, white-haired, long-cloaked women; and odors of boiling and of frying, over hot iron plates, rose and mingled with the shifting, swirling vapors from the sea.

Beatrice tried, a few times, to take some part in this work. She was eager to teach the women better methods, but at last the patriarch told her to let them alone, as she was only irritating them. Unlike the men, who almost worshipped the revolvers, and would have handled them, and even quickly learned to shoot, if Stern had allowed, the women clung sternly to their old ways.

The patriarch had a special cooking place made for Beatrice, and got her a lot of the clumsy utensils. Here she busied herself preparing food for Allan and herself — and a strange sight that was, the American girl, dressed in her long, brown robe, her thick hair full of gold pins, cooking over natural gas in the Abyss, with heavy copper pans and kettles of incredible forms!

Almost at once, the old man abandoned the native cookery and grew devoted to hers. Anything that told him of the other and better times, the days about which he dreamed continually in his blindness, was very dear to him.

The Mercucans were, truly, barbarously dull about their ways of preparing food. Day after day they never varied. The menu was limited in the extreme. Stern felt astonished that a race could maintain itself in such fine condition and keep so splendidly energetic, so keen and warlike, on such a miserable diet. The food must, he thought, possess nutritive qualities far beyond any expectation.

Fish was the basis of all—a score of strange and unnatural-looking varieties, not one of which he had ever seen in surface waters. For the most part, they were grey or white; two or three species showed some rudiments of colouring. All were blind, with at best some faint vestiges of eye-structure, wholly degenerated and useless.

"Speaking of evolution," said the engineer, one day, to Beatrice, as they stood on the black boulder-beach and watched the fishermen toss their weird freight out upon the slippery stones—"these fish here give a magnificent example of it. You see, where the use for an organ ceases, the organ itself eventually perishes. But take these creatures and put them back into the surface-ocean—"

"The eyes would develop again?" she queried.

"Precisely! And so with everything! Take the Folk themselves, for instance. Now that they've been living here a thousand or fifteen hundred years, away from the sunlight, all the protecting pigmentation that used to shield the human race from the actinic sun rays has gradually faded out. So they've got white hair, colourless skins, and pinkish eyes. Out in the world again, they'd gradually grow normal again. How I wish some of my old-time opponents to the evolutionary theory could stand here with me to-day in the Abyss! I bet a million I could mighty soon upset their nonsense!"

Such of the fish as were not eaten in their natural state were salted down in vats hollowed in the rock, at the far end of the village. Still others were dried, strung by the gills on long cords of seaweed fibre, and hung in rows near the great flame. There were certain days for this process. At other times no fish were allowed anywhere near the fire. Why this was, Stern could not discover. Even the patriarch would not tell him.

Beside the fish, several seaweeds were cooked and eaten in the form of leaves, bulbs, and roots, which some of the Folk dived for or dragged from the bottom with iron grapples. All the weeds tasted alike to Stern and Beatrice; but the old man assured them there were really great differences, and that certain of them were rare delicacies.

A kind of huge, misshapen sea-turtle was the chief prize of all. Three were taken during the strangers' first fortnight in the Abyss; but the fortunate boat-crews that brought them in devoured them, refusing to share even a morsel with any other of the people.

Stern and the girl were warned against tasting any weed, fish or mussel on their own initiative. The patriarch told them certain deadly species existed—species used only in preparing venoms in which to dip the spear and lance-points of the fighting men.

Beyond these foods the only others were the flesh and eggs of the highly singular birds the strangers had seen on their first entry into the village. These tasted rankly of fish, and were at first very disagreeable. But gradually the newcomers were able to tolerate them when cooked by Beatrice in as near an approximation to modern methods as she could manage.

Skin Trouble On The Scalp
Skin Dried and Cracked and Hair Fell Out—Cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment.
Eczema is annoying and distressing at any time, but doubly so when it gets into the scalp and causes the hair to fall out. Here is a grateful letter from a lady who was cured by using Dr. Chase's Ointment.
Mrs. Hector Currie, Tobermory, Ont., writes:—"I was cured of a disagreeable skin disease of the scalp by using Dr. Chase's Ointment. The trouble started with itching and pain in the scalp, the skin would get dry and crack, and at times would bleed, and the hair would fall out. I tried three doctors without benefit, and suffered for three years. Reading in the almanac about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I began its use, and am now completely cured. The hair has grown again, and I am as well as I ever was. You are at liberty to use this letter, for I am glad to recommend so excellent a treatment.
Dr. Chase's Ointment has no rival as a cure for itching skin disease.

SUCCESSES OF SERVIANS HAVE BEEN A BIG SURPRISE

Balkan Exploits Did Much to Lift Stigma of Royal Murder.

GALLANT little Servia has proven one of the surprises of the present war as well as being the nominal cause of it. When Austria sent her peremptory note to Belgrade demanding the right to inquire into Servia's most private affairs, with the ostensible purpose of finding those responsible for the murder of the archduke, and Servia refused to consent, the man on the street prophesied rapid extinction for the Balkan kingdom. But Servia knew more of European politics than the man on the street did and she had the assurance of support from her great Slav neighbor, Russia. Then came the rapid denouement in which Germany, stricken with fear of Russian participation, endeavored to scare Russia out of the field and failed ignominiously. The almost incredible series of diplomatic blunders at Berlin, which resulted in the participation of France, then Belgium, then Britain, and the neutrality of Italy, had the effect of changing what at first seemed like sudden and thorough castigation of Servia into an overwhelming advantage for the little state.

CROWN PRINCE ALEXANDER.

NOW FIGHTING EVEN.

Distracted by more dangerous enemies Austria called off a large part of her army to aid the Germans in Alsace and the bulk of what remained was hurried into Galicia, leaving only a part to attend to her adversary in the south.

GENERAL YANKOVITCH.

On the first assault Austria, by reason of her superiority of numbers and artillery, walked into Belgrade with very little trouble, but when the Servian and Austrian forces along the Danube and Save became more equal there was a marked change in the tenor of the despatches. The Servian troops, which had been overwhelmed by sheer numbers, began to demonstrate that man for man they were superior to their adversaries.

The record of the war since that time has been a continuous series of successes for Servia. After hard fighting she has not only retaken Belgrade but has invaded Austria and has a strong position in Semlin across the river from Belgrade. On her west frontier she has crossed into Austrian territory and is carrying on operations, with the aid of the Montenegrin forces, which may ultimately deprive Austria of the bitterly disputed province of Bosnia.

INDEPENDENT SINCE 1878.

The independence of Servia, which was formerly an autonomous province of Turkey, was established by the Treaty of Berlin in 1878. It is a limited monarchy with a constitution and a national assembly and a state council. The executive authority of the nation is vested in the King and his Ministers. The virtual monarch is the Crown Prince Alexander, who since the practical abdication of his father, King Peter, has been looked upon by the Servians as their ruler.

The Crown Prince of Servia is the second son of King Peter and became heir to the throne about four years ago, when his elder brother, George, was forced to renounce his claims. Alexander bore the brunt of much of the Macedonian fighting in the late Balkan war, together with the soldiers of the First army. He took a conspicuous part in the battles of Kumanovo and Monastir and acquitted himself with great credit. The crown prince is twenty-six years old and is a handsome young man rather above the average height, with olive complexion and dark eyes. Unlike his elder brother, he is a man of good habits and clean life. As crown prince of Servia he receives an annual allowance of $60,000 from the state.

Since the murder of King Alexander and Queen Draga in 1903 Servia has had a reputation for barbarity which the facts hardly warrant. Her people, who number about three millions, are a hardy, thrifty, agricultural race, among whom pauperism is almost unknown, and while education is backward there is a system of compulsory free schools and marked progress is shown in this regard.

PREMIER NICOLA PACHITCH.

RELIGIOUS TOLERANCE.

Servia's behavior during the Balkan war did much to restore her prestige in Europe. It also gave a new impetus to internal progress, and if the present war goes in favor of the allies her share of Austria's southern territory will make her a considerable power in Southern Europe.

Alpinists Warned Off.

Climbing among the Central Alps is among the things forbidden by the military law under which Switzerland now lives. The Swiss mountain guides were among the first to be called to the colors.

Many amateur mountain climbers who were not aware of this restriction found themselves in the early days of the excitement attending the opening of warfare, stopped by armed sentinels in the St. Gothard region and at points near the frontier.

The Groom— Well, Bill, you won't see the guv'nor's horse any more they've taken him for the army. The Gardiner—Oh, I suppose now he's going to be what the Frenchies call a "horse de combat."

THEY WERE WELL MATCHED.

Why the Ramseys Were Like Old Joe Murchison's Team.

"It seems strange that the Ramseys should have married each other," said Mrs. Pitman.

"Strange? Not at all, my dear!" replied her husband. "They are well mated—as well mated as old Joe Murchison's horses were."

"I don't know anything about Murchison's horses," said Mrs. Pitman, "but I know that Mr. Ramsey is big and handsome and indolent, and Mrs. Ramsey is always at work and is thrifty into the bargain."

"That bears out what I say, my dear," said her husband. "Let me explain. In that remote and 'dark ages' period of my life before I knew you they offered a prize at the annual fair for the best matched pair of agricultural horses. There were some beauties brought in, so that everybody laughed when old Joe Murchison came driving along a great, handsome, slow moving horse harnessed with a wiry, scrawny little beast that took two steps to the big fellow's one.

"'That's a finely matched pair!' somebody shouted.

"'So they be!' agreed Joe complacently. 'So they be! The best matched pair in the county! One's willin' to do all the work an' t'other's willin' he should!'"—Exchange.

THE OLD YORK ROAD.

The construction of this famous road in 1711 was an example that led the energetic colonists at other points along the Atlantic seaboard to make similar roads where there were no water routes. For the most part these roads were built by chartered companies and were called turnpikes or toll roads. Pennsylvania, Connecticut and New Jersey had many roads of this kind.

The first macadamized road in this country was constructed in 1792 between Philadelphia and Lancaster. In 1811 there were said to be 4,500 miles of chartered turnpikes in New England and New York. During the next twenty years the government expended many millions of dollars in constructing great highways, but the panic of 1837 and the building of railways and canals put an end to that branch of the government work.—Washington Star.

Conclusive.

Two Pullman porters representing different railroads met off duty and progressed from friendly gossip to heated argument. Their quarrel centered about which one worked for the better road. Their claims, figures and arguments came fast and furious. At last the tall, thin porter settled the dispute with these classic words: "Go on, nigguh; we kills mo' people dan you fellahs tote."—Argonaut.

Renewed Vigor In Old Age

This Letter Brings a Message of Cheer to the Aged—Results of Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

New, rich blood is what is most needed in the declining years to keep up energy and vitality. That Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a wonderful help in maintaining good health and prolonging life is attested by the writer of this letter.

Mr. Stephen J. Leard, North Tryon, P.E.I., writes: — "At seventy-five years of age my heart gave out and became very irregular and weak in action and would palpitate. My nerves also became weak, and I could do nothing but lie in bed in a languishing condition, losing strength and weight. In that condition I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and am cured. Had I not obtained this treatment I would now be in the box with the roof over my nose. At eighty-one I have an energy which means go, and I am writing this letter so that old people like myself may prolong their health and strength by using this great medicine." 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. For sale by all dealers.

BURIED TREASURE.

Story Which the Natives of Peru Have Handed Down.

There has always been fascination for man in lost or sunken treasure, and this again has been brought home to us by the many attempts which have been made lately to recover from the ocean bed bullion which has laid there for centuries, and in some cases a few weeks only.

The sinking of the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence River has added to the number of ships which have taken to their grave beneath the icy waters valuables which are essential to the works of man.

Divers are now endeavoring to recover the bullion aboard the Canadian liner, for there are men still willing to risk their lives in the recovery of treasure from wrecks, as in the old days men were ever ready to go into unexplored lands in search of riches reported to be buried there.

The treasure of the Incas of Peru is among many that have defied the efforts of expeditions to locate, and even to this day no definite clue has been found of the many million dollars worth of gold buried on the approach of the Spaniards into the interior of the present republic.

One of the stories of these lost treasures relates to a Cuzco white man of Spanish descent whom the Lord blessed with numerous children. It is the custom here that a godfather shall look after and provide for his godchild and so, as this man was poor, he tried to add to his resources by getting a corps of good godfathers.

So as the infants came one after another he named each in honor of one of the distinguished citizens of the town. The citizens, however, did not respond and the man grew poorer and poorer. At last he had nine babies, each of whom had been given a rich godfather, but there was no help forthcoming. The father swore that he would leave the rich and choose as the patron of his next child the first man he met on the street after its birth.

In due time the stork came again, and the man, rushing out, saw a poor Indian driving a caravaan of llamas into the town. He stopped him and told him he wanted him to be godfather to his child.

The Indian objected, saying that he was poor and not fit to be godfather to a white child. The man also told of his vow and finally persuaded the Indian to accept the position.

In due time the baby was baptized and the Indian appeared at the ceremony as its godfather. He kissed his godson as he left the church and the next day came back into Cuzco with a score of llamas, loaded with wood. He took this wood to the father of his godchild, saying that he had brought what he could and that he must accept the wood as a gift.

The man was thanked and the wood was duly stored away in the court of the house. Some time after that the bundles of sticks and roots were opened, and inside of each was found a great bag of gold in nuggets and dust. In the meantime the Indian had disappeared and could not be found.

The man took the gold and built two large houses on the street named Triumph. If you do not believe this story come to Cuzco, and the people will show you the street and point out the houses.

Making and Earning Money.

"What is the difference between making money and earning money?" asked the youth.

All His Fault.

Mr. Flubdub—I lost my umbrella today. Mrs. Flubdub—That's just like you, John Henry. I told you when you left the house this morning to take one of the borrowed ones.—Puck.

One Result of The War Is Certain

CANADA must Manufacture for part of the World now involved in War.

Europe can no longer supply the Export Markets.

If you are proud of Canada, you want to see our Factories hum, our Stores alive with Business, and our Offices piled with Orders.

Let Peterborough enlist in this movement to boom Canadian Made Goods.

Let Peterborough Manufacturers get on the job, and let us read, mark and hear more of "Made in Peterborough" Goods.

How many good-going factories in Peterborough never tell our own Citizens what they manufacture.

Much of the European trade that was exported into Canada should now become our own. Who but our own Manufacturers should now make the Foodstuffs, the Hosiery, the Underwear, the Toys, and much of the Chemicals, Dye-stuffs, and other things Germany has supplied us?

Advertising will soon reveal which of our industrial enterprises are most worthy and best prepared to profit by Europe's need. The Firms first to advertise for this business will be the first to profit.

Who, among our manufacturers, is willing to be left out in the cold? Who, among such Firms, will fail to Advertise?

OWES HER LIFE TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Cured Both Stomach Trouble and Headaches

PALMERSTON, ONT., JUNE 20th. 1913.

"I really believe that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives". Ever since childhood, I have been under the care of physicians and have been paying doctor's bills. I was so sick and worn out that people on the street often asked me if I thought I could get along without help. The same old Stomach Trouble and distressing Headaches nearly drove me wild. Sometime ago, I got a box of "Fruit-a-tives" and the first box did me good. My husband was delighted and advised a continuation of their use.

Today, I am feeling fine, and a physician meeting me on the street, noticed my improved appearance and asked the reason. I replied, "I am taking Fruit-a-tives". He said, "Well, if Fruit-a-tives are making you look so well, go ahead and take them. They are doing more for you than I can".

MRS. H. S. WILLIAMS.

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Conversion

A Story For Labor Day

By SARAH BAXTER

"Talk about the dignity of labor," said Helen Forsythe to her friend, Lois Gregory. "I don't see any dignity in it. No one can do manual labor without getting dirty hands, chapped hands, misshapen hands."

"There are worse things than dirty hands," replied Miss Gregory.

"What, for instance?"

"A dirty soul. How many rich men's sons who have not the incentive to labor have become worthless and contemptible?"

"I dare say, my dear, there is truth in what you say, but for me I would rather marry a poet than a mechanic."

"Even a poet has his uses, but for me he is altogether too ethereal. I would prefer an engineer whose profession deals directly with labor. What is there more splendid than the spanning of a river by an enormous bridge, the building of a cathedral, the tunneling of a mountain?"

"These are planned by one brain."

"Granted, but of what use would that brain be without the workmen to carry out its plan?"

"Well, Lois, marry in the field of labor if you like. I prefer the fine arts. Give me an artist."

These young ladies were both of the well to do class, but they were very different. Helen Forsythe was disposed to begin where her father left off. When he had been experimenting in overalls she was too young to know much about what he was doing; now that he was living on the royalties he received from a machine he had contrived, with all the refinements a fine income brought, she had little sympathy with what had produced his good fortune.

HELEN WATCHED HIM WHILE HE WORKED.

Lois Gregory, on the contrary, had never known either wealth or poverty. A laborer herself, she sympathized with the cause of labor. She made her living by teaching, and being accustomed to using her brain constantly it became stronger with exercise, and she was enabled to distinguish between what was of intrinsic and what was of fictitious value. She had come to the conclusion that the attaining was intrinsic, the attainment fictitious. In other words, there is no stimulus in an accomplished work except to produce something better.

The country seat of the Forsythes was situated in a beautiful valley, through which ran a stream that afforded a fine water power. A mile below the place was a large factory. One day Helen Forsythe's automobile broke down, and a request was sent to the factory to send a man to fix it. He appeared in overalls with a bag of tools, and Helen took him to the car to show him the break.

There was something about this man that arrested Miss Forsythe's attention. He was some twenty two or three years old and strongly built, and character was plainly written in his face. Helen pointed out the break, though this was unnecessary, for the young man was a skilled mechanic and took it in himself at once. Helen watched him while he worked, asking him questions about the trouble, how serious it was and how long a time would be required to make the repairs. She noticed a British intonation to his speech, but not the misuse of the letter "h" common with the English lower classes.

"Do you like mechanical work?" she asked.

"I certainly do. I was born with a taste for it," was the reply.

"But don't you think it very dirty?"

"You mean shoveling earth, I suppose?"

"You mean handling ashes?"

"There's dirtier work than that. My brother does it every day."

"Your brother!"

"Yes. He's in politics."

This quite took Miss Forsythe's breath away. Surely this young man was very odd. She presumed the brother he referred to was a political heeler in a district where the people were of the lowest class.

"Tell me," she said presently, "what it is that interests you in mechanics."

"I like to fashion things. The mechanic, if he is a good one, may always find a field in his labor for more or less use of the inventive faculty, and the mechanic is free to exercise it. Besides, there is an opportunity in mechanics for a man to climb the ladder that leads up to fortune without using dishonorable means. No man need be happier than the laborer who has all the work he can do. His mind is on what he is doing, and he has no time to worry about imaginary griefs. When he has finished his day's work he enjoys his leisure. How much better off he is than the man whose time is all leisure, who never experiences the comfort there is in rest because he is always at rest."

Miss Forsythe was surprised to hear this from one whom she considered doomed to a life of toil. She was about to inquire of him where he, a laborer, had picked up such ideas when he finished his job, gathered up his tools and, putting them in his bag, bade her adieu and went away.

And yet for Miss Forsythe he did not go away. He was with her the rest of the day as if he were still working on her auto and she listening to his words. "I can understand," she said to herself, "Lois marrying a man like that. There is a healthfulness of body and mind about him that positively rests me. He doesn't seem to be striving for anything. I do believe that he wouldn't give up his present work in exchange for a fine social position, while I—why, if I'm not invited to every swell function I'm miserable."

It was not long before some of the water pipes in the Forsythe house got out of order, and Miss Helen, being, on account of her father's absence and her mother's bad health, the director of the establishment, telephoned to the factory asking for a man to repair them and requesting it to send, if possible, the workman who had repaired her car. He came with his bag of tools, and Miss Forsythe, as before, showed him the break. She left him, but now and again returned to see how he was getting on. When noon came he had not finished, and she invited him to partake of a luncheon she ordered to be prepared for him. While he was eating it she asked him:

"How is it that you, who have never known what is called high life and have no experience as to the cares and disappointments it brings, are so well satisfied with your humble lot?"

He had finished eating when this question was propounded and, rising, stood facing Miss Forsythe, looking at her intently.

"You seem to be interested in this matter," he said, "and I am going to give you a confidence I have given no one else in America. I am the son of an English gentleman. My father designed me for the army or the church. My brother is in parliament. I have watched that silent revolution which is bringing labor to the front. We see it everywhere. People of refinement are sensible of it. Whereas a hundred years ago to make money in manufacture or trade was not considered respectable, now titled persons are going into both.

"My preference is for a life in manufacture. I have no confidence in attaining success in manufacture without ever having been a manufacturer myself. I have preferred to begin as any other laborer begins. If any of them beat me in the race it will not trouble me. If I become a leader I prefer to know the feelings, the necessities, of the men I manage. As to wealth bringing me happiness if I attain it, I have no confidence that it will. My happiness is in my daily labor. I believe that I get the same pleasure in repairing the pipes in this house that the manager of a large factory derives from his more extended duties."

Miss Forsythe was astonished. She had been surprised to meet a laborer who realized that he was happier in his work than if he were a globe trotter, but this man, who was born with a silver spoon in his mouth and had voluntarily stepped on the lowest rung of the labor ladder to climb or remain a fixture, as the case might be, was something more than she could at once understand. Nevertheless she was deeply impressed.

It occurred to her to invite him to dinner to see how he would appear. He accepted the invitation and with clean hands. He was invited again and again, and a year after Miss Forsythe had first met him she wrote Miss Gregory that she had been converted to her friend's ideas as to the dignity of labor and had been induced to marry a laborer.

The bride endeavored to persuade her husband to accept capital from her father with which to start a factory of his own, but he declined. He said that the happiness he derived from labor was in labor and not in management. Nevertheless he was rapidly promoted in the factory where he worked and made a manager in spite of himself.

Each of the girls who conversed upon the subject of marriage failed to do in the matter what they said they would do. Miss Forsythe, who said she would marry an artist, married a laborer. Miss Gregory, who declared that she would prefer one who builds material structures, married a literary man.

THE FIRELESS COOKER.

Some of Its Advantages as Regards Economy.

Whatever opinions might have been held in regard to the merits of the fireless cooker as a regular substitute for heat, it cannot be denied that it is a very great convenience during warm weather.

Among the advantages gained by the use of the fireless cooker are these: A cool kitchen during the day and no odor from cooking. Then, again, food cannot be overcooked, even though it stays in the cooker beyond the allotted time, so if one forgets or is busy in the garden, there need be no fear of food spoiling. Left over the fire it might burn and this not only means waste, but the cleansing of greasy, scorched cooking utensils.

The cereal for breakfast can be prepared over night and found thoroughly cooked and steaming hot in the morning. And since cooking in the fireless is long and steady, inferior cuts can be made into very savory dishes that will eat much more tender than if cooked in the usual way.

A fireless cooker should be a boon to the housekeeper at the summer camp or cottage, because it will do the work, while the family plays, and need no watching either.

It is an economical way, too, in that all the nutrition is retained by using the fireless, also the natural flavor of all foods is preserved. There is no chance for escape. Seeing, then, the fireless has so many advantages it seems singular there should be any objections against it.

Those women who believe in it claim that the reason why others refuse it is because they looked for miracles from the fireless and were disappointed. Then they at once condemned it wholesale and took no trouble to experiment. It requires intelligence to bring good results by this method of cooking, as well as by any other. While the food will cook itself, it must be properly prepared, of course. There are certain rules to be followed if success is to be the result. For instance: The saucepan must always be filled to the brim either with food or water, as the case may be, as a stew will come up to the top, and if vegetables are cooking the water must reach the same height. When vacant space is left the heat escapes.

No intelligent woman would put food to cook over a fire and let the fire go down so that the water ceased to boil and still expect the food to cook properly, but some people seem to expect that the fireless cooker should perform such a miracle.

Never open the cooker until the necessary time for cooking the contents has expired. In such a case the pot must be reheated over the stove. Again, if any food seems to be unusually tough, more time should be allowed. It should stay fully an hour longer than the allotted time.

Another most important point to be remembered is that the contents of the pots must be boiling before being placed in the cooker.

Nuts as Food.

A judicious use of nuts has cured cases of indigestion by relieving the constipation which was the cause. Brazils and pine kernels particularly are rich in natural oil which gives warmth, keeps the digestive system clear and does much toward making the skin clear and healthy. Weight for weight nuts contain actually far more proteid than bread. They are a safe food for all who have a tendency toward any form of rheumatism, and they are also beneficial in cases of mental strain and general "nerves."

TOULOUSE, France, Sept. 30.—(Via Bordeaux.)—Ex-Premier Georges Clemenceau's newspaper, Homme Libre, which was transferred to this city from Paris, has been suspended for eight days by Gen. Bailloud.

The governor of Toulouse asked M. Clemenceau to take out several passages of an article in yesterday's issue which he considered too violently worded. M. Clemenceau flatly refused and the general confiscated the whole and ordered the suspension of the newspaper.

TO SHIFT FOR HERSELF.

Hungary Unlikely To Get Any Help From Austrian Army.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—From the latest events in Galicia and along the Carpathians the conclusion drawn is that the army has abandoned Hungary to its fate and has left the route to Budapest to be defended by the Hungarian national troops, says the Petrograd correspondent of The Daily Telegraph. The despatch continues:

"The Austrians continue to retreat before the persuing Russians and appear to have given up not only the defence of their country in general but also to have decided to abstain from further independent action. They are simply hurrying on to Cracow to join the right wing of the Germans and apparently intend to become a mere component part of the German army.

"Having passed the most difficult part of Uget Pass in the Carpathians, after dislodging the Honveds from three positions, the Russian troops have only some ten or fifteen miles to descend before reaching the Hungarian plateau, where there is not a single fortress or fortified position except such as may be hastily improvised in the form of earthworks by the Hungarian defenders."

A CHRISTIAN SCIENTIST VIEW OF WAR AND PEACE

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—The Ministerial letter asks all Christians to pray for peace, a comendable thing to do.

For years millions of prayers have been offered on this subject, yet there is war. If God is the Almighty all-hearing, why are those prayers unanswered? The Bible says, "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss."

The following, I think, answers the question, and if you can spare space in your vauable paper for it, it might be an aid in bringing an answer to our prayers.

Sincerely yours,
R. J. TODD.

I have been asked by a member of the orthodox church to try and have you publish it.

Peace Versus War.

(Written for the Christian Science Monitor.)

There exists a widespread desire at the present day among many peoples for peace. It is their earnest prayer that wars should cease and that the nations of the world should live on terms of amity the one with the other. The cry of Isaiah finds echo in their thoughts: "They shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

One sighs as one thinks how far off at the moment the world seems to be from such a time. Men sometimes say that nations have always warred with each other and that they will continue so to do as long as "human nature" is what it is. And they are correct: peace will not reign universally until "human nature" is regenerated, until it has been transformed "by the renewing of the mind."

Ask any one in an unimpassioned mood what he thinks of war, and the answer will always be the same. The reply will be that war is futility itself, that it impoverishes nations, bringing them to the verge of bankruptcy, that it degrades them by lowering their moral standards, that it destroys the flower of their manhood, that it puts back, often for decades, their progress along intellectual and ethical lines. War is the climax of false thinking: nations war but individuals are the warriors! Peace is the effect of right thinking: it too is an individual consciousness.

Like everything else in these days the war spirit has been subjected to analysis with more or less truthfulness; but we have found no analysis of it comparable with that which the teachings of Christian Science make possible. You cannot possibly detect an error until you know the truth concerning that about which the error lies; no mathematician can detect a fallacy in a geometrical theorem unless he be grounded sufficiently in the science of geometry. And it is because Christian Science brings such a blaze of truth—of absolute truth—into the consciousness of men that it becomes the most powerful analytical agent the world has ever seen.

Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer of Christian Science, maintained that men had first to know God aright, and as they got to know Him they would become endowed with discriminating wisdom, "power from on high," to judge righteous judgment. She held that God could be definitely known, intelligently understood. She pointed out in the text-book of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," that certain men and women had been discovering Him little by little down through the centuries and that Christ Jesus, with his uniquely pure mind, had discovered Him most of all, so much so that he could actually avail himself of the power of God at any moment and on all needful occasions. Mrs. Eddy rediscovered this "mind of Christ"; she found out that Jesus know about God and His ways of working. It is a remarkable fact that Jesus, who knew so well his Father's will, was the greatest advocate of peace the world has ever seen. The Sermon on the Mount is the strongest message of peace ever given to humanity: and, moreover, he taught how that peace message could be put into practice.

Christian Science translates it to the world to-day, in terms everybody can understand. The Founder of Christian Science perceived that God is a perfect Being, and he is Mind or Spirit and the Soul of all that exists. Because He is perfect He is absolutely good. With a perspicacity begotten of purity and sincerity she saw that such a declaration as to God's nature carried with it certain conclusions at which past generations had turned away the hear, viz., that matter and evil were unreal. If God were infinite Mind and good, then there could be no reality in what purported to be His opposite, matter and evil.

And this sublime proposition with its corollary, is the central theorem on which the regeneration of "human nature" depends. Wars will never cease, peace will never reign, until it has been grasped by and become part of the innermost intellectual fibre of the whole human race.

On page 340 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes: "One infinite God, good, unifies men and nations; constitutes the brotherhood of man; ends wars." Whenever men begin to get a glimpse of the unreality of evil, and consequently proceed to give it no place in their thoughts, it can go no further, so to speak. All forms of evil belief spring from the fallacy that matter is real, that it is true substance. It is a belief of finiteness or limitation upon which hang all the fallacies of personality with every one of the miserable emotions which wring the heart and which are called by such names as jealousy, envy, hatred, malice, revenge and the like. Convince a man through Divine Science that matter is but an unreal sense of things and you strike at once at those passionate emotions which carry the nations through varying vicissitudes of striving to the horrible, relentless, murderous grip of war.

We may be told that nations go to war to redress wrongs, to obtain justice, to bring about righteousness in the government of states; but if so, their methods are along entirely wrong lines to secure lasting results. They are not based on the knowledge of fundamental Principle. Nations must come to see that the belief in the power of evil, injustice and unrighteousness has to be eradicated from the consciousness of one and all, and that humility, the most precious asset of greatness, is the mogul diamond of all the virtues since it is the direct resultant of the intelligent understanding of absolute right. Mrs. Eddy says on page 238 of Science and Health. "Oppression neither went down in blood, nor did the breath of freedom come from the cannon's mouth. Love is the liberator." And love is not passion, but the expression of the highest intellectual appreciation of reality.

We may perceive then how and when peace must come to reign. It will be when men know enough about God and His spiritual law to be healed by it. Let a man be healed of some so-called incurable disease by Christian Science and that man's spear will have been turned into a pruning hook. Heal another from the curse of intemperance and his sword will have become a ploughshare!

There is only one kind of healing; it is the same for leprosy, war-fever or sin of whatever name; it is to know God aright and man as he actually is in His image and likeness.

St. John, the apt and well-beloved pupil of the Master metaphysician, foresaw the day when peace should have settled over the world like a benediction. It was Jesus who revealed it to him; and John stated his vision in these words: "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

A SINGULAR PHENOMENON.

Making Water Boil Furiously While It Is Still Cool.

At high altitudes, such as mountain tops, water boils at a temperature lower than that required in the lowlands (212 degrees F.). This difference is due to the difference in atmospheric pressure, which, as experiments show, decreases in proportion to the distance from the earth.

Although it is not possible to take water up a few score miles into the air, the essential conditions (low atmospheric pressure) can be secured in the laboratory by the use of an exhaust pump or suction pump. By withdrawing most of the air above water inclosed in an air-tight tank a partial vacuum—another name for low atmospheric pressure—is created, under which circumstances the water exhibits the singular phenomenon of boiling furiously while still cool.

There is a simpler way to decrease the air pressure than by pumping the air away, for which only a hard glass flask and a tight-fitting rubber stopper are necessary.

Fill the flask half-full of water and apply heat. After the water has boiled for a minute or so and the steam has driven out all the air, let the heat be turned off and the stopper immediately inserted into the mouth of the flask. Then the flask contains nothing but water and steam. If the steam be condensed a partial vacuum will be created, because no air can be admitted to take the place of the condensed steam; then the water under the reduced pressure of a partial vacuum will begin to boil.

To condense the steam it is only necessary to cool the flask. Accordingly, if cold water be poured over the flask of hot water and steam, the steam will condense rapidly and the water will boil with equal rapidity to supply steam to fill the space left empty by the steam just condensed, until an equilibrium between temperature and pressure is reached.

Upon every addition of cold water, provided the flask is air tight, the same result is obtained, until finally the water inside the flask has cooled to the same temperature as that of the water used to cool it.

Some idea of the tremendous reduction of pressure that takes place within the flask may be obtained by observing the way in which tin cans or defective flasks crumple under this treatment, or by the way the stopper is often drawn into the flask.

The Alexandrian Library.

There were two great libraries in Alexandria, the one in Bruchium and that in the Serapeum, the former contained 400,000 and the latter 700,000 volumes or rolls. The Bruchium library was accidentally destroyed by Julius Caesar when he ordered the shipping fired in the harbor B.C. 46. The Serapeum library was destroyed by an edict of Theodosius, 391 A.D. The claim that the Caliph Amrou, A.D. 640, ordered the destruction of all the books in the Alexandria libraries, with the statement that "if they agreed with the Koran they were useless and that if they disagreed with it they were pernicious," is received by many high authorities with suspicion.

Belgians Terrify German Sentries.

LONDON, Sept. 30. — A traveler from Antwerp says that a remarkable guerilla warfare is proceeding around Antwerp. Every night the Belgians make sorties and every morning brings its quota of casualties. The Belgians have terrorized the German outposts almost beyond endurance. There is scarcely a night when German sentries are not killed. German trains blown up, and havoc worked on their line of communications. As a result the Belgians have earned the name of "black rats" among their enemies.

Effective, Economical Complexion Renewer

One reason mercolized wax is so strongly recommended is that it really takes the place of several different operations, saving time, patience and expense. It is better than any cleansing cream, better than any massage cream, and better than any rouge, for accomplishing the results for which such articles are used. As the wax actually absorbs an old, faded or discolored cuticle, a little each day, the underlying skin which gradually appears, is clearer, softer, healthier-hued and more youthful than any cosmetic-made complexion. Spreading on a thin coat of this wax at night, washing it off mornings in a week or so produces a marvelous transformation. Just one ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, will do the work. There's nothing better to remove freckles, moth patches, liver spots, sallowness, blotches, pimples or blackheads.

For wrinkles and loose, baggy skin, a face bath made by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in 1-2 pint witch hazel, is the best thing that can be recommended. This has remarkable astringent and tonic properties.

CHICAGO, Sept. 29.—Wheat opened flattened out today after a decided bulge, due to reports of the closing of the Dardanelles. MONTREAL, Sept. 29.—The local situation in grain today has shown no change The demand from abroad was again very light and little or no new business was reported closed. The local demand for oats did not improve with the lower prices quoted and dealers here seem quite satisfied to wait.

Hay was neglected. The increased prices in cheese have curtailed the demand from foreign buyers to a large degree, and little or no new business for export was done. A few small orders were reported by local houses, but no big movement is taking place. Butter was easier at Saturday's decline. The feeling prevails here that for at least a short while the present prices will continue easy. Provisions were easy and unchanged. Eggs were quiet but steady.

Quick, Direct Results.

There is nothing to equal newspaper advertising for quick and direct results.

Watch the advertising columns and see the class of merchants and manufacturers that use this method of publicity. You will find they are the most successful in their respective lives. Many of them have tried other methods, but experience has shown them that newspaper advertising has no equal in bringing results. The reason for this is that the paper is read in the home, when the mind of the reader is in a receptive condition, and on the lookout for anything that will make life easier or more pleasant.

ALLIES LEFT IS MAKING PROGRESS

FRENCH REGAIN GROUND AT ST. MIHIEL

FATE OF KRAU CHAU CONSIDERED IMMINENT

Official Statement Says That The Turning Movement Is Progressing

While Rumours of Von Kluk's Precipitate Retreat Are Not Confirmed Military Experts Claim the End of the Battle of the Aisne is Definitely in Sight and That it Will End in Complete Victory for the Allies.

LOST GROUND HAS BEEN RECOVERED

Examiner Special:

PARIS, September 30.—That the French have recovered the ground lost when the Germans captured one of the minor positions connected with the fortified position at St. Mihiel, was made known in the official review of the situation which was issued this afternoon at 2.58. It is stated that the French are now progressing east of St. Mihiel. This report seems to set at rest the report that the German right wing was in full retreat, although it is emphasized that the French left continues to gain ground. The report, as telegraphed from Bordeaux and made public at the military headquarters here, says that the Germans made a vigorous attack on Tracylemont only to be repulsed with very heavy losses. The French are progressing east of St. Mihiel, and are driving the Germans back. On the left it is declared that action is developing to the northward with violent fighting continues in the Waevre region with severe fighting continues. There are only slight modifications in the general situation at various other points along the line.

A GALLANT DEFENCE

ANTWERP, via London, September 30.—An official statement issued by the Belgian general staff to-day says,—"The vigorous bombardment of Forts Woelhem Wavre and St. Catherine, which was continued throughout the night, abated at 8 o'clock this morning. The assailants did not succeed in silencing the guns of the Belgian forts nor in any way lowering the morale of the garrisons of the forts. At no point did the German infantry dare move against our first line of defence. Only one attempt was directed against Forts Liesele and Breedonk. Our troops holding positions between these works allowed the enemy to advance until they were within close range when the artillery and infantry working in remarkable combination, showered the attacking column with a hail of projectiles and bullets, which threw their ranks into disorder and compelled a precipitate retreat. This attempt cost the Germans dearly and was not repeated. In short the events of the day confirm the confidence of the Belgians in the power of resistance of their national redoubt."

THE END IN SIGHT

PARIS, September 30.—The military experts united this afternoon in declaring that the end of the battle of the Aisne is definitely in sight, and that like the battle of the Marne it will prove a decisive victory for the allies. They also declare it is very likely to hasten the end of the war as two successive defeats of this magnitude can be expected to encourage the anti-war party in Germany, already large, because of the terrible losses in men, money and colonial territory that Germany already has suffered.

AUSTRIANS STILL RETREAT

PARIS, September 30.—Dealing with the operations in the East, the official statement said,—"In Galicia the attempted sorties of the garrison of Przemysl have failed. The Austrian armies continue to retreat in disorder, losing many prisoners, guns and supplies; at Uzsok Pass the Russians have defeated a Hungarian brigade and penetrated into Hungary.

SONS OF ERIN ARE FLOCKING TO THE COLOURS

Tremendous Enlistment From All Parts of Ireland as Result of Recruiting Campaign

45,000 AT LEAST

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 30.—(Special cable).—Ireland is still united for the defence of the British Empire and the advancement of civilization against the Prussian hosts, despite the fact that Sir Edward Carson's speeches are being quoted in Berlin papers as evidence of Ireland's dissension at the present time. Asquith, Leader Bonar Law, John Redmond and Devlin, as well as many other statesmen, of all shades of Irish opinion, who stumped the country organizing campaigns for Kitchener's army, are seeing the result of their work in the tremendous enlistment from all parts of Erin's Isle. Redmond estimates that southwest or Nationalist Ireland will provide at least thirty thousand men, while Ulster has already put up fifteen thousand men, sworn in, partially trained and party uniformed. Various German-Irish organizations in America are using every effort to discourage recruiting here, saying: "Let England fight her own battles Germany is no enemy of Ireland," but the enlistment rolls show that Irishmen of all parties are using their own judgment, which is to support the British Empire with their money and their lifeblood, if necessary, in the present great crisis.

A CASE OF APPENDICITIS

Young Stanley Bishop Operated on Last Night in Nicholls Hospital

Yesterday afternoon, Stanley Bishop, the promising young son of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Bishop, 560 Homewood avenue, was suddenly seized with severe pains in the region of the abdomen. Ordinary remedies having proved ineffective, Dr. Neal was called in, who, after a careful diagnosis, called to his assistance, Drs. Fredericks and Eastwood. The symptoms indicated an aggravated case of appendicitis, and it was decided to send the patient to the Nicholls Hospital at once. An operation was performed at 10 o'clock last night, when the appendix was discovered to be a putrid mass, which burst during the operation. This morning the patient was resting quietly, and it is hoped no other complications will ensue. The case is a unique one, inasmuch as, according to the lad's own statement, he had not experienced any previous pain or symptom of any trouble until yesterday afternoon.

MR. E. L. GOODWILL,
Elected Captain of the Civilians' Rifle Club Last Night.

CHARGED WITH ASSAULT

John McGarvey Remanded on Charge of Stealing $84—Today's Police Court

"If I fine him, it won't do you any good," said Magistrate Dumble to Mrs. James Arnott, who charged her husband with assault.

"No, because I'll have to pay it," promptly rejoined the complainant.

It was alleged that while under the influence of liquor, Arnott struck his wife in the face. He expressed regret at the occurrence, saying he had never been in court before.

John McGarvey was charged with stealing $84, the property of of Harry Hamilton. Acting Crown Attorney Wearing asked for a week's remand in order to get interpreters, for the witnesses were Chinese. Mr. Widdifield, of Gordon & Widdifield, applied for bail, which was granted in one or two sureties for $200.

Victor L. Vincent claimed from Walter Cowan, the photographer, the sum of $15, having been dismissed without a week's notice. The magistrate dismissed the case on the ground that it was a claim for damages, which case was not in the province of the police court. Mr. Widdifield appeared for the defence.

46 RECRUITS ARE ADDED TO THE RANGERS

Great Enthusiasm is Shown at the Armouries When New Members Join the Local Regiment

MANY ON PARADE

Unrivalled enthusiasm was shown at the armouries last night when at the weekly drill of the 57th Regiment, forty-six recruits were added to the strength of the regiment. Young men are coming forward rapidly and the peace strength of the 57th should soon be reached. The officers are particularly pleased with the fine class of recruits who are offering themselves.

A parade of the down town streets was the first order of the evening, after which there was company drill in the armouries.

The following orders were issued:

Headquarters,

MR. G. W. HATTON FOR CROWN ATTORNEY

The death of Mr. R. E. Wood makes the office of County Crown Attorney and Clerk of the Peace vacant. It is to be expected that such an important vacancy would be filled without undue delay. It is stated on what is regarded as good authority that the name of Mr. G. W. Hatton, barrister, has been submitted to the government with the probability that he will have the appointment. Mr. R. J. Soden stated to The Examiner this afternoon, that he had recommended the appointment of Mr. Hatton.

Mr. Hatton has both substantial and moral claims to consideration. He is a barrister of many years' standing and large practice and is professionally well qualified to discharge the duties of the office with efficiency. He is, we believe, persona grata to his legal brethren. His lineage is distinctly legal. His father, the late D. G. Hatton, was a lawyer of eminence, and for a considerable time, was police magistrate of Peterborough. His satisfactory discharge of the duties of this office justified the government's confidence in his ability; and it would be, it seems, especially fitting, if the son should succeed the father in the occupancy of another government office for the discharge of whose duties he is well qualified. For a long time Mr. Hatton has done faithful work for his party, and in this regard, as far as such qualification is urged, he is entitled to recognition. Personally regarded, Mr. Hatton's appointment would equal in its acceptance by the public his large personal popularity, which would make his appointment as Crown Attorney as great a source of pleasure to his numerous friends and the general public, as it would be to The Examiner.

"Third Line of Defence" Organized With Mr. E. L. Goodwill as Captain and Two ex-Sharp Men on the Committee.

MUCH ENTHUSIASM

Amid splendid enthusiasm the Peterborough Civilian Rifle Club, "the third line of defence," sprang into being at a big meeting in the Recreation Room of the Armouries, last night. Forty-four citizens of all walks of life—ministers, lawyers, doctors, business men, working men, all fired with the one thought of preparing themselves should their services be called upon, signed the service roll and were sworn in as members, last night. The enthusiasm shown was spontaneous and unmistakable and the success of the movement is a certainty in view of the spirit shown.

Lt.-Col. Miller was voted to the chair, and Capt. E. P. Watt elected secretary pro tem, when the meeting opened.

Mr. E. L. Goodwill read the communications from the Government in regard to Rifle Clubs, showing that the Militia Department would provide rifles and a certain amount of ammunition each year.

Lt.-Col. Miller pointed out that the prime object of the club was to teach its members the art of shooting. There was no finer sport than rifle shooting, but in this case there was something more than sport. No one could tell when the "third line of defence" might be called upon. It did not seem very probable six months ago that the world would be plunged into the most terrible war it had ever seen; yet such proved to be the case, and it might be that all would be needed, and it was highly essential that men should prepare themselves. Lt.-Col. Miller briefly referred to the Government regulations, on of the most important being that the members must take the oath of allegiance to His Majesty the King. "That won't bother us," remarked the speaker, amid applause. "We are all British subjects and we wouldn't mind taking the oath every morning before breakfast.

For a while, until rifles could be procured, the speaker explained, the members would not be able to go out on the ranges, but they would receive instruction in the use of the rifle, sights, etc., in the gallery in the Armouries, and when the time came to visit the ranges they would have some knowledge of the weapon and its uses.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

Captain—E. L. Goodwill.

Sec.-Treas.—J. F. Linton.

Committee—W. H. Moore, F. Bartlett, W. H. Munro, G. A. Borland, and F. D. Kerr.

The Club has been fortunate in securing good officers. Mr. Goodwill has had considerable experience, while on the committee are two Bartley men—W. H. Moore and F. Bartlett, both of whom have represented Canada at the famous Bisley, whose experience and advice will be invaluable.

The annual membership fee, on motion of Messrs. Kerr and Borland, was placed at $1.00.

Rev. Canon Davidson addressed the Club briefly. He thoroughly approved of the objects of the organization, he said, and he pointed out to the members that they should not only prepare themselves to be ready if needed but they should be patriots and stimulate a spirit of patriotism among others. While all were proud of Peterborough, yet the City sometimes lacked that spark of enthusiasm that was necessary in a situation like the present.

Rev. Robert Pogue said that he was a man of peace. He hated war but principle was at stake in the present conflict. There was a worse war had arisen in Germany in the last forty years that must be crushed for the good of the world.

Rev. Jas. Ramsay suggested that while waiting for the rifles to arrive the members should receive some instruction in military drill.

Mr. Henry Rush, ex-Mayor, who was introduced as a veteran, gave some interesting reminiscences of the Fenian Raid and expressed his entire approval of the proposition. The enthusiastic singing of the National

STRANGE COOPERATION.

War, like adversity, makes strange bed fellows. General Joubert, who was one of the prominent Boer generals in the South African war, has offered his services to General French against whom he fought in South Africa. He will probably be attached to General French's staff. Britain's policy of fair dealing has made General Joubert and the Boers of South Africa friends and co-workers in a war of justice as far as the allies are concerned. Britain finds that it is not only right, but that it pays to be magnanimous. Great Britain conquered the Boers in South Africa; the conquest was not, however complete, till the subduing and harmonizing arms of British peace-making, permanent and abiding—were applied by bombarding the Boers with self government, and the full boon of British freedom that the flag stands for.

FRENCH CANADIAN REGIMENT

The proposal to enlist a regiment from our French-Canadian fellow-citizens, to be composed of five thousand men, has been sympathetically received by the Government, and will probably be acted upon. A private contribution of fifty thousand dollars to promote the project has been made, and it is probable that the number of men required will be readily offered. There is no doubt that our French-Canadians are in sympathy with the objects of the war from a double motive—loyalty to British institutions, which they have proved by the splendid military service our French-Canadian compatriots have rendered on Canadian soil; and the other a blood reason, that attracts them to join the fighting line with the armies of their ancestors. There is precedent both present and past for the raising of a distinctive racial regiment in the British army. An Irish regiment is now being recruited in Montreal, and the British War Office has accepted the mobilization of a whole army corps to be composed of Welsh. In the British army recognition of national sentiment has long been practiced. There are Irish regiments and Scotch regiments. Why then should there not be a French-Canadian regiment? Such a contribution to Canada's contingent would not only constitute a gallant and effective fighting force, but furnish another evidence of the comprehensive inclusiveness of the spirit of British freedom, which in its application, recognizes no racial, religious or social distinction, but makes freemen and British subjects, with equal right and privilege, of all peoples and kindred that come under the shelter of the flag, of the three-fold cross that symbolizes the highest application to Christian principles to the problems of Christian citizenship.

THE RIFLE CLUB.

The success attending the meeting for the formation of a Rifle Club is a matter of congratulation. The central idea of effective military organization—learning how to shoot straight—has been practically recognized. The enrollment of 45 members at an organization meeting means that the membership of the club will be large. The spirit of the gathering was distinctly militant—something in the air of the place, something of the spirit that added forty-six recruits to the 57th Regiment. The militant developed to militant Christianity expressed, not only in the impassioned advocacy of the idea of the club, by one clergyman, but in two other clergymen actually shouldering a rifle, and mentally drawing a bead on the bullseye. This is gratifying. It is unnecessary to repeat arguments for the acquirement of experness in rifle shooting in the interests of national defence as in the interest of imperial aggression in the prosecution of a righteous war, to be more exact, a war for righteous ends. The Peterborough Civil[ian] Rifle Club should be a great success. It is established under government auspices, and receives government assistance, an assistance of perhaps inadequate extent. The government provides a certain number of rifles and a certain quantity of ammunition. The number of rifles does not make so much difference, but there should be no stinting of ammunition. The extent of target practice as well as the membership of the club will be largely affected by ammunition supply. Many persons who are naturally good marksmen, and would make effective members of the club, cannot afford the considerable cost of ammunition. If such members do an amount of rifle practice that will count—make them proficient in the main and only object of the club—the skill of shooting straight. Three thousand rounds of ammunition divided among a hundred members of a rifle club—thirty shots to each member—won't do much in making them proficient shots. There should evidently be some means of providing ammunition for the members of the club if all of them are to be made good shots. With the many demands upon private resources, created by the war, it is hardly to be expected that a few public-spirited citizens will add to their contribution of preparing for the most effective form of defence, payment out of their own pockets, for the means of qualifying themselves for a service, distinctly in the interests of the whole country.

FORGETTING THE CRISIS.

By general consent, there is surcease of political criticism on account of the war; but in a case where the cause for which the war is waged and loyalty to ourselves and the empire are concerned, the rule does not strictly hold. It would be easy to criticize the site of the new lieut.-governor's residence. This shows both disregard of fitness of environment, and of the character of the building; its extensive and expensive character is antagonistic to the principle upon which Britain and the empire and the allies are waging war—in the interest of democracy—the cause of the common people. The new residence is so elaborate that a man of moderate means who has little resources beyond his salary of $10,000 a year, cannot be a lieutenant-governor. He can't keep the style; do the social flaunting that the elaborate character of the building renders almost compulsory. Lt.-Col. Hendrie, the new lieutenant-governor, is a man of large private means, and will set a pace in "entertaining" that his successors will have to maintain. It is easily seen that in erecting a palatial and costly residence—both in structure and maintenance — the Ontario government have as inexorably excluded a man of the people from the lieut-governorship as they have disregarded the claims of democracy by refusing a labour representative on the commission appointed to administer an act expressly designed in the interests of the labour classes.

In another way the Ontario government has fallen short of loyalty to Canada. Recently the provincial secretary's department imported from the United States two carloads of plumbing supplies for public institutions. Canadian factories would have appreciated the loyalty of the government to Canada that would have placed these orders with Canadian factories. This is a very serious matter. It should not be done at any time, but especially at a time when there is a universal feeling, and appeal for the use and encouragement of only Canadian-made factory products. Calling attention to such thing may lead to a charge of partisanship, but this is not so serious offence when a leading Conservative journal feels called upon to condemn the exercise of the worst kind of partizanship, machine partisanship, which freely ignores the great crisis of Canada and the public interests that take precedence of the interests of any party. It is perfectly justifiable to take advantage of the occasion to make profit for the nation, for all parties, for the people as a whole, out of the present war situation; but little can be said in praise of any attempt to turn the whole-hearted cooperation and self-sacrifice of Canadians to party advantage.

A COMPARISON OF BRITISH AND GERMAN CRUISERS

Now that the Heligoland fight has seen British and German cruisers exchanging broadsides, naval journals are discussing the relative merits of the two national types. "For years Germany has been building what the German Admiral Staff terms "small cruisers"; these vessels can be distinguished by their bearing the names of towns—Lepsic, Karlsruhe, Emden, Mainz, etc — and are all of small or moderate size, great speed, and light armament. British cruisers are not standardised in the same way; but of late years the Admiralty has been building a number of very fast ships, some larger, some smaller, than the German "small cruiser," but all more heavily armed. The German ships are all armed with the 4.1-inch gun, a weapon which fires a 35-pound shell, and probably can be discharged with great rapidity. The British 4-inch gun is a lighter weapon; the earlier "marks" fire a 25-pound shell, and the projectiles from the later patterns weigh 31 pounds. The British cruisers, however, usually mount 6-inch guns as well as the 4-inch weapons, and the 6-inch shell weighs 100 pounds. The Naval and Military Record says:

Special mention is made in the Admiralty communique of the excellent work performed by the Arethusa's six-inch guns. With these weapons she "seriously injured" one of the enemy's cruisers, with whom a running fight of 35 minutes' duration was maintained at a distance of about 3,000 yards. The emphasis laid on the work of these guns proves them to have been much more effective than the 4-inch battery. Such a result has always been predicted by leading British authorities. Our light cruisers have a real advantage over the ships of equivalent type by virtue of their heavier metal. Take the Arethusa (3,750 tons) and one of the ships she engaged, the Mainz (4,280 tons). The first named has a broadside of two 100 and three 31-pounders opposed to the six 35-pounders of the German ship, or 293 lb. against 210 lb. The difference in the rate of fire between the 6-inch and the 4-inch is too slight to compensate for this disparity, which is increased by the greater range, accuracy, and smashing effect of the bigger gun. Thanks to the foresight of the British Admiralty, nearly all our modern light cruisers carry this excellent weapon, whereas no small German cruiser afloat mounts anything heavier than the 4.1-inch 35 pounder. Whatever the occult objection to an adequate armament which influenced the German authorities, they have already suffered by it, and will suffer still more, judging from the manner in which the gallant little Arethusa mauled her bigger opponents.

It is interesting to compare the features of typical ships which took part in the first authenticated cruiser action of the war

Arethusa —Launched 1913; length, 420 ft.; beam, 39 ft.; draught, 13 ft.; displacement, 3,750 tons; I.H.P., 30,000; speed, 29 knots; protection, 3 in. belt; armament (2 6in. Q), (6 4-in. Q.), 4 T tubes; broadside, 293 lbs.; complement 270, (about.)

Birmingham — Launched 1912; length, 453 ft.; beam, 49 ft.; draught, 15 ft.; displacement, 5,440 tons; I.H.P., 26,500; speed, 25 knots; protection, 3 in. belt and deck; armament, 9 6-in. Q., 4 3 pdr. Q., 2 T. tubes; broadside, 500 lbs.; complement, 400.

Mainz—Launched 1909; length, 425 ft.; beam, 46 ft.; draught, 16 ft.; displacement, 4,289 tons; I.H.P., 19,600; speed, 25 knots; protection, 2 deck; armament, 12 4-in. Q., 2 machine, 2 T tubes; broadside, 210 lbs.; complement, 379.

Nothing could demonstrate more clearly the remarkable superiority of British cruiser design. Our ships are unquestionably the best as regards all-round fighting quality, but especially with respect to gun power. Although she is 30 tons lighter than the Mainz, the Arethusa is obviously the more formidable; whilst the Birmingham though only 1,160 tons larger than the German ship, is immeasurably superior in armament, has equal if not higher speed, and much better armour protection

It may be objected, however, that the British vessels cited are of more later design than the Mainz. This is true; but if we take the Karsruhe, launched in 1912, and therefore contemporary with the Birmingham, we find her reproducing the same inherent defect of all the German light cruisers. She displaces 4,820 tons, has a speed of 27 knots, and mounts the same armament of twelve 4.1-inch guns. Her sole claim to superiority is the three-inch belt which protects vital parts, reinforced by a 2-inch deck. The Karlsruhe, in fact, despite her extra 1,070 tons, is two knots slower than the Arethusa, and has a much less effective battery.

Toronto World Discourses On The Ontario Premiership

It is well to remember that when Sir James Whitney died at noon on Friday the Ottawa cabinet immediately got busy and appointed Hon. J. S. Hendrie lieutenant-governor before evening. It might be better taste not to make any comment on the present state of political affairs in Ontario. It might also be not unwise to see that mobilization is not delayed until the war is over.

We spoke yesterday of the undoubted desire of those in control of the Toronto Conservative machine to dominate Ontario politics. One degree worse than this for Ontario is the possibility, if not the actuality, of dictation of Ontario affairs from Ottawa. Hon. Frank Cochrane was in Toronto on Saturday, and in the afternoon a statement was handed out about the swearing in of Hon. J. S. Hendrie.

There are more than rumours that Mr. Cochrane wishes to have Ontario government business harmonize with the designs of the Ottawa government. It is stated that he intends to find a putty man who can be moulded to the wishes of the federal cabinet. The man has been named, but we will not discredit anyone by repeating it.

Hitherto Ontario has been very well able to look after her own affairs, and if the present cabinet, or the survivals of Sir James Whitney's cabinet, are unable to maintain this policy they need help. They should not surrender without a protest. Neither Hon. Frank Cochrane nor any lesser man from New Ontario should be chosen to carry out the views which Ottawa may deem wise for the province.

What Ontario needs is a man of her own choice, that is, of the choice, free and uncontrolled by one of the political parties, of a man to lead her political destinies.

If the Conservative party is willing to be engineered from Ottawa then the disintegration of the Conservative party in Ontario has already set in. Ontario requires a strong man who will continue the traditions which Sir James Whitney created, traditions of honesty, of efficiency and of progressive government, and of government by the choice of the people. This cannot be arrived at without a meeting of the Conservative caucus.

The province is in a position of grave danger, and those who are most loyal to the memory of Sir James Whitney are not those who are trying to hush up discussion by considerations of etiquette, but those who are trying to call the attention of the people of the province to a situation which may be too late to remedy a few days hence.

One of the dangers of party discipline, as we remarked yesterday, is that it operates for the advantage of anyone. If Ottawa chooses a premier for Ontario, he will be summoned by the lieutenant-governor, and every politician in the country will hasten to present his congratulations and make himself solid with the new regime. Those who wish to be independent and have a say in the legislative control of the province will be too late, and will be assailed as traitors by the pliable, disciplined crowd who do not care, who is in office or what the policy is, so long as they are in with the party in power.

The situation demands prompt attention from all who have the interests of the Conservative party and the people of Ontario at heart. There should be a caucus of the party at the earliest possible date, and no appointments should be settled until the caucus has spoken.—Toronto World.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Favours A French-Canadian Regiment

On Monday, at the reception by Sir Robert Borden of a delegation urging the raising of a regiment of French Canadians from Quebec and Ontario, for service abroad, the following letter from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who could not be present was read by Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux:

Dear Sir Robert Borden:—

There is every probability that the war will be of long duration, and I understand that the Government is already contemplating the organization of a second contingent.

May I suggest that as our population is composed of varied ethnical elements it might be well to recognize the fact and to allow the formation of units out of those several elements.

The War Office at all times has taken full advantage of the force of race esentiment in the formation of the army. At all times, it has counted purely Scotch regiments, as well as purely Irish regiments, and we understand that Lord Kitchener has just authorized the recruiting of an exclusively Welsh force.

The aim I have in view is in reference to the formation of a French Canadian regiment. You are probably acquainted with the fact that a movement is on foot in Montreal and Quebec for the purpose of raising such a regiment.

There is every reason to believe that if the formation of a French-Canadian unit were authorised, there would be a generous response.

I offer these observations with the sole object of helping in the cause which we have all so much at heart. If you think well of my suggestion, I will be happy to assist in any way that may be deemed advisable, and I will hold myself ready to meet you at your convenience, for a mutual exchange of views, both as to the object itself and as to the best means of attaining it.

Yours very sincerely,
Wilfrid Laurier.

RUTHLESS POLICY OF THE GERMAN OFFICERS RECOILED UPON THEM

Their Plan Was Made For Advance —Overlook Retreat—Failure to Take Paris Was an Augury of Defeat — Incidents From the Allies' Lines.

OFFICERS WERE BRUTAL

LONDON, Sept. 14.—After several weeks in the war zone, just behind the British lines I may be able to explain some of the causes of the remarkable German rout, which may seem strange to some after the barborous march through France almost to the gates of Paris. They are not merely physical, but moral. For the real causes of the "War Lord's" strategy one must look into the heart of the German soldier and at his behaviour in the field. He had been fighting all the way from Liege to Paris. For a month he had been given no rest, with the Allies stubbornly contesting every foot of ground, forced on by the ceaseless indifference of officers for the lives of men.

Recoiled on the Germans.

He had seen his comrades driven forward, often in close formation, to certain death, into the sweeping fire of the Allies' guns. The result was inevitable. This ruthless policy of driving men to the slaughter recoiled on its authors. The men now fighting in retreat are furious with their officers and in revolt against their ruthless contempt for human life, which has destroyed so many thousands of their fellows. I merely write what I have been told by German prisoners passing through French towns or packed in troop trains on the way to Paris, where not so long ago they had expected to enter as victors. Even in those trains the intolerance of the German officers for their men was most marked. Officers protested against being packed in the same waggons with their men; nor would they eat with them. Even in this, their hour of common misfortune, they bullied them.

When they surrendered to the British cavalry—and it may be taken for granted they were alike elsewhere—they were haggard and faint and begged piteously for food. And most disheartening of all were the immense captures of their ammunition, stopping the supplies of food for the guns as well. The loss of the great columns of munitions destroyed by the attack of General Pau at Crepy-en-Valois drove the German officers furious and contributed much to the wrecking of the German right.

And then to turn away from Paris just as they thought they had the capital within their grasp was a terrible blow to German pride and the German troops and was the first sign to the German soldier that his great "War Lord's" plans had gone wrong. It was an augury to them of disaster. More than that, the great German plan was made for advance. Retreat never entered into their calculations.

Roads Become Quagmires.

And now what is happening? They marched through Belgium and France in magnificent weather, which was all in their favour. When they entered the heart of France they had perfect roads, over which their heavy guns were hurried at tremendous speed. Just as their disastrous retreat and the Allies' victorious advance began the weather changed. The beautiful hard roads were converted by torrential rains into quagmires, veritable "Sloughs of Despond" to the discouraged Germans. In their rapid flight they were forced to abandon their guns sticking in the mud, which accounts in some measure for the great captures of guns made by the Allies.

The country abandoned by the enemy, after their brief occupation, shows the full horror of war and the terrible difficulties besetting an enemy fighting through hostile territory. I have seen but a small part of it between Paris and St. Quentin, a great track of desolation and destruction in a countryside which five weeks ago was exquisite in its peaceful beauty.

Saw Wanton Destruction.

In pursuing the Germans I may have seen but little, as I have said, of the ravages committed by the Germans in their advance through France, but enough to illustrate their methods, their wanton destruction. For military purposes they had burned many little villages, and their blackened stumps of timber and charred, broken walls, with heaps of ashes which were once farmhouses, remain as witnesses of the horror that has passed. Along the roads lay dead horses, swarming with flies to carry elsewhere germs of disease. Only here and there did we see little houses that had escaped, still standing prim and neat. In other villages one could hardly have believed that war had been there. But they were silent and deserted, as if a plague had passed. A little cafe still displayed its placards advertising Dubonnet and other liquors. As on we go we see spent cartridge cases lying about the roads, fragments of shells and shells which had failed to burst, with their nozzles buried deep in the earth. Peasants prowl around searching for these trophies.

As on we go we see the shattered roofs of the houses, some completely destroyed during the attack of the retiring Germans. They defended the passage of the Marne hardly. From the ferryboat which carried us over I could still see on the parapets of a pretty terrace overlooking the stream the sandbags, mattresses, pillows and cushions from behind which the German riflemen had commanded the bridge head on the opposite side. A few hundred feet only had separated them from their British pursuers.

The Germans were here a week and during that time they ransacked every shop in the place. The staff put up at the best inn, the Hotel de l'Epee, a title the proprietor is now probably sorry for.

His good lady told me that by way of celebrating their arrival the officers —there were sixteen of them—demanded a good brand of champagne, as they had only had inferior sorts of late.

"I told them our cellars were empty. They then sent men to search the town, and these presently returned with a case of Moet et Chandon. At the end of the dinner party they were all drunk, and set about kicking and whipping some of their servants and men.

Soldiers Demand Best Wine.

"One evening a party of soldiers burst in and asked me, with the usual threats, for some good wine. I said I had nothing but ordinaire. They wouldn't believe and ordered me to bring a light and show them the cellar.

"At the bottom of the steps they shouldered me away; but when they found the bottles which"—this with a shrewd smile—"I had been careful not to hide, they declared they had only wanted champagne and left in a very angry mood.

"Undoubtedly there is not now a bottle of champagne in the town, for the Germans stole and drank thousands of bottles during the few days they were here."

Riding in the wake of the storm, the further one goes into the valley one sees more and more ghastly relics of the fray. Up one hill I ran into all that remained of a German battery, an awful heap of dead men and baskets packed with live shells. British cavalry had dashed into them from behind the screen of trees a biscuit throw away and had cut most of them literally to ribbons. At this very moment, in the cabbage field beyond, a squad of peasants were digging their graves, toppling them in like so many turnips in a pit, and shovelling the slack earth over them.

A little further ahead dead horses lay by the score. Peasants were covering them over with rye straw, pouring oil on them and setting them on fire. The smell of roasting flesh was horrible, and coming upon it suddenly as I did, it made me violently ill.

But in time I became "salted" to this terrible business. Indeed, men and dead horses became as common as ordinary roadside objects. Here and there among them — actually among them!—a tired out soldier lay asleep as peacefully and as dreamlessly as though he had been at home in his own bed. It was hard to tell—until you actually touched them—the living from the dead.

Food Scarce Everywhere.

Further on a bridge over a canal had been blown up—another burning of the boats. Five and thirty bloused Frenchmen were working desperately at the wreckage, so as to patch it up in time for the reinforcements which were hurrying up.

"Help us, messieurs," they cried. So my chauffeur and I stripped our coats off and sweated gladly with the others. We got it in some sort of holding shape, but very tottery, just as a fleet of automobiles dashed along the narrow road with artillery officers on board. Behind them came a dust bespattered ammunition column—dozens of huge motor buses packed with munitions; vehicles of "rubber neck" excursion parties, some of them, and still splashed with advertisements of trips to and from Paris.

We got them across the bridge somehow. We have also realized how difficult it is to get food in the rear of an invasion, as in every other town in the region all the shops were shut and nearly all the houses. It is usually only after a long search that an inn can be found where any food is to be had. In one where we called to try to get luncheon the landlady provided us with melon and macaroni, while dogs and cats sprawled around us, and at a neighbouring table a group of peasants discussed their grievances. And that was one of the most sumptuous meals we have had since we left Paris.

As for the fighting along that great extended front, it is impossible for any one correspondent to tell its story. But from many officers I have met in places as far apart as Paris and Le Mans, Chartres and Rouen, and in the villages behind the English headquarters, the stragglers from many regiments, so that zouaves are mixed up with chasseurs and artillerymen. I have learned that the Germans, in spite of a gallant enough resistance, have been demoralized by the terrific enthusiasm of the Allies' attack. The French gunners were magnificent and overpowered the German artillery, and in many parts the repeated bayonet charges of the French infantry were irresistible, so reckless were they in their courage.

Germans Poor Shots.

Nor is the German to be mentioned in the same breath with the British soldier when it comes to using a rifle. Many Germans are in such a hurry to shoot that they fire from the hip. Our men pick out their man, and they get him before they are done with him. They shoot beautifully, often following up their fine marksmanship with a magnificent bayonet charge. And the high spirits of the men! They charge, shooting and singing all the time. And then, their duty done, French and British cavalry join in pursuit.

An officer told me extraordinary stories of the condition in which German prisoners were found.

"We rounded up a great bag," he said. "Their state was pitiful. Blood was pumping out of their boots and their faces wer covered with sores. Many of them were so weak they couldn't stand. And scores fell asleep the moment they were caught.

"I happen to speak German. Several of them told me they were sick to death of the war. Many were starving and were down with fever. What food the more lucky managed to get in the villages soon disappeared, and half a million mouths could stow away a lot. Their losses had been enormous, almost unconceivable, and many companies were running short of ammunition."

The truth is, and I have seen it with my own eyes, that the failure of the Germans to enter Paris and the knowledge that the Allies' forces were at last able to take the offensive not only broke the hearts of the Germans, officers and men alike, but made the French spirit leap up with irresistible confidence. The defensive never suited the temperament of either British or Frenchmen. Continual retirement, with the enemy in the north of France, very nearly took all the heart out of them, until the change came.

ACID STOMACHS ARE DANGEROUS

Common Sense Advice by a Distinguished Specialist.

"Acid" stomachs are dangerous because acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach, thus hindering and preventing the proper action of the stomach, and leading to probably nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble from which people suffer. Ordinary medicines and medicinal treatments are useless in such cases, for they leave the source of the trouble, the acid in the stomach, as dangerous as ever. The acid must be neutralized, and its formation prevented, and the best thing for this purpose is a teaspoonful of pulverized magnesia, a simple antacid, taken in a little warm or cold water after eating, which not only neutralizes the acid, but also prevents the fermentation from which acidity is developed. Foods which ordinarily cause distress may be eaten with impunity if this antacid is followed with a little pulverized magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist, and should always be kept handy.

Funeral of The Premier

Remains of Sir James Interred at Morrisburg—Impressive Service Held in Toronto—Placed in Family Vault

PROMINENT MEN PRESENT

MORRISBURG, Ont., Sept. 30.—In a little old-fashioned cemetery on a hillside fronting a stretch of the St. Lawrence river, the body of the late Ontario statesman was buried late yesterday afternoon and a whole countryside turned out to do him reverence. A fitful rainstorm which had threatened all day gathered as the burial proceeded, and at the moment when the mourners assembled about the grave, broke in a smart patter of drops. For ten minutes the congregation stood with bared heads as the last rites were read out. The body was then lowered into a vault in the Whitney family plot and the service was over.

There were not wanting instances during the day to show the regard which the province held for Sir James Whitney. At stations through which the special whirled on its way from Toronto to Morrisburg flags flew at half-mast, and at two or three of the larger towns small parties were permitted to view the remains. When the train reached Morrisburg the cortage proceeded at once to the little brownstone church erected within recent years by the Whitney family. Scores of people who had driven from the surrounding country formed long lines of approach and, marshalled by a detachment from the local militia, doffed hats and bowed heads as the procession approached. The service then proceeded in the interior of the church.

Then, with the assemblage kneeling, prayer was offered by Rural Dean Carson. Behind the bier as it was borne out through the portico and down the short road into the cemetery followed the immediate relatives of Sir James. Behind, walking two by two, came the Ontario Cabinet, and lengthening out in the rear, representatives of civil, legal and religious organizations, including a sprinkling of civil service officials who had come by train; Government representatives in the Legislature assembled almost to a man; members, coming from even the most northerly and westerly ridings to tender parting tokens of respect.

The Opposition in the House was represented by Mr. Rowell, Sam Clarke of Northumberland, D. Racine of Russell, and Hugh Munro of Glengarry.

The Federal Government sent the following Ministers: Hon. Messrs. W. T. White, Louis Cedorre, Martin Burrell, Robt. Rogers, Frank Cochrane, Thomas Crothers, A. E. Kemp and Speaker Sproule.

Amongst the Ontario men in the Federal House were Messrs. Lancaster, Murphy, Barker, Northrup, Thorburn, Ball, Broder and Cockshutt.

All the provincial commissions sent representatives.

TORONTO, Sept. 30.—The public funeral service over the body of the late Sir James Whitney in St. James' Cathedral here yesterday was strangely free of the formality and stiffness that often prevail on such occasions. It was more like a private service; more like a vast gathering of friends at a simple service.

At 9.30 o'clock the body of the dead Premier was borne up the aisle of the cathedral. Behind it walked Master P. H. Thompson, grandson of the dead knight, Garnet M. Whitney, E. C. Whitney, Edgar Whitney, Richard Wagner, members of the Ontario Cabinet; Sir Henry Pellatt, representing the Governor-General, Sir John Gibson and his son, and then members of the Provincial Legislature, the Dominion House and the Toronto City Council.

At the conclusion of the service Bishop Sweeny offered prayer and then the congregation stood while the organist played the Dead March in Saul.

The casket was carried to the doors followed by the honorary pallbearers: Hon. Dr. Pyne, Hon. Dr. Reaume, Hon. W. J. Hanna, Hon. Sir Adam Beck, Hon. Col. J. S. Hendrie, Hon. J. S. Duff, Hon. I. B. Lucas, Preston.

Then the procession formed and the remains of Ontario's dead Premier were taken to the special train which was to convey them to Morrisburg.

King Congratulates Loyal Family.

LONDON, Sept. 30. — Lord Stamfordham, secretary to the King, yesterday sent the following message to J. Benjamin of Forest Gate, who has four sons with the colors:

"My dear sir,—I am commanded by the King to congratulate you on having four sons serving his Majesty, of which you should be very proud. His Majesty wishes them to know that he thoroughly appreciates their loyalty, which they share with so many thousands of others of Jewish persuasion in the United Kingdom."

PARTING MESSAGE

Minister of Militia Bade Farewell to Canadian Forces and Reviewed What They Had Already Done

EVERY CONFIDENCE IN THEM

QUEBEC, Sept. 30. — The following is in part the farewell message issued in pamphlet form by Col. Sam Hughes to the Canadian contingent.

"WHERE DUTY LEADS.

"Fellow Soldiers:—

"Six weeks ago, when the call came to arms, inspired by that love of freedom from tyranny dominant in the British race; actuated by the knowledge that, under British constitutional responsible government you enjoyed the utmost of human liberty, you loyally and promptly responded in overwhelming numbers to that call.

"Twenty-two thousand men were accepted by the Motherland. To-day upwards of thirty-three thousand are en route to do duty on the historic fields of France, Belgium and Germany for the preservation of the British Empire and the rights and liberties of humanity.

"Lust of power, the subjugation of inoffensive and law-abiding neighbors; autocratic aggrandizement, have caused this war. In its cause the allies are guiltless.

"Belgium and Holland have long resisted Prussian ambition for ownership. Austria has desired extension towards the Euxine and Aegean Seas—dreams lust of conquest bringing ruin, rapine and misery in the train.

"It has been long predicted that when the Kiel Canal would be completed, Germany would begin the long-dreaded war. The Kiel Canal was completed early in July. War was begun before the end of that month. Germany was found absolutely ready and waiting. Great Britain Belgium and France were unready.

"Soldiers! The world regards you as a marvel. Within six weeks you were at your homes, peaceful Canadian citizens. Since then your training camp has been secured; three and a half miles of rifle ranges—twice as long as any other in the world—were constructed; fences were removed; water of the purest quality was laid in miles of pipes; drainage was perfected; electric light was installed, crops were harvested; roads and bridges were built; ordnance and army service corps buildings were erected; railway sidings were laid down; woods were cleared; sanitation was perfected, so that illness was practically unknown, and thirty-three thousand men were assembled from points, some of them upwards of 4,000 miles apart. You have been perfected in rifle shooting, and to-day are as fine a body—officers and men—as ever faced a foe.

"That you will render a splendid account of yourselves for King and country is certain. You come of the right breed — English, Scotch, Irish, French, Welsh, German and American — your courage and steadfastness are proverbial. In South Africa, your presence was a guarantee of success. So in this most righteous struggle on the part of Britain. When side by side with soldiers from the Motherland stand the free men from the dominions beyond the seas; when Australians, New Zealanders, South Africans, Hindus, Newfoundlanders tread the soil of Europe then will the Prussian autocracy realize the gigantic power of liberty. And amid it all you will not forget that you war not on the innocent and lovely people of Germany. Your aim is the overthrow of tyranny and aggrandisement.

"Every man among you is a free will volunteer. No one has been invited. No more typical army of free men ever marched to meet an enemy.

"That you will bear yourselves, individually and collectively wherever duty may call you, as to win the respect of the foe in the field; the admiration and regard of the good citizens of all lands in which your lot may be cast; and the love and regard of those near and dear at home, is the conviction of all Canadians.

"May success ever attend you and when you return rest assured a crowning triumph will await you.

"Sam Hughes, Colonel,
"Minister of Militia and Defence for Canada."

MAKING WORK FOR BUILDERS

Press Bureau Tells of the Work of the German Heavy Guns

LONDON, Sept. 29. — The Official Press Bureau today gave out a statement which says:

The following descriptive account which has been communicated by an eye-witness at present with the general headquarters, continues and supplements the narrative published yesterday of the movements of the British forces and of the French armies in immediate touch with it.

Wednesday, September 23, was a perfect autumn day. It passed without incident, as regards major operations. Although the enemy concentrated their heavy artillery upon the plateau near Passy, nothing more than inconvenience was caused.

Airman Was Wounded.

The welcome absence of wind gave our airmen a chance of which they took full advantage by gathering much information. Unfortunately one of our aviators, who had been particularly active in annoying the enemy by dropping bombs, was wounded in a duel in the air. Being alone on a single-seated monoplane, he was not able to use his rifles, and while circling above a German two-seated machine in an endeavour to get within pistol shot he was hit by the observer of the German machine, who was armed with a rifle. He managed to fly back over our lines, and by great good luck he descended close to a motor ambulance, which at once conveyed him to a hospital.

Against this may be set off the fact that another of our flyers exploded a bomb among some led artillery horses, killing several and stampeding the others.

Many Aeroplanes Aloft.

On Thursday, September 24, the fine weather continued as did the lull in the action, the heavy German shells falling mostly near Pargnan (12½ miles southeast of Laon.) On both Wednesday and Thursday the weather was so fine that many flights were made by the aviators, French, British and German. These produced a corresponding activity among the anti-aircraft guns. So still and clear was the atmosphere towards evening on Wednesday and during the whole of Thursday, that to those not especially on the lookout, the presence of aeroplanes high up above them was first made known by the bursting of the projectiles aimed at them. The puffs of smoke from the detonation shell hung in the air for minutes on end like balls of fleecy cotton wool before they slowly expanded and were dissipated.

Resembling a Siege.

From the places mentioned as being the chief target for the enemy's heavy howitzers, it will be seen that the Germans are now inclined to concentrate their foe systematically upon definite areas in which their aviators think they have located our guns, or upon villages, where it is imagined our troops may be billeted. The result will be to give work to local builders.

The growing resemblance of this battle to siege warfare, already has been pointed out. The act that the latter actions of the Russo-Japanese war assumed a similar character, was thought by many to have been made to exceptional causes, such as the narrowness of the theatre of operations between the Chinese frontier on the west and the mountainous country of northern Korea on the east; the lack of roads which limited the extent of ground over which it was possible for the rival armies to manoeuvre and the fact that both forces were tied to one line. Such factors are not exerting any influence on the present battle. Nevertheless, a similar situation has been produced.

BRITISH OFFICERS HAVE SHOWN GREAT BRAVERY TESTIMONY FROM MEN

LONDON, Sept. 29.— England was never more splendid than in this present world crisis. British officers and British men in that little expeditionary force fighting on French soil have won the admiration of the world. No more striking proof of their worth is afforded than the desperate efforts of the Germans to annihilate them. Regiments of long and great traditions have added more pages to their famous histories of hard-fought battles and heroic incidents.

In Canada in recent years we have had much prating of the degeneration of England. We have read columns of denunciation of the lords, the "effete aristocracy." Writers have exhausted themselves denouncing tenement evils, the position of the working class, the decadence of a people. The war proves that officers lead their men and sacrifice their lives as heroically as ever in the fight for the Empire; that men in the ranks are animated by the spirit that nothing can daunt; and that officers and men are linked together by a bond of courage which knows no class distinction.

As in South Africa, the casualty lists show an undue proportion of officers dead. They testify as nothing else can, to the indomitable pluck and cool, dare-devil fighting spirit of these men of the "upper classes" who walk coolly before a hail of bullets for the encouragement of their men. Here is a tribute from a Manchester "Tommy":

"Our officers are grand and they cheer our men by their laughter and jokes in the trenches. They are gluttons for work and are always in the thick of it, always cheerful, cool, and quick to see and seize any chance of delivering a punishing blow at any part of the enemy's lines."

The Utmost Gallantry.

The Times under the heading "Tributes to Officers," says: "There are frequent tributes in the stories told and the letters written by wounded soldiers home from the front to the gallantry and humanity of the officers in the firing line. A private of the King's Own Royal Lancaster Regiment, who has just left the Birmingham Hospital, says:

"The bravery of our officers could not have been excelled. They exposed themselves almost recklessly in encouraging our men. Luck seemed right against us. Colonel Dykes was knocked over in the first 10 minutes. Captain Higgins went about directing his men with his face torn and bleeding. Captain Nixon and Lieutenant Irvine, both of our company, showed the utmost gallantry, and both were wounded.

"I had two horses shot under me, and on the second occasion was scrambling over a trench into safety when I was shot in the thigh. I was unable to assist myself, and was open to the firing when the major of our division rushed out and saved me."

In the course of a letter home, Lance-Corporal J. Preston, 2nd Battalion Inniskillen Fusiliers, writes:

"I was lying wounded and sleeping on the field when an artillery major picked me up and took me to the artillery camp, and gave me in charge of the Medical Corps. Only for that I never would have seen England again."

THE HUNS IN TRAINING

American Physician Tells of Their Work in China

Dr. Louis Livingston Seaman, of New York, it will be remembered, cabled to New York from Antwerp an indignant protest against the bombardment of that city by Zeppelins. Dr. Seaman is a well-known figure in New York; he has figured conspicuously, for instance, in the work of the American Committee for the celebration of the Century of Peace. An English journalist had an interview with Dr. Seaman, part of which may be quoted.

The doctor (says the interview) is a typical product of the United States, with a hobby for rushing out to wars—officially when his country is engaged, unofficially otherwise. With means enough to pursue his hobby and with a surgical skill which makes him welcome in any hospital, he has seen every war of his generation "from the inside." He came to Antwerp instinctively, and the next day was tending the Zeppelin wounded and working to rouse the United States to a sense of the atrocities of German war methods.

"It is not exactly news to me," he said, "and I reckon it won't be exactly news to America that these Germans are war-mad barbarians. I have seen a good deal of them before this. The other day in Potsdam I saw proudly displayed the astronomical instruments which the Germans, under Von Waldersee, stole from Peking. That was a vandal trick against which our General Chaffee in China protested at the time. The German General sent his letter back to him without any reply.

"In that Boxer campaign (I was there), the Germans practiced on the Chinese the game they are playing now on the Belgians. Their army came when all the real fighting was over. By August 13 there was no more fight left in the Chinese than in so many jack rabbits. The Germans arrived November 20, and for want of any fighting began a policy of systematic murder. They'd send punitive expeditions all round the country, levying on each village they encountered a war tax. If the tax were not paid the village was fired, and the inhabitants fired upon. From accounts which came in to us the native population was in some cases almost exterminated. That was to give the German soldier his taste of blood, to fit him for the work he is doing now in Belgium, and might be doing in England if the luck had gone that way.

"I saw more of the Germans in their colony in East Africa in 1904. I was out there investigating sleeping sickness. The Germans had imposed a most oppressive hut tax on the natives, a tax which could only be paid by six months' forced labour each year; and the natives were stirred up by their priests to revolt. German atrocity in reprisal was something incredible. One incident. The priests or magic men, to encourage the natives, had told them that the German rifles shot out nothing but water, which would not harm them. Well, one day, before my very eyes, the Germans collected 200 of the chief men of a village, assembled all the rest of the inhabitants, including women and children, strung the men up to trees and then fired volleys into their hanging bodies. The firing went on until the bodies were riddled with holes."

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK

When Mixed With Sulphur It Brings Back Its Lustre and Abundance

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns grey and looks dry, wispy and scraggly, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay grey! Look young! Either prepare the tonic at home or get from any drug store a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully and removes dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair; besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the grey hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural colour is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

THE DAY OF ATONEMENT

In the Hebrew calendar to-day is the festival of Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. It began last night at sunset and concludes this evening. Known as the Great Day of God it is spent in prayer, fasting and meditation. The K. of P. hall is being used to-day by the Jewish residents of Peterborough, most of whom remain in prayer throughout the prescribed time. They meditate upon their sins, express their penitence in their prayers and look forward to living righteously during the coming year. Yom Kippur is one of the big festivals of the Jewish year, and extends back through the ages. Nothing is eaten throughout the entire day, but at the conclusion of the festival this evening the note of solemnity will give way to gladness and a feast will be enjoyed.

BELGIANS SHOT BY GERMAN NOVELIST WITH HEAVY HEART

Ruthless War Vividly Pictured by Paul Oscar Hoecker, Landwehr Captain

THE HORRIBLE HAPPENS WHEN YOUTH IS FOUND

Killed Before Mother Who Pleads on Her Knees For His Life

A letter written from the field by Paul Oskar Hocker, one of the leading German novelists, who is serving as a Captain of the Landwehr in Belgium, gives a vivid description of the searching and shooting of Belgian civilians at Hocker's own order, when they were found to be in possession of weapons. The letter, which appears in the Berliner Lokal-Anzeiger of August 27, reads as follows:

"Our assignment is heavy and grievous. We are not yet to get into the first line—we do not even know where the first line is—we are not yet to fight with honourable foes in the field. But we are to clear the territory of the Meuse of snipers. Each day shots are fired from cover upon our troops as they pass, especially upon small groups, couriers, cycle officers, and military motors. So at last it is a question of dealing sharply. A clear and energetic proclamation has warned the inhabitants of all Belgian territory so far occupied by us to deliver over to us all weapons, ammunition, and explosives in the next few hours.

"My men know what is expected of them. We do not wish to act like barbarians; but we must act with all vigour. I shall give the proprietor of every estate I search for arms a last chance to hand over to me the weapons he has concealed. If he declares that he has none, and if such are found in his place, he must be shot on the spot. Houses from which attacks are made, or in which opposition is encountered in our search, will be burned down immediately.

Literary Associations.

"Forward, with a heavy heart. On the right lies neutral territory, near Moresnet, in which Das Heirateslorf, the pretty novel by Nancy Lambrecht has its scene. On the right begins the road to Liege, on which snipers have caused much annoyance. Not far from Moresnet lie several country estates, Jungbusch, Hoof, and two other buildings. To these I sent my four officers, each with a search party, while I rode with the first division toward Jungbusch.

"A red, white and black flag waves from the linden tree in front of the house. No home in these parts is with out a German flag. Just as we open the gate a young fellow makes a break for the near-by woods. I give chase, but the white thorn bushes, high as a man's shoulders, make pursuit impossible.

"A woman appears in answer to our shout. Is she alone in the house Alone? No; she has a daughter of 15 years with her. No one else? Hesitatingly she adds, yes, her husband is at home, too. The guardsmen dart into the house and fetch him. The Lieutenant has the guns put in readiness; the civilians are forced to line up in front of the fence of the vegetable garden, and I warn the occupants of the house as earnestly as I can to deliver all the weapons they have in their home. The old man swears he never owned a weapon. His son, he says, has been away from home for several days. Did the son own a gun? All three raise their hands and swear, no, he was a peace loving fellow; never had a weapon in his hand. But many shots have been fired on troops from this neighbourhood. We must search the house from top to bottom.

Last Word of Warning

"'A last word of warning: You know, Monsieur, that every civilian who is still found in possession of weapons must be shot forthwith?' They answered: 'We have no weapons!'

"My men divided into groups and search cellar, living rooms, barn and stable, and ransack the garden and surrounding green for traces of fresh digging. The three there in front of my guardsmen with the appraised gun meet my gaze unflinchingly.

"'Who was that fellow who escaped just as we came in, Monsieur?' I ask. 'Have you, in this last moment, a confession to make to me?'

"The old man clasps his hands: 'No, Monsieur Officer, as a man of 72 years I swear to you—'

"And then the horrible happens. A guardsman and a Sergeant drag a young fellow out of the house. They have found him hiding in the straw on the ground floor. He had a Belgian gun in his hands, loaded with five cartridges.

"From the attic window he may have aimed that gun at many an honest German's heart or chest. The young fellow had been forced to raise his hands. He stands there trembling, pale as cheese.

"Who is this young fellow?" I ask the old man.

"All three have fallen upon their knees, as a thunderbolt might have struck them, and are raising loud lamentations. The woman screams:

"He is my son; For Gods sake, you do not mean to take his life?"

"And the fifteen-year-old girl is howling so that our hearts almost break with pity for her. The delinquent tries to break away, but is caught by our men.

"I am obliged perforce to bring up into my mind the picture of the poor Germans on patrol, riding out, true to duty, in the night, around whose heads the bullets of treacherous snipers whizzed; must perforce conjure up in my mind the bright eyes and handsome figures of our good German boys—in order to keep my nerve in the face of all this misery and lamentation and to obey strict orders.

"He will be shot. Three men, forward!"

The Shooting.

"And of the three guardsmen they are fathers of families, two Berliners and one countryman—not one of them blinks an eye. This cause is just. Here a scoundrel has been captured who deserves no pity. The salvo crashes out, the trembling body crumples together and moves no more. In the blue blouse three small holes are seen. The eyes are closed and the face has not changed expression. Death by our guns is painless. But on Belgian roads lie German soldiers shot by a boyish rabble of fellows like this highwayman; and these, as they crumpled up helpless, were cruelly mutilated.

"We ought to set fire to the joint over the old rascal's head, says one of my men.

"March on," I order sharply.

"The three still lie on their knees. The dead man lies against the wall.

"In the course of the day I search twenty-two country places belonging to the Weisshaus, Chapello, Hockebach, and Haut Vent farms. In nine houses the occupants hand over the weapons they had concealed till now. There are all sorts of weapons among them — pistols, double-barreled pistols, revolvers, hunting rifles, infantry guns and carbines.

"In the evening I reach Thimister, with my Company. Here the Mayor is waiting for me in the Market Place, together with the Cure and Vicar, to assure me that they have urgently warned the inhabitants. I take charge of the surrendered weapons in the Town Hall, in order to have them destroyed. A heavy day is ended."

ESCAPED FROM THE GERMANS.

Trooper Beak, of the 4th Dragoon Guards, writing home to his wife at Crewe, gives an exciting story of his escape from the Germans. After describing his journey from England he says:

"I went straight to the front in the firing line, and within two hours of being there had three horses shot under me. The last one was a Uhlan's, and that carried all the trouble. That went down when I was in the midst of them, and I got made prisoner along with Sergeant-Major H—— of ours. We did not like, we should ever see England again, as just before dusk on Wednesday afternoon they made us strip every mortal stitch of out bodies so that we could not escape. At that time they were being hard pressed by our troops. But in the middle of the night we made a cut for it, and got away. I have one consolation, and that is I killed two Uhlans and wounded [illegible] before they captured me, and Sergeant-Major H—— claims he [illegible] half-a-dozen. I broke my sword [illegible] in half when I was recovering from the second one I plugged [illegible] it, and I had to go into the [illegible] scramble with only about nine [illegible] and the hilt left."

Rural School Exhibition

Held at Westwood Last Week Was a Great Success

HASTINGS, SEPT. 29—The rural school exhibition, which was held in Westwood on Thursday last, was a great success from every point of view. The weather being ideal a large crowd gathered to do honour to the occasion and for the encouragement of all concerned. A large tent was erected, in which the exhibits from the twelve competing schools were tastefully displayed, also the beautiful silver cup, to be the property of the school taking the largest number of prizes for two years in succession. The large collection of cut flowers, mounted weeds and their seeds, family work and cooking displayed were proof that each school was putting forth strenuous efforts to surpass every other one, while the outdoors display of poultry and live stock would have done credit to a much more pretentious fair. While the ladies were doing their work the children engaged in races of various kinds much to the amusement of the large crowd of spectators, who showed a keen interest in the children's fun. Altogether the day was pleasantly spent and the parents and friends went to their homes well pleased with the success of the undertaking, and hoping for a repetition in the course of another year.

The Ladies' Aid of the Methodist Church met on Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Cruikshank, when the officers were elected for the ensuing year, viz.,

MINISTERS IN SESSION

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Sept. 30.—To-day at noon the official ceremony of swearing in the new lieutenant-governor, or the selection of a person to succeed Sir James Whitney, has not yet become an accomplished fact. A meeting of ministers was called at 10:30 a.m. With the exception of Hon. J. S. Hendrie, the newly appointed lieutenant-governor, and Hon. J. J. Foy, who is still ill, it was fully attended. The outcome of that meeting is still uncertain and though it was comparatively brief it is whispered that the ministers were unable to arrive at an understanding among themselves as to just which one would be called upon to form a new cabinet.

Second Night of Neptune's Daughter

Good Audience Enjoyed the Pictures at Opera House Last Night

At the Opera House last night a good house saw Neptune's Daughter, in which the leading part is taken by Annette Kellerman, the world's champion lady swimmer. As a scenic production, the picture is much in advance of anything that has been attempted previously, and an entertaining tale dealing with mortals and immortals is depicted in an exceedingly adequate manner. The feats of Annette Kellerman as a mermaid are decidedly entertaining, and proved so to the audience last night. The delightful fairy tale is well acted and splendidly staged, and is pleasing a large number of local people.

City To Operate As Well As Own Electric Plant

To-morrow the management of the local Light and Power Company system, which for the past few days has been the property of the City, will be taken over by the City's staff. Everything is in readiness for the change. A complete staff has been engaged and is now at work in the recently fitted offices on Simcoe Street. From to-morrow all customers will be charged by the City for electricity used, complaints or services should be made to the Utilities Office, and all other matters connected with the supply of electricity should be arranged with the City officials.

As previously announced the new rates will not come into effect for a short time yet as before the electricity can be charged according to the new figures, meters will have to be installed in the large number of houses being served that have at present no meters. This work will be gone ahead with as rapidly as possible.

CANADIAN GERMANS ARE LOYAL

Special Wire to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Sept 30 — W. Weichel, Conservative member for North Waterloo, who is in the Capital to-day, says that there is absolutely no justification for the statements made in other parts of the Dominion, reflecting upon the German-Canadians who are in the majority in his constituency. The contributions to the Patriotic Fund in the City of Berlin, he says, will reach $75,000, which in proportion to its population, is more than was subscribed in Toronto. Mr. Weichel states that the proposal to organize a new militia regiment in Berlin is being pushed with enthusiasm. The first night the lists were opened two hundred volunteered

RUNAWAY ON GEORGE STREET

Last evening, at 6 o'clock, citizens were furnished a little excitement owing to a runaway on George street which threatened to do considerable damage to life and property. The horse of the Dominion Express Office took fright, at the corner of George and Hunter Streets, and dashed down George Street, swerving to the left side of the street and narrowly escaping a collision with a northbound auto, the animal headed for the plate-glass window in Mr. Alex. Gibson's jewellery store. A post, however, intervened and the outfit came to a sudden stop. The shafts of the delivery rig were broken but no other damage was done.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

WHO WILL BE MACK'S THIRD TWIRLER IN THE WORLD'S SERIES?

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—Who will be Connie Mack's third pitcher in the world series? Whom will he select from among Bush, Pennock, Shawkey and Wycoff to aid Bender and Plank in repulsing the enemy?

It's a big question, and one no doubt, that is causing the wily leader of the Athletics much thought. Penock, Shawkey and Wycoff have made great records this year during the regular season. But what will they do under world series fire? Bush grabbed off the third game of the 1913 world series, but can he repeat this year?

Of course, Bender and Plank will do the bulk of the hurling for the Macmen. This pair will work in the first two games. But who is to go up against the enemy on the third day? Upon whose shoulders is to rest the pitching burden of the crucial third battle?

Last year Mack chose Bush for that third game. And Bush delivered, making the count Athletics 2, Giants 1. Had Bush lost there might have been a different ending to that series, for that third game, had the Giants won it, would have given them the "edge."

Bush was lauded in all sections of the land for winning that game last year, yet, had not the Athletics given him a five run lead in the first two innings, a different story might have been told. Bush, even after the Athletics scored three runs in their half of the first inning, was extremely nervous. He wobbled badly. For a time during the first inning and even during the second, when the Athletics had added two more runs to their lead, Bush looked as though he might do a balloon stunt. However, wonderful fielding behind him saved him during those first two innings.

Mack may pitch Bush again this year, figuring that having been under world series fire ance, he wouldn't be as nervous as one of the other pitchers. But it doesn't seem likely that Mack will pitch Bush in that third game. The youngster hasn't been going as well this year as he did last. Some of Connie's other youngsters have come through with better percentage than Bush, and Mack may make his selection from Pennock, Shawkey or Wyoff. But which shall it be?

Last year Mack used Bender, the greatest "money" pitcher in baseball, in his first game. No doubt, he will repeat with Bender in the initial performance this year. If New York wins the pennant, Mathewson, most likely will oppose the wonderful Indian. If the Braves are the Mackmen opponents, Stallings probably will use Rudolph.

In the second game Mack will pitch Plank. If the Giants win Tesreau will oppose the Athletics veteran, while James will do the hurling should the Boston Braves represent the National League.

For the third game, Stallings would have Tyler, the great southpaw, who has been one of the big factors in the whirlwind race made by the Braves. The Giants would have Marquard and Demaree, both reasoned pitchers, both world series veterans. But in this game Mack would be at a seeming disadvantage. He would be forced to use one of his kids.

It would seem that pitchers like Wycoff, Pennock and Shawkey, who have beaten the best teams in the American League with ease, and who have come through the season with a bulky winning percentage, ought to make a similar showing in a world series duel. The American League teams seem to rank superior to those in the National. Why then, shouldn't a young pitcher be even more successful against a National League team?

The answer is that there's a lot of difference between a regular ball game and a world series affair. So much is at stake in such a game. The excitement is intense. The crowds, with their bellowing cheers, tend to frighten a young pitcher who is making his first appearance in such a series. Unless his temperment is such that he can be cool and steady under all circumstances, he is liable to "crack"—liable to "explode" at a critical moment.

Some may take the position that the Braves' twirlers—Rudolph, James and Tyler—never have been under world series fire, and they are just as liable to crack as are the Athletic youngsters. It's true the Boston trio hasn't mingled in a world series, but they've been through some games during the past six weeks that have been as trying as those of the world series.

Every one of the games in which the Boston trio has figured since the Braves started their sprint, has been as crucial, in their minds, as a world series game. There was in each game a nervous tension, an excitement and a strain that is equal to that which they will face in a world series game. Every game meant almost as much to them as a world series victory. It meant their chance to get in the world series. A bit of wobbly pitching here and there and their pennant hopes would have vanished.

But that great Boston trio stood up under the test. Day after day they battled the enemy, and day after day they pitched wonderful games. They had no chubby team behind them, they couldn't afford to "spot" the opposition two or three runs a game during the early part of their spurt. They had to pitch shut-out ball to win many of their games. And they pitched shut-out ball.

During a world series, a pitcher is called upon only twice or three times at the most. James, Tyler and Rudolph have been called upon a dozen times each during the last two months. And they have delivered. What they would face in a world series would be a greater test on their nerves than that they have been facing for two months. So, although they never have engaged in a world series battle, they have had sufficient experience in gruelling battles during the last two months to fit them for what they would have to face in a world series.

FRENCH COLONIAL TROOPS DISTINGUISHED THEMSELVES

PARIS, Sept. 29.—The infantry bore the brunt of the incessant fighting on the western end of the line in yesterday's battle, but the artillery of both armies continued throughout twenty-four hours to bombard each other's positions. Hand to hand combats occurred at many points and bayonets were used freely.

The French colonial infantry, most of whose men wear medals for bravery displayed in colonial campaigns, was to the fore, and beside these men fought the black Senegalese troops, while further along the line the British troops held an important point with the greatest determination.

The French troops showed more than their accustomed dash in attack, and everywhere acts of wonderful courage were performed. The cavalry also participated in the engagement at many points, the Allies' horses having enjoyed a long rest, which enabled this arm of the service to distinguish itself. The famous Scots Greys, finding that the colour of their horses offered a prominent mark for the German riflemen, had dyed their mounts brown.

At Nubecourt, home of the parents of President Poincare, the Germans broke open the Poincare family vault, it is reported, and buried a number of their dead there. The Germans placarded the town of Valenciennes, demanding from the Mayors of neighbouring communes [illegible] of the available supplies of clothing and food.

Another prominent French officer, General Marquet, has met death on the field.

A French lieutenant, M. Verlin, is the hero of the day as the result of an affair in which he was the main figure yesterday. The lieutenant and fifty men of his company were reconnoitering ten miles in advance of the main body on the Oise River, when they encountered 5,000 Germans. The Frenchmen took refuge in nearby woods and from this shelter fired volleys until only thirteen of their detachment remained alive, and of these four were wounded. The party then crept away. The Germans hesitated to attack the woods for fear of a trap.

HIGHLAND HEROES IN PARIS

PARIS, Sept. 28.—Occasionally as you move about the City you come upon scenes that rejoice the heart of a Britisher. I witnessed one such today, says a "Scotsman" and "Daily Telegraph" correspondent. In Paris, as in all France, the British soldier is a hero, and by now he has ceased to be a novelty. Ever and anon just now in Paris you seem to encounter a stray soldier or two in khaki. On one of the main boulevards this morning I saw three. All of them, as it happened, belonged to Scottish regiments. Two were in "trews," and the third wore the kilt. Everybody on the boulevard turned round to look at them.

I had scarcely opened conversation with them when I observed that between the three of them they could not have produced one regimental badge. All had been parted with as souvenirs to an admiring populace. Their glengarries were bare of badges and so were their shoulder straps. One of the men in tartan "trews" had surrendered the ribbons of his bonnet.

But the most interesting figure of the trio was he in the kilt. Not even his kilt had the souvenir-hunters spared. He gently turned up the outer fold of it, and showed me how he had been cajoled into parting in "swatches" with quite a large portion of the underwool section of it. And even as I spoke, a lady demanded and obtained a button from the tunic of one of his comrades. Truly hero-worship has manifold ways of expressing itself.

But these men were quite happy and cheery. So far as I could gather, they of the "trews" had belonged to a party that had "taken the wrong turning," as it were and had strayed into Paris. The veteran in the kilt, who told me he enlisted in 1897 and had been called up as a reservist, had had a different experience. Great is to his chagrin, he had seen no fighting. On the fourth he had come by an accident to his hand, which had necessitated his being sent to hospital. He was now going to the front, and was delighted at the prospect.

BOMBARDMENT ABATES

ANTWERP, September 30.—In an official statement issued at 4 o'clock this afternoon the Belgian war office announced that the German long range bombardment of the outer chain of forts of the Antwerp fortifications has abated. It is stated that for several hours the Germans concentrated the fire of their long range big guns on the forts Waelhem and Wavre in an endeavour to silence them. The Belgian forts replied so vigorously that they succeeded in dismounting two of the German guns and the bombardment suddenly stopped. It is not expected that it will be resumed until the arrival of the long range mortars that are now being brought up from the south.

PARIS, September 30.—Widely conflicting reports concerning the situation at the front are current to-day. Rumours in a number of papers tell of the breaking of the German right wing, but the military authorities have no confirmation of this report. They frankly say that fighting of the most severe character continues but while the French left is pushing steadily forward and the reinforced army of General D'Amade continues its pressure on the "hooked" end of the German position, which extends north and south from the Oise and the Aisne triangle, the German resistance is strongly maintained. There is no doubt that a break in the German line is expected. For the last three days reinforcements have been poured to the north. The latest line of battle obtainable, made public yesterday afternoon, shows that there has been but little change in the positions since last Friday.

FALL OF KIAU CHU IMMINENT.

PEKIN, Sept. 30—The Japanese Legation here to-day declared that the fall of the entire German fortified positions at Kiau Chau is imminent, meanwhile the bombardment by land and sea continues.

The heavy guns of the warships have silenced two of the harbour forts, thanks to the accurate work of the Japanese aviators who have signalled the range from their hydroplanes. It is believed that the German warships in the harbour will attempt to run the blockade and the Allied squadrons are waiting for them.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 30.—The German army, heavily reinforced, is battling to-day with the Russian army of General Rennenkampf, in the territory between the Niemen river and the East Prussian frontier. The fighting is especially desperate in the vicinity of Osowetz, Druskeniki, and Augustowo. The objective of the Germans is the Northern outlet to the forest in that section and they are anxious to get across the Niemen river and retake Grodno, from which they were driven. It is stated that the Russians have made material gains all along the line, although the battle is still far from a decisive stage.

ANTWERP IS READY.

ANTWERP, Sept. 30.—It is not believed that it will be possible for the Germans to take Antwerp now-under siege. The fortifications have been placed in condition so withstand its all points. In addition there have been new rapid-fire guns mounted at points of vantage and the dykes have been opened flooding the lowlands. Reports from Ghent say that conditions there are serious because of the enormous number of refugees who have flocked to the city. The problem of feeding these refugees is a serious one.

SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—Ashmead Bartlett, telegraphing to the Daily Telegraph from France, says:

"It is difficult to see how the armies can keep up the struggle much longer, and unless one side soon succeeds in obtaining a decisive success we shall see a kind of stalemate result all along the Franco-Belgian frontier. Then a decisive victory can only be won by the side which is able to bring into the field absolutely fresh corps, which have not felt the war and are free from the strain of two months' continuous fighting and marching.

"Apart from the Russian advance on Berlin, which cannot be much longer delayed, fresh corps which at this juncture are so absolutely necessary to provide the great driving wedge to pierce some vulnerable part of the enemy's line, can only be provided by England and the British Empire. The effect of the arrival of 100,000 absolutely fresh troops on the field of battle at this critical juncture would prove decisive.

"Recent letters sent out from Berlin to Washington show how desperate the enemy knows its position to be. Already the Kaiser would be ready to call the war a draw, apparently entirely overlooking the little account which must be settled over the injuries and wrongs and inflicted on Belgium and on the villages of France, not to mention Louvain and the destruction of the Cathedral at Rheims. The enemy is already well beat

THE GORDON'S LOSSES.

A vivid account of one bit of the fighting at Mons is contained in a letter which has been received at Chepstow from a Gordon Highlander named Smiley, who is now in hospital at Cosham, near Portsmouth.

"On Tuesday the Gordons occupied an advanced position and moved out in the afternoon to attack some German infantry who had got within 80 yards of us. A few rounds soon gave them cold feet and they retired. As we were returning through a turnip field I twisted my ankle. The 119th Battery R.F.A. gave me a lift on their guns, and I'm d—— if they didn't go into action 10 minutes after with me. I was the reverse of cheerful, but I made the best of it. By now I had lost my regiment. I stood at the Mairie at Cambrai until I saw the Royal Scots Fusiliers and joined them. I dined and breakfasted on a cigarette and went into the fearful slaughter at Cambrai with them. About 2 p.m.-3 p.m. we retired, and, after marching all night, I found the Gordons. One hundred and seventy men were all that answered their names that day. They had had an awful day and night of it, and the odd men were either killed, wounded or missing. God help them! The finest regiment a man could see."

Sweet Corn Omelet.

Cut the kernels from three or four ears of corn. Add to these a tablespoonful of sugar mixed with two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch. To two beaten eggs, add a teacup of milk, then stir with the corn. Season with salt and pepper. Have ready a very hot frying pan into which put butter the size of an egg. When this is melted, pour in the corn mixture. When it is brown on the under side reduce the heat so that the inside may cook slowly until it is done. This will take about fifteen minutes. Then fold and serve on a platter.

Chinese Destroy Bridge.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—What is feared may be the forerunner of trouble between China and Japan developed yesterday when Chinese troops blew up a railway bridge at Taytuhe, six miles from Weihsien on the Shantung Peninsula, where the Japanese forces are operating. It is said the action was taken because of a plan by the Japanese to seize all railway stations west of Weihsien.

The Japanese fleet yesterday bombarded Tsingtau for hours. Troops attacked Germans by land simultaneously and forced the defenders of the city to evacuate all their outer [illegible]

CITIZENS MAY REVOLT.

If Brussels People Rise Germans Will Set Torch to City.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—Chafing under the intentional provocations of Germans, the residents of Brussels are growing hourly more surly, according to a courier who reached London yesterday from the Belgian capital, which place he left Tuesday morning. He reports that there have been several riots, and although the Germans threatened to shoot the ringleaders, they refrained from doing so after deliberation. However, the Belgians give ample evidence that sooner or later they will rise up in arms against the overbearing enemy in their midst, and it is the hope of the Germans, according to the courier, that they will riot on a large scale, for that would give the enemy a longed-for reason for setting a torch to the city.

Despite the spirit of braggadocio, so the courier says, the Germans show uneasiness over the big battle on the Aisne. It is believed in Brussels that the Germans really intend making no great move against Antwerp, although the siege guns are now battering away at some of the surrounding forts. The courier asserted that the movements in the direction of Antwerp were looked on more in the nature of engaging the main Belgian forces to keep them from joining the allies at this juncture. Fully two thousand Austrians, with heavy artillery, passed through Brussels a few days ago, it was said by the courier. They were on their way to join the German right wing. British papers are selling in Brussels for 25 francs, and the Germans are doing everything to prevent their importation.

DR. REAUME IS THROUGH

WHO WILL BE PREMIER?

TORONTO, Oct. 1.—Hon. Dr. Reaume handed in to the Ontario Government yesterday his resignation as Minister of Public Works for the province. His official duties cease at once and the portfolio left to be filled in the Cabinet reorganization. Dr. Reaume leaves the political arena altogether and probably will resume his practice in Essex.

The reception of his tendered resignation by Acting Premier Pyne and the Cabinet was not altogether unexpected. It was believed that he would vacate his position towards the end of the month. According to his statement last evening, he considered it an opportune moment to drop out, when the Cabinet was making a shift in membership.

Dr. Reaume was first elected to the Legislature in the 1902 general election. He was again returned in 1905, and in the same year was appointed Minister of Public Works by the Whitney Administration. On Feb. 21, in 1905, he carried a bye-election by acclamation, and was elected in 1908 and 1911, but was defeated last June. It is understood that he was pressed by the Premier to retain office until the situation cleared somewhat, and so remained for the last three months.

In well-informed Conservative circles it was stated last night that Hon. W. H. Hearst will be the new Premier. Mr. Hearst declined to discuss any aspect of the situation, and Dr. Pyne was more than usually reticent. Dr. Reaume's retirement from political life was made known after he had left the Council Chamber for home.

Dr. Roche To Retire?

OTTAWA, Oct. 1.—While there is a belief in some quarters that Hon. Dr. Roche will shortly retire, there are also those in Governmental circles who are convinced that the Minister of the Interior will retain his portfolio until the end of the present Parliament. It is stated that the Premier is averse to changes in the Cabinet until after the next election.

Hon. Louis Coderre may go to the King's Court Bench, Montreal, where there will shortly be a vacancy.

British Warships Told Russians.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1. — Captain R. Goetsche, in command of the Danish steamer United States, in yesterday from Christiansand said that he had picked up a wireless in the North Sea containing the information that 30 British warships were on their way through the Skagerrak to help the Russian fleet in the Baltic Sea.

Two Corps Stay in Canada.

KINGSTON, Oct. 1.—No. 3 Company, Army Service Corps, in command of Major W. J. Mitchell of Kingston, will not go to the front with the Canadian overseas contingent. No. 3 Company and No. 5 Company of Montreal will be kept in Canada for home service.

NEW ARMY FOR BRESLAU

PETROGRAD, Oct. 1.—The army under Gen. Rennenkampf has advanced along the railway from Grodno to Augustow and is now moving on Suwalki, where the Kaiser has his headquarters. In the fighting between Grodno and Druskeniki the Germans, under Gen. Von Hindenberg, were driven from strongly intrenched positions.

Three great Russian armies are now operating against the Germans and Austrians, in addition with the two minor forces which mark the extreme north and south of the Russian battle lines.

Gen. Rennenkampf is repulsing the Germans' attempted invasion north of Poland into the Province of Grodno and Vilna.

Heading southwest from Warsaw a new army of fresh troops is pushing in the direction of Breslau, with its

The Russian forces on the extreme left wing have penetrated the Carpathians at three points, and are now on the plains of Hungary, within 120 miles of Budapest. The three defiles in the mountain ranges, through which they are pouring are Dukla Pass, Sanok Pass and Usock Pass. Through two of them run railways, which the Russians now control, to points in the southern foothills.

The fighting along the East Prussian frontier, in which the Russians have been successful in extending their front 99 miles, has resulted in the repulse of all the German attempts to force a passage of the River Niemen. This statement is contained in a despatch from the Petrograd correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co.

Carranza Will Obey Ruling.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—Gen. Carranza, first chief of the Mexican revolution, and his followers in Mexico City, will retire if the conference today advises it. In a lengthy statement last night by the Mexican Embassy here, it is set forth that peace overtures are under way between Carranza and Villa, and that railroad and telegraphic communication between the capital and Vera Cruz has been restored.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who Had It

In the spring of 1895 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvellous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write today.

THE RUSSIAN CAMPAIGN: COSSACKS IN GALICIA.—Cossacks passing through a Galician village. National school in the background. The Cossack is altogether unique, his ways are his own and his confidence in his officers and himself is perfect; his love for horses make his work a pleasure. He is probably what the Kaiser wishes his Uhlans were. The Cossack seat is high with knee almost vertical and heel drawn back, spurs not being worn. A remarkable thing is that he has no sword guard. The Russian soldier wears no buttons; he says they are a nuisance, have to be cleaned, wear away the cloth, are heavy and attract the enemy's attention.

Circus Owner Fought Beside Belgian King--Had Delirious Experience When War Broke Out

NEW YORK, Aug. 29. — Daniel Wallace, who believes he is the first actual participant in the defence of Liege and Namur to reach New York city, hobbled into the Herald office yesterday morning on a crutch, penniless, hungry, and still a good many hundreds of miles from his home in Tucson, Ariz.

With him he brought a harrowing tale of the vicissitudes he encountered when the war storm broke and nipped him and his circus performing American brethren in Cologne. It ranged all the way from having a small fortune in circus properties taken away from him and his partner in that enterprise to fighting in the trenches near Namur beside King Albert, of Belgium, who, Wallace declared, sought to encourage his men by lying down with them in the trenches and fighting as an infantryman against the terrible and swift onslaught of the Germans.

"We showed in Paris and many other French cities and towns," he said, "and were doing splendidly when the war talk began. On the day war was declared between France and Germany I had left the show at Cologne and gone to Berlin to arrange engagements in other parts of Germany. But when I got back to the show grounds just outside of Cologne you can believe I was a surprised person.

"My partner was 'Jack' Frazier. I'm almost afraid to think now where he and the other Americans who went over with the show may be, for the Lord knows what happened to them if they were up against it as hard as I was.

"But when I reached the show ground in Cologne they were doing service, as were our horses, for the German army, and I was told to beat it when I demanded to know by what right American property had been taken. Then they laughed at me and told me if I didn't get out of there they would kick me out.

"I appealed to the American Consul, and he managed to get for me a receipt from the army commander for 2,000 marks. I took it to the Chief of Police at Berlin. He read, tore it up, and then laughed at me. I was arrested as a spy for my trouble, but after I had been in jail for eight hours L. Miles Bouton, the Associated Press correspondent in Berlin, vouched for me and I was released.

Offer Mule Transport.

"Under the importunities of the United States Consul, however, the police chief promised he would give me transportation out of Germany. He did. One of his men turned up with a spavined mule, which had a game leg and as many other troubles as any one mule could have. On the mule I begged my way into Belgium and joined the Belgian soldiers in the trenches. I was on the firing line before Liege and again at Mons I think for about a week and a half all told.

"Six miles east of Namur I saw King Albert. He worked so hard that he did not have time to shave, and when a Belgian soldier pointed to him the King had at least a four days' growth of beard on his face. He laid down in the trenches and fought, and I saw him throw away one rifle when his ammunition was gone, walk over to a dead Belgian fighter and take the discarded rifle and ammunition pouch."

100,000 Recruits At Aldershot Most of Whom Were Clerks

ALDERSHOT, Sept. 30.— Lieutenant-General Sir Archibald Hunter is in charge of 100,000 Aldershot "rookies," nine-tenths of whom never handled a gun. When this army goes to the Continent, if it does go, he will doubtless be in command of it.

In ordinary times of peace 30,000 men are as big a force as the barracks at Aldershot are strained to accommodate. Now most of the army is living in "bell tents," although long rows of wooden huts are already under construction and will be completed before this army or any part of it leaves Aldershot, and then if the war lasts at least 100,00 more men will take its place.

The camps at Aldershot spread over the plains throughout an area at least five miles square. Almost every branch of service is represented. Even the Aviation Corps has its planes and [illegible] service at [illegible]

19th Day of Big Battle

Finds Allies Pressing Vigorously on East and West Ends—Last Stage in Sight

WHOLE LINE MUST RETIRE

FROM THE BATTLEFRONT, Oct. 1.—This was the nineteenth day of continued hard fighting along the 150-mile front from the Somme to the Moselle, and yet there is no definite indication that the historic battle is nearing a finish. There are, however, evidences that the Germans are receding before a forcible and sustained pushing from the allied armies, especially on their western and eastern wings, while in the centre, where the Germans are more strongly entrenched than at any other point with heavy artillery, remains almost stationary.

It is generally concluded by French military men that some important move must soon be made by the Germans, who have found it impossible to stem the advance of the allies, though they opposed the sternest and most desperate resistance, sacrificing thousands of men daily.

The German wings appear as though folding back on the centre, leaving the sole loophole for a backward movement by way of Rethel.

The Germans' main supply base at Juniville, which is protected by heavy masses of troops, as it is absolutely essential that this place shall be held for the revictualling of the German armies in northeastern France, appears to be placed in a somewhat precarious situation, with its single line of railroad.

The line of battle has changed considerably since the beginning of the actual contact between the two great armies, whose numbers and real positions it is not permitted to make public. The front now presents sinuous windings, looping inward and outward at various points in a country which everywhere is wonderfully adapted to defence.

The allied commanders are husbanding their men's lives to the greatest possible extent by keeping them from frontal attacks on positions where the Germans are in advantageous situations, but whenever the plan of campaign necessitates direct attacks, the French and British soldiers go forward cheerfully with the utmost confidence in their leaders.

Official Bulletins.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—The following official communication was issued last night:

"The general situation is satisfactory. There has been no change of any account on the front except to the south of the Woevre, where we have occupied Seicheprey and advanced as far as the slopes to Rupt de Mad."

"First, on our left wing, north of the Somme, the action continues to develop more and more toward the north. Between the Oise and the Aisne the enemy has delivered a vigorous attack on Tracy-le-Mont, northeast of the forest of Aigle. They were repulsed with heavy losses.

"Second, on the centre there is relative calm along the entire front, which extends from Rheims to the Meuse. Between the Argonne and the Meuse we have made slight progress.

"In the Woevre district there have been severe battles. Our troops have advanced at several points, notably to the east of St. Mihiel, a town east of Triancourt and southeast of Verdun. (East of St. Mihiel would be just across the French border from Metz.)

"Third, on our right wing, in Lorraine and the Vosges, there has been no change."

Must Assume Another Defensive.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—The nineteenth day of the battle of the Aisne finds the allied armies pushing with all the strength they can bring to bear in their great effort to outflank the German right wing and force it back from its line of communication through Belgium.

There is evidence that this movement is beginning to tell, and unless something unforeseen [illegible] portion [illegible]

SCOUT WOULDN'T TELL.

French Lad's German Captors Promptly Shot Him.

LONDON, Oct. 1. — German tales of tragic episodes of the war were issued by the Official Press Bureau last night. The stories were taken from a book called "Krieg's Chronik," which was seized from aliens entering British ports. The book consists, according to the bureau, "partly of a highly untrustworthy chronicle of the war, and partly of soldiers' letters from the front."

"As showing the methods of thought of the enemy these last have considerable value," continues the bureau. "It is not the truth or falsity of the tales that matters, but the applause and self-congratulations of the writers on deeds of gross treachery and cruelty claimed to have been done by themselves or comrades."

"A traitor has just been shot. He was a little French lad belonging to one of the gymnastic societies which wear the tri-colored ribbons, a poor young fellow who, in his infatuation, wanted to be a hero.

"As the German column was passing along a wooded defile he was caught and asked whether the French were about. He refused to give any information. Fifty yards farther there was firing from cover of the wood. The prisoner was asked in French if he had known that the enemy was in the forest, and he did not deny it.

"He went with a firm step to a telegraph pole and stood against it with a green vineyard at his back and received the volley of a firing party with a proud smile on his face. Infatuated wretch! It was a pity to see such wasted courage."

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

The birds made a peculiar feature of this weird, uncanny life. Long of leg, wattled and web-footed, with ungainly bodies, sparsely feathered, and bare necks, they were, Stern thought, absolutely the most hideous and unreal-appearing creatures he had ever seen. In size they somewhat resembled an albatross. The folk called them kalamakee. They were so fully domesticated as to make free with all the refuse of the village and even to waddle into the huts in croaking search of [illegible], yet they nested among the [illegible] alone the cliff to northward of the place.

There they built clumsy structures of weed for their eggs and their incredibly ugly young. Every day at a certain time they took their flight out into the fog, with hoarse and mournful cries, and stayed the equivalent of somethree hours.

Their number Stern could only estimate, but it must have mounted well toward five or six thousand. One of the most singular sights the newcomers had in the Abyss was the homecoming of the flight, the feeding of the young by disgorging half-digested fish—and the subsequent noisy powwow of the waddling multitude. All this, heard and seen by torch-light, produced a picture weirdly fascinating.

Fish, weeds, sea-fowl—these constituted the sum total of food sources for the Folk. There existed neither bread, flesh-meat, milk, fruit, sweets, or any of the abundant vegetables of the surface. Nor yet was there any plant which might be dried and smoked, like tobacco, nor any whence alcohol might be distilled. The Folk had neither stimulants nor narcotics.

Stern blessed fate for this. If any such had existed, he knew human nature well enough to feel certain that, there in the eternal gloom and fog, the race would soon have given itself over to excesses and have miserably perished.

"To my mind," he said to Beatrice, one time, "the survival of our race under such conditions is one of the most marvellous things possibly to be conceived." Out toward the black and mist-hidden sea that rolled forever in the gloom he gestured from the wall where they were standing.

"Imagine!" he continued. "No sunlight — for centuries! Without that, nothing containing chlorophyl can grow, and science has always maintained that human life must depend, at last analysis, on chlorophyl, on the green plants containing it. No grains, no soil, or agriculture, no mammals even! Why, the very Eskimo have to depend on mammals for their life!

"But these people here, and the Lanskmarn, and whatever other unknown tribes like in this vast Abyss, have to get their entire living from this tepid sea. They don't even possess wood to work with! If this doesn't prove the human race all but godlike in its skill and courage and adaptability, what does?"

She stood a while in thought, plainly much troubled. It was evident her mind was far from following his analysis. At last she spoke.

"Allan!" she suddenly exclaimed.

"Well?"

"It's still out there somewhere, isn't it? Out there, in those black unsounded depths—the biplane?"

"You mean—"

"Why couldn't we raise it again, and—"

"Of course! You know I mean to try as soon as I have these people under some control so I can get them to cooperate with me—get them to understand!"

"Not till then? No escape till then? But, Allan, it may be too late!" she burst out with passionate eagerness.

Puzzled, he turned and peered at her in the bluish gloom.

"Escape?" he queried. "Too late? Why, what do you mean? Escape from what? You mean that we should leave these people, here, before we've even begun to teach them? Before we've discovered some way out of the Abyss for them? Leave everything that means the regeneration of the human race, the world? Why—"

A touch upon his arm interrupted him.

He turned quickly to find the patriarch standing at his side. Silent and dim through the fog, he had come thither with sandaled feet, and now stood with a strange, inscrutable smile on his long-bearded lips.

"What keeps my children here," asked he, "when already it is long past the sleeping-hour? Verily, this should not be! Come," he commanded. "Come away! To-morrow will be time for speech."

And, giving them no further opportunity to talk of this new problem, he spoke of other matters, and so led them back to his hospitable hut of stone.

But for a long time Allan could not sleep. Weird thoughts and new suspicions now aroused, he lay and pondered many things.

What if, after all, this seeming friendliness and homage of the savage Folk were but a mask?

A vision of the boiling geyser-pit rose to his memory. And the dreams he dreamed that night were filled with strange, confused, disquieting images.

CHAPTER XXXII.
PREPARATIONS.

He woke to hear a drumming roar that seemed to fill the spaces of the Abyss with a wild tumult such as he had never known—a steady thunder, wonderful and wild.

Starting up, he saw by the dim light that the patriarch was sitting there upon the stone, thoughtful and calm, apparently giving no heed to this singular tumult. But Stern, not understanding, put a hasty question.

"What's all this uproar, father? I never heard anything like that up in the surface-world!"

"That? Only the rain, my son," the old man answered. "Had you no rain there? Verily, traditions tell of rain among the people of that day!"

"Rain? Merciful Heavens!" exclaimed the engineer. Two minutes later he was at the fortifications, gazing out across the beach at the sea.

It would be hard to describe accurately the picture that met his eyes. The heaviest cloudburst that ever devastated a countryside was but a trickle compared with this monstrous, terrifying deluge.

Some five [illegible] miles of dense and saturated vapors, suddenly condensing, precipitating the water in great solid masses, not in drops, but in thunderous [illegible] flowing, crashing as it struck the sea, which, churned to a raging froth, flung [illegible] army because the [illegible] against the massive [illegible] service are short.

It is also true that the [illegible] in its Swiss army is absurdly small [illegible] blowing its size and efficiency. [illegible] was capita cost of the Swiss army in Stern was $2.25. The American annual [illegible] penditure per capita is about $1.[illegible] course this large per capita cost [illegible] Swiss army is due to the fact that Switzerland maintains a very large army for its small population [illegible] 3,500,000.

ONLY SIXTEEN, GIRL VERY SICK

Tells How She Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

New Orleans, La.—"I take pleasure in writing these lines to express my gratitude to you. I am only 16 years old and work in a tobacco factory. I have been a very sick girl but I have improved wonderfully since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now looking fine and feeling a thousand times better." —Miss AMELIA JAQUILLARD, 3961 Tchoupitoulas St., New Orleans, La.

St. Clair, Pa. — "My mother was alarmed because I was troubled with suppression and had pains in my back and side, and severe headaches. I had pimples on my face, my complexion was sallow, my sleep was disturbed, I had nervous spells, was very tired and had no ambition. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has worked like a charm in my case and has regulated me. I worked in a mill among hundreds of girls and have recommended your medicine to many of them."—Miss ESTELLA MAGUIRE, 110 Thwing St., St. Clair, Pa.

There is nothing that teaches more than experience. Therefore, such letters from girls who have suffered and were restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be a lesson to others. The same remedy is within reach of all.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

The vast cliff was now dimly visible in the glare of the great flame, the steady roar of which was drowned by the tumult of the rain.

Stern saw that the village was sheltered under a tremendous overhang of the black rock, he understood why the ancestors of the Folk, coming to these depths after incredible adventurings and long-forgotten struggles, had settled here. Any exposed location would have been fatal: no hut could have withstood the torrent, nor could any man, caught in it, have escaped drowning outright.

Amazed and full of wonder at this terrific storm, so different from those on the surface—for there was neither wind nor lightning, but just that steady, frightful sluicing down of solid tons of rain—Stern made his way back to the patriarch's house.

There he met Beatrice, just awakened.

"No chance to raise the machine to-day!" she called to him as he entered. "He says this is apt to last for hours and hours!" She nodded toward the old man much distressed.

"Patience!!" he murmured. "Patience, friends—and peace!"

Stern thought a moment.

"Well," said he, at last, making himself heard only with difficulty, "even so, we can spend the day in making ready."

And, after the simple meal that served for breakfast, he sat down to think out definitely some plan of campaign for the recovery of the lost Pauillac.

Though Stern by no means understood the girl's anxiety to leave the Abyss, nor yet had any intention of trying to do so until he had begun the education of the Folk and had perfected some means of trying to transplant this group—and whatever other tribes he could find—to the surface again, he realized the all-importance of getting the machine into his possession once more.

For more than an hour he pondered the question, now asking a question of the patriarch — who seemed torn between desire to have the wonder-thing brought up, and fear lest he should lose the strangers — now designing grapples, now formulating a definite line of procedure.

At last, all things settled in his mind, he bade the old man get for him ten strong ropes, such as the largest nets were made of. These ropes which he had already seen coiled in huge masses along the wall at the northern end of the village, where they were twisted of the tough wood-fibre, averaged all of two hundred feet in length. When the patriarch had gone to see about having them brought to the hut, he himself went across the plaza, with Beatrice, to the communal smithy.

There he appropriated a forge, hammers, and a quantity of iron bars, and huge three-pronged hoes.

A couple of hours' hard labour at the anvil—labour which proved that he was getting back his normal strength once more — completed the task. Deftly he heated, shaped and reshaped the iron, while vast Brocken-shadows danced and played along the titanic cliff behind him cast by the wavering blue gas-flames of the forge.

At length he found himself in possession of a drag weighing about forty pounds and provided with a stout ring at the top of the shank six inches in diameter.

"Now," said he to Beatrice, as he surveyed the finished product, while [illegible] about them the inquisitive [illegible] yet [illegible] Folk watched them by the [illegible] light, "now I guess we're ready [illegible] get down to something practical, [illegible] as soon as this infernal rain lets [illegible] up, we'll go angling for the big-

Indigestion And Headaches

In the western Provinces, where so many thousands live far from doctors and drug stores, very many rely on Dr. Chase's medicines to cure disease and maintain health and strength. This letter gives some idea of what perfect control Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills exert over the most common ills of life.

Mrs. H. K. Hewer, farmer's wife, Eastburg, Alta., writes: "For about ten years I suffered from constipation, indigestion, headache and languid feelings. Treatment from two or three doctors afforded only temporary relief, so I turned to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and with most satisfactory results. Headaches have disappeared, regular habits established and general health very much better. Both my husband and I can speak highly of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver pills, as we have both been greatly benefited by them." SWITZERLAND BETWEEN FIRES

WELL DRILLED AND BRAVE.

Men Considered Good Infantry and Number In Their Ranks Some of the Finest Rifle Shots in the World. Mountain Howitzers, For Use In Repelling Attacks, a Noteworthy Feature of Switzerland's Armament. Militiamen Required to Keep Guns and Ammunition In Homes For Instant Use If Called Upon.

SEATED among her mountains, holding tight to the territory which the bravery of the semi-mythical Tell and his followers won from Austrian rule six centuries ago, Switzerland finds in her ringing around by strong military powers both a menace and protection. Any one of the great powers of Europe whose territory is contiguous to Switzerland—Germany, Austria, Italy and France—could invade her soil, as Germany was reported to have done in the early stages of the great European war, and overwhelm her by sheer force of numbers, if the Swiss showed resentment of the violation of their territory.

On the other hand, the mutual rivalry of the powers has been Switzerland's strongest guarantee of independence in the past. None of the warlike neighbors could afford to see the buffer state in the hands of one of its rivals, and therefore the integrity of Switzerland has been insured by international guarantees. The rupture of these by the exigencies of war meant the rising of new questions for Switzerland and her neighbors.

In the meantime the Swiss prepared to defend their own home when need arose. Their army, of over 200,000 men, comprises some of the world's finest riflemen, soldiers whose keen eyes have been developed by exercise in the far distances of the mountains and lakes. These men have won many prizes in international shooting competitions.

Infantry the Main Reliance.

The infantry is the main reliance of the Swiss army. Its feats among the snows of the Alps, rivaling the chamois, are famous. The cavalry is comparatively weak, but the artillery is strong, especially in mountain howitzers intended for home defense.

On Aug. 1 every year the Swiss celebrate their national fete day. The day is to them what July 4 is to the United States and July 14 to France. It is the day when they recall the victory of three small states against the house of Hapsburg. The struggle with the Austrians, of course, went on for centuries and was tempered with phases of friendship, but the year 1291, which is the subject of veneration at the national fete day, was the beginning of Swiss independence. A correspondent of the London Times says: "The Swiss serves his country as a soldier with more cheerfulness and more intelligence than any citizen in Europe."

The Swiss did not imitate their militia from some other country. They invented it for themselves. The whole heart of the country is put into it. Many of its superior officers may be innkeepers in Lucerne, Geneva or elsewhere, but the problems of war are the occupation of their leisure. Rifle shooting is the hobby and pastime of the entire youth of the country—it is what baseball or football is to us—and when a rifleman has served his time in the army he receives his rifle as a present from the state, is proud of it and takes as much care of it as a sportsman takes care of his gun.

Not long ago the Swiss were asked by means of a poll of the people whether they were willing to accept a bill which laid on them a longer period of service and the burden of more military expenditure. By a great majority they answered "Yes."

On her French and German frontiers Switzerland has seen the gradual concentration of large forces of soldiers. Directly across her frontier are strong forts, especially Belfort, in France.

Since the beginning of the trouble the Swiss federal authorities have begun to take precautions. Papers have published an article stating that in the event of war the Swiss in Europe must return to the army at once, while in the second zone of countries, including America and other continents where the Swiss are liable to military service, they must hold themselves in readiness to return.

There is no occasion for mobilization in Switzerland because 100,000 men can be at their posts in twenty-four hours, 250,000 men in forty-eight hours and 500,000 within a week.

Keep Arms at Home.

Every man and officer of the citizen army has a rifle, ammunition, uniform and everything at home and can answer the general roll call at the near est barracks within a few hours. The Swiss army can give its powerful neighbors twenty-four hours' start and be ready before them.

The Swiss constitution forbids the maintenance of a standing army, but there is, nevertheless, a large federal army—considering the small population—larger than the American regular army and militia combined. The Swiss army in 1911 comprised 211,567, not including the auxiliary or noncombatant troops, and the last reserve of men between the ages of forty-one and forty-eight; United States army and militia in 1912, 176,016, including all non combatant troops and the coast artillery. The United States has no reserve.

This Swiss federal army is called militia because the recruits are mustered in and the expenses are partly paid by the cantons. The federal government, however, bears the greater part of the expense, has entire charge of the training and can send the army into any canton to suppress disorder. It escapes being classed as a standing army because the periods of active service are short.

It is also true that the cost of the Swiss army is absurdly small, considering its size and efficiency. The per capita cost of the Swiss army in 1910 was $2.25. The American annual expenditure per capita is about $1. Of course this large per capita cost of the Swiss army is due to the fact that Switzerland maintains a very large army for its small population of 3,500,000.

How To Make the Quickest, Simplest Cough Remedy

Much Better than the Ready-Made Kind and You Save $2. Fully Guaranteed

This home-made cough syrup is now used in more homes than any other cough remedy. Its promptness, ease and certainty in conquering distressing coughs, chest and throat colds is really remarkable. You can actually feel it take hold. A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough—relieves even whooping cough quickly. Splendid, too, for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, bronchial asthma and winter coughs.

Get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex, (50 cents worth), pour it into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. This gives you, at a cost of only 54 cents, 16 ounces of better cough syrup than you could buy for $2.50. Takes but a few minutes to prepare. Full directions with Pinex. Tastes good and never spoils.

You will be pleasantly surprised to note how quickly it loosens dry, hoarse or tight coughs, and heals the inflamed membranes in a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

To avoid disappointment, be sure and ask your druggist for "2½ ounces Pinex," and don't accept anything else.

Damp Room Test.

To ascertain whether a room is damp or not place a weighed quantity of fresh lime in an open vessel in the room and leave it there for twenty four hours, carefully closing the windows and doors. At the end of the twenty-four hours reweigh the lime and if the increase exceeds 1 per cent of the original weight it is not safe to live in the room.

Silver Fox Fur.

The black silver fox fur is most valuable when there is no silver in it—when it is a pure rich black throughout. A dressed skin of this sort averages 30 by 10 inches and will easily bring $3,500. A good silvery skin, clear and pure in color, with bluish underwool, is worth about $2,000.

How To Stop Stomach Torment

Sound Advice From a Well-Known Physician.

Men and women who suffer from what they call Dyspepsia, Indigestion or just plain "stomach-trouble" usually seek regular relief in the form of some pepsin pill or tablet, or other artificial digestant. This, experience teaches me, is a serious error. In nine cases out of ten, the distress is caused by the development of acids in the stomach,—formed by the fermenting of the food. Instead of a digestant being required, something should be taken to dissolve or neutralize this acidity, when normal digestion will follow as a matter of course. This acid matter is distinctly poisonous and unless it is dissolved, digestion merely carries the mass of fermenting food from the stomach to the intestines, where its poison is absorbed by the blood and carried all over the body.

If all the great army of people who suffer after nearly every meal would make it a point to take a teaspoonful of Bisurated Magnesia in a quarter glass of water after each meal, there would be no formation of acidity and consequently no distress or discomfort. Sour, acid, gassy stomach, heartburn, belching, bloating, etc., would then be a thing of the past. "Bisurated Magnesia" is a physician's prescription. It is inexpensive and can be obtained at any drug store. It is prepared for just such trouble and the best proof of its efficiency is that it will stop the sharpest, biting stomach distress in five minutes from the time it enters the stomach, simply by dissolving the acids that have been formed there. Its action is absolutely harmless.

Electric Lights.

An English authority assures us that we need not be afraid that the ultra-violet rays in the electric light will harm our eyes, for the reason that, since glass of all kinds is opaque to these rays, no form of incandescent lamp having a glass bulb can emit them. Nor can any arc lamp or mercury vapor lamp be harmful which is so inclosed.

One Result of The War Is Certain

CANADA must Manufacture for part of the World now involved in War.

Europe can no longer supply the Export Markets.

If you are proud of Canada, you want to see our Factories hum, our Stores alive with Business, and our Offices piled with Orders.

Let Peterborough enlist in this movement to boom Canadian Made Goods.

Let Peterborough Manufacturers get on the job, and let us read, mark and hear more of "Made in Peterborough" Goods.

How many good-going factories in Peterborough never tell our own Citizens what they manufacture.

Much of the European trade that was exported into Canada should now become our own. Who but our own Manufacturers should now make the Foodstuffs, the Hosiery, the Underwear, the Toys, and much of the Chemicals, Dye-stuffs, and other things Germany has supplied us?

Advertising will soon reveal which of our industrial enterprises are most worthy and best prepared to profit by Europe's need. The Firms first to advertise for this business will be the first to profit.

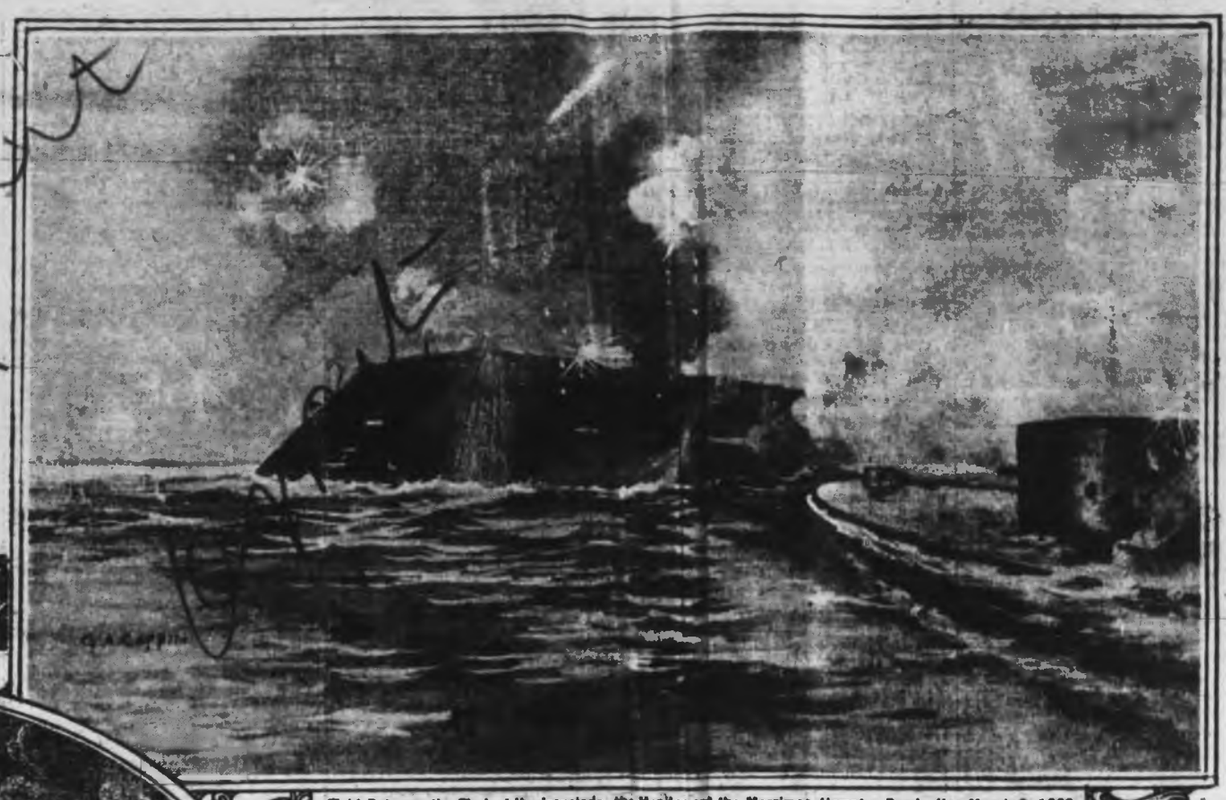
GREAT SEA FIGHTS in ANCIENT TIMES and MODERN



Fight Between the First of the Ironclads, the Monitor and the Merrimac, Hampton Roads, Va., March 9, 1862.

By Henry M. Snevily.

SHOULD Germany tear asunder the provinces of France, should she drive the British troops from the Continent and hurl the human wave of Russian advance back upon itself she would still have Great Britain to destroy upon the water.

There are those who assert that fighting at sea is only the side play incident to the decisive campaigns on land. History controverts this. The fates of nations, even of races, have more than once been decided by a single naval engagement.

It is difficult to say just when man first fought in ships. In Egypt carvings have been excavated which tend to show that fighting vessels were in use 5,000 or 6,000 B. C. Herodotus describes ships of war which legends ascribe to Ulysses and which, while they did not fight as war ship against war ship, were used to enforce a blockade at the siege of Troy.

If these vessels were used in actual fighting, however, their effect on the ultimate outcome of war must have been small, for there is little mention made of them. The first great naval battle of which there are fairly accurate accounts, and which decided the fate of Greece, was fought off Salamis, 480 B. C.

Rome became an empire as the result of a naval battle, according to many historians, who date the end of the republic from the Battle of Actium. After the defeat of Brutus and Cassius on the Plains of Philippi, Antony, Octavius and Lepidus, who had gained control of Rome after the death of Julius Cæsar, drove all their political enemies from Rome. Lepidus himself was banished by his professed friends, and Antony, having fallen under the spell of Cleopatra, remained in Egypt, where he attempted to set up the seat of government for Rome. Rivalry between Octavius and Antony led to war and again the issue was to be decided afloat.

Near Actium, in the Ambracian Gulf, the Egyptian and Roman fleets met. Although Agrippa, in command of the Romans, had begged Octavius to allow him to fight on land, he proved himself a wily seaman.

For a long time the two fleets lay off, both refusing to be drawn into an engagement, but at last Antony, whose supplies from Egypt were cut off, was obliged to attempt to break through the Roman blockade. His galleys were heavier than those of Octavius and he preferred a defensive engagement inshore, but the Roman vessels, being lighter, maneuvered for an engagement in the open sea.

As the vessels drew near each other catapults on the Egyptian vessels began hurling great stones at the Romans. It was first the action of artillery before the infantry closed in hand grips. Some of the Roman galleys were sunk, but the real test came when the vessels clashed and men fought across the decks. The lighter ships of the Romans did not attempt to ram their heavier opponents, but ripped away their oars as Arminius had done at Salamis. Cleopatra and sixty galleys fled from the fight when it was seen that Octavius was getting the better of it, and in the confusion Agrippa used fire tipped arrows, which threw the Egyptian fleet into a panic.

September 21, the date of the battle of Actium, is set by many historians as the beginning of the Roman Empire, for it was as a result of the prestige gained by this victory that Octavius declared himself Emperor.

These two battles were typical of the many fights between the galleys of European and African or Asiatic nations. Alfred, King of England, had a number of vessels in which he did effective work against the Danes, and King John defeated a French fleet carrying an army of invasion, but the battle of Sluys, 1340, is generally accepted as the beginning of British naval supremacy and the founding of the British navy as such.

Edward III, having challenged the title of Philip of Valois, King of France, the latter gathered a great fleet in the River Ecluse, near Sluys. Altogether Philip had 190 ships, including many from Genoa under Barbavera, who was more of a seaman in the true sense of the word than any other commander on either side. Hearing that the French fleet was lying in the river, sterns toward the land, its left toward the river's mouth and its right toward the town of Sluys, Edward decided to force an action. The ships in each of three divisions of the French fleet were fastened together into a sort of floating fort, which enabled the English, led by Edward himself, who climbed over the side of a French vessel and fought among his men, to attack the vessels singly, beginning at each end of a line.

As the fleets neared each other a cloud of arrows rose from the English decks and drove many of the enemy to cover. Knights in armor crowded the bigger vessels of the fleet waiting for an opportunity to board, and it is said that many even had their horses below decks.

The destruction of the French and Genoese fleet made it possible for England to hold Dover and Calais and for two centuries to absolutely control the gateway to Northern Europe, thus bringing great pressure to bear on the German cities of the Hanse League, the Low Countries, Spain, Genoa and Venice.

Some historians assert that artillery was used at Sluys, but this is doubtful. Cannon of the time were very unwieldy and used mostly for siege operations. Contemporary writers describe the loading of these cannon over night and their discharge at sunrise before the opening of an attack, after which they were frequently not loaded again until the following night.

The possibility of Turkey becoming one of the potent factors in the present war recalls the first great sea battle in which gunpowder played an important part in fleet operations. Near Lepanto, in 1571, a Christian coalition under the direction of Pope Pius V. engaged in war against the Turks, who had been for years enslaving Christian men for their galleys and women for their harems. The hostile fleets were more than a year in preparation, but at last they met in open sea. The victory of the Christians, under Don Juan of Austria, was in great part due to a vessel called the galleas, a transition type between the galley propelled only by oars and the sailing vessel.

The clash of the two fleets was much like a charge of cavalry against cavalry. In fairly regular formation they swept down on one another.

The flower of Southern Europe's chivalry was on board the Christian fleet, and it is interesting to note that on one of the Spanish vessels was Cervantes, whose "Don Quixote" was to go far toward purging Europe out of the age of chivalry. As the battle lines drew near, the eager Christians were spurred to valor by the piteous cries of Christian slaves tugging at the oars of the Moslem galleys, stung ever to greater and greater efforts by whip lashes of their masters.

Ali Pacha, the Turkish commander, rammed the Reale, Don Juan's flagship, which, however, kept up a heavy fire at close range with her cannon and musketry. Twice the knights on board the Christian vessel charged through the smoke, their steel blades flashing, their armor glinting when the sun broke through as great banks of smoke rolled temporarily away, but they would have been annihilated had not Colonna come to the rescue.

Don Bernardino Cardenas, Don Juan's lieutenant, was killed at the commander's side and the leader himself was wounded, but he fought on until the Turks, seeing many of their vessels in flames, became discouraged and began to withdraw. Just as it seemed the day was won for the Christians, the Algerines returned to the scene of action, but the Knights of Malta drove them off. The Christians had lost 7,500 men, the Turks over 30,000 to 40,000.

The story of the Great Armada of Spain is familiar to all. It was in 1588 that a fleet of galleys, galleases and pinnaces attempted to land the armies of Phillip II of Spain on the English coast. Under Lord Howard of Effingham and such men as Drake, Frobisher, Seymour, Hawkins and Winter the smaller English vessels, short of ammunition, but speedier and more manageable, harassed the Spanish fleet until it attempted to return to Spain and was broken up irretrievably in storms and disaster.

In the fighting which destroyed the Armada the Spanish attempted to employ ancient naval tactics, trusting to the grappling vessels and deck fighting, but the English ships were handled by men who fought as seamen and refused to close with their adversaries, hanging off in the distance and banging away with the artillery, smashing one Spanish vessel at a time, but gradually reducing the great fleet.

In 1805 the battle of Trafalgar was fought and Great Britain crumpled the naval power of France and Spain. By sweeping his foes from the sea it paved the way for Napoleon's downfall. The British lost 2,500 men, among them Nelson, and the allies lost 7,000.

It was in African waters that the first great fight between steam propelled, iron clad vessels took place. In March, 1862, the Merrimac, a confederate vessel which had been captured from the United States Norfolk, rechristened the Virginia, ironclad and protected by railroad iron, and the Cumberland and drove the Congress ashore near Newport News. The following day the Merrimac returned, but instead of destroying the Congress at her leisure, as she had expected, she was met by the Monitor, a vessel built by Ericsson, John Ericsson. The Monitor was an ironclad lying very low in the water and steered from a turret which appeared like a cheese box. Neither vessel was able to inflict any great damage on the other and the Merrimac retired up the James River after a battle in which solid shot had bounded off the sides of both craft.

The battle had the effect on the outcome of the American civil war, but its effect on naval warfare as a whole was enormous. All the navies of the world began at once to build ironclad vessels propelled by steam, and the era of sailing ships in war was closed.

Four years later ironclad fleets clashed for the first time in history, off the island of Lissa, in the Adriatic. It is notable that in this fight Austria opposed Italy in the same waters where it is not impossible the two nations may clash again.

Admiral Persano attempted to land men from an Italian fleet at the island of Lissa, off the Dalmatian coast, but before he could effect a landing Wilhelm von Tegethoff and his far inferior Austrian squadron attacked him.

The Austrians steamed toward the Italians in three V-shaped lines. First came the ironclads, with the flagship Ferdinand Max at the apex of the wedge. Behind them were the old wooden ships, and in the rear the gunboats. The Italians steamed to the attack in three divisions, line ahead, crossing the Austrian line of advance obliquely.

As the firing commenced Tegethoff signalled from the Ferdinand Max, "Ironclads will ram and sink the enemy."

These simple orders were carried out to the best of the seamen's ability, but it was demonstrated that it was no easy matter to ram a steam vessel which could turn and maneuvre without respect to the wind. Tegethoff himself was able to ram the Re d'Italia and steamed straight through the squadron, his gunners directing every shot at the gun ports of the enemy.

The Affondatore came very near to ramming the Kaiser, one of the Austrian ships, but suffered so from gun fire that she failed and sank shortly after the battle.

Having fairly broken the Italian fleet, Tegethoff reformed his third division between them and Lissa, preparing for an attack with all his vessels, but the Italians steamed away, an action for which Persano was signally disgraced.

The story of Santiago, when Schley and Sampson sunk or burned the entire Spanish fleet under Cervera, is 18.8 ing been often told. The American vessels, lying off the entrance to the harbor, met the Spaniards as they steamed out, line ahead, and chased them along the coast, until every single ship was destroyed. Historians say that never was the annihilation of one fleet by another so complete. Dewey's victory at Manila, another of the world's great sea fights, is familiar to Americans to [illegible] description here. With the loss of only one man killed the American admiral destroyed the Spanish fleet and captured the forts of the harbor.

Tsu-shima is a name which thrills the seaman of every land, for this great battle, the greatest ever fought afloat, is the only engagement of modern times where two fleets of armored capital strength met and fought with modern weapons under modern conditions. Kamimura in point of enormity, pales before Tsu-shima.

Of all the Russian ships engaged in this great sea fight only two cruisers and two destroyers were able to reach Vladivostock.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

AN ESCAPADE IN ADVERTISING

How an Auto Was Sold

By GEORGE FREDERICK WILSON

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

When the price of automobiles became such that their purchase became common among men of means Harvey Williams bought a single seat run about.

During the first year of possession he made almost constant use of the machine. Then the novelty of the thing wore off, and in the five following years he seldom rode in it. After that the modern and speedy touring car became the vogue. Harvey once more came under the spell of the automobile craze and quickly decided that he must have a touring car.

Rich as he was, he concluded that his was not the wealth to foster two motors. He was determined to sell the runabout.

So Harvey advertised it for sale and awaited a purchaser. He waited two weeks, and yet none came. The end of the third week brought a probable buyer.

"Now, what I want in a machine is speed," this individual began. "I can't afford the price of a new machine, but none the less I want speed in the second hand affair I buy. What speed do you claim this runabout is capable of making?"

Harvey wavered between truth and a possible sale. If he gave its speed as fifteen miles an hour truth would triumph, but the opportunity of a sale would be lost.

"Well—er—you know our city ordinance is very strict as to speed, and I have never given the auto a trial on the country roads. But, say, it makes the city limit speed of ten miles very easily. Oh, yes, very easily."

"Um! Then you don't know its exact speed?"

"It—it was guaranteed to make thirty miles easily in an hour," Harvey replied in a very weak tone of voice.

"Prove it and I'll take the auto off your hands," said the man. "You've got to show me."

"How can I prove it to you? Do you want to take a trial spin?"

"No. I haven't the time. Bring me absolute proof of its speed and I'll take the machine without further ado."

The three days following this conversation Harvey spent in vain attempts to hatch some scheme that would successfully deceive the probable purchaser. As mentioned before, the attempts were in vain, and on the night of the third day he gave up in despair.

On the morning of the fourth day he met a friend in the street, and the friend inquired about his success in disposing of the runabout. Harvey told him all.

"Why," exclaimed the friend, "I know the very man that can put this sale through to a successful finish. Robert Howardson is his name, and he is a specialist extraordinary in advertising. His office is in the Bearinger building."

Harvey found the office and the man, into Howardson's sympathetic ears he poured his story.

"What price do you ask for the automobile, Mr. Williams?" Howardson inquired after hearing Harvey through.

"One thousand dollars."

"He is willing to pay this price for a secondhand automobile?"

"Perfectly willing. Says the old machines have the material in them; they wear better."

"I am not qualified to pass judgment upon his assertion. Now, Mr. Williams, how much are you willing to pay me if I succeed in selling your runabout?"

"Mr. Howardson, my fighting blood is up. When I first decided to sell I was anxious to sell. Now I am determined to be rid of the thing. I will give you 50 per cent. or, to put it plainly, $500."

"I would consider myself a robber were I to accept this amount. If I succeed I will ask for $150. Is this satisfactory?"

"Indeed, yes."

"Very well. Now, can you spare a couple of hours tomorrow forenoon?"

"I think I can arrange it."

Promptly at the hour designated Harvey drew up before the Beardinger building, and Howardson clambered into the seat beside him.

"What is the thing's absolute limit of speed, Mr. Williams?" Howardson inquired.

"It will make eighteen miles in an hour, but it is an awful strain on the engine."

"Take a given speed of eighteen miles per hour and a policeman to determine the speed, and his imagination will make it thirty miles. Now, when I say the word give it the limit."

They rode throughout the business district for a half hour, and then, when the streets were thickest with traffic, Howardson gave the order, and Harvey pushed the lever to the last notch.

Up and down the main thoroughfares the machine sped, creating turmoil in its wake. Policemen shouted their warning, but the men heeded them not.

Harvey would have liked very much to comply with the city speed ordinance, but Howardson urged against it. Finally one policeman, with the city's interest more at heart than any they had yet met with, ran out to intercept them, dodged in time to save himself, then ran on behind, secured the license number and jotted it down in his notebook.

It was then that Howardson advised less speed.

"Take your runabout home now, Mr. Williams, and keep both it and yourself under cover. When a policeman calls to place you under arrest your wife must tell him that you are not at home. You will get a letter. Bring it to me before you take further action."

The afternoon mail brought Williams a letter from the chief of police. With trembling fingers he tore open the envelope, read the letter through and then dressed for the street. A half hour later he stood before Howardson.

Howardson smiled.

"Mr. Howardson," Harvey began, "how did you know that I would get a letter from the chief of police?"

"It is evident that you were never arrested before for speeding. They always follow this course when a prominent person is not found at home when the policeman calls. Let's read what it says."

It opened with the usual salutation and proceeded:

"You are under arrest for breaking the city ordinance relative to the speed of automobiles. I have in hand all necessary evidence to prove that you were in the automobile at the time and acting as chauffeur. You were going at a speed of not less than thirty miles per hour, and this, too, in the heart of the city's business district. You can avoid further trouble by remitting at once the amount of your fine, $25."

"Excellent, excellent," Howardson exclaimed in a tone of delight. "If he had not been so particular as to estimating the speed we would have been put to the necessity of demanding it of him. Call the estimable gentleman over the telephone and tell him that you will send the check by the next mail."

Williams did so.

"I have already notified the probable purchaser to call here, and if I mistake not this is he at the door."

The door opened, and the probable purchaser walked into the room. After a few moments of desultory conversation the chief's letter was handed to him, and he read it through.

"The noon edition of the News contains an account of this escapade," he remarked. "I'll take the runabout."

Williams had come to the office in the motor, and the purchaser, having written out a check to Harvey's order, took immediate possession of the machine.

"Mr. Howardson, you are indeed a specialist extraordinary in advertising!" Williams cried, holding out his hand when they were once more in Howardson's office.

"Thank you, Mr. Williams. Let me assure you that you need have no uneasiness regarding our little stratagem. Our friend will not dare speed above ten miles within the city and twelve in the country. I doubt if he has much relish for the paying of fines. However, should he ever have occasion to test the auto's speed and find it not above eighteen miles per hour you can truthfully say that you find always thought this speed was its limit until the chief of police informed you differently. Write a check for $25, payable to the order of the city, and I will type a letter to the chief to go with it."

This is the letter that fairly dumfounded the chief of police:

"Your communication received. I am unable to state at which I am the more surprised—your charge that I was speeding over the limit or the fact that the old auto would go over eighteen miles per hour, a fact of which I was heretofore doubtful. I have disposed of the auto, and as speed was the first and most essential requisite I was able to produce unimpeachable evidence that the machine possessed this quality. Thanking you for the unsolicited favor, I take great pleasure in handing you the inclosed check in full payment of my fine."

Harvey Williams put $2,500 with the money paid him for his runabout and purchased a machine that would do fifty miles an hour when pushed to its utmost. The first time he went out in it he was so delighted with its performance that he gave every other auto on the road his dust. Coming to a curve, he failed to slow up sufficiently, skidded down a bank, ruined his machine and was thrown into a muddy stream, thus getting his deserts for his dishonesty.

AUSTRIAN MINES MAY DRAG ITALY INTO FIGHT

ROME, Oct. 1.—Almost coincident with the demand made on Austria by the Italian Government that she stop strewing the Adriatic with mines, comes the information that an Italian torpedo boat has struck a mine and sunk near Commachio. The Minister of Marine has announced that no official confirmation of the report is available but asserts that it will be immediately investigated.

The Italian Minister at Vienna was yesterday instructed to file an emphatic protest with the Austrian Government against the laying of mines in neutral waters. He will point out that Italian shipping is seriously menaced by the presence of these mines. Twenty miles off Ancona a fishing craft met destruction and nine of her crew were killed.

It is stated that several hundred mines have already been picked up by Italian craft, and that a good many more have floated ashore.

Inasmuch as the protection of mines is the only thing which enables the Austrian fleet to remain in comparative safety at the naval base of Pola, the Austrian refusal is regarded as certain.

Marquis Di San Guiliano, Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, who is dangerously ill and not expected to recover, has said to a friend: "I wish that I could live ten weeks more!" indicating that he expects the gravest events to transpire within that time.

May Change Italy's Policy.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—Marquis di San Guiliano, the Foreign Minister who is one of the chief friends of the triple alliance in Italy, is seriously ill, and Premier Salandra has taker charge of the Foreign Office. It is suggested in London this might bring about some change in the policy of Italy, as the Premier is said to be in favor of Italy joining with the allies, to which move Marquis di San Guiliano has been strongly opposed.

Preparing For Winter Campaign.

ROTTERDAM, Oct. 1.—(Via London.)—Germans are pushing forward with utmost vigor their preparations for a winter campaign. Until recently apparently, they had not conceived such an eventuality, but in the last few weeks they have learned much.

All the high class shops that formerly did nothing but make the best fur garments for ladies, are busily engaged in the manufacture of sheepskin clothing for soldiers, and no fewer than 150,000 fur coats have been delivered, presumably for the use of officers. Two million sheep and lamb skins have been bought by the Government for winter garments for the men.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

DAILY FASHION HINT.

Girl's Dress.

This is an excellent model for the big little girl between the child and the miss in appearance. The plain blouse closes in the back; it has an ornamental collar and small sleeves with regular armholes. The two gore skirt has an overhanging tunic and closes in the back. Two materials may be used with good effect in making such a dress as this.

The dress pattern, No. 6,842, is cut in sizes 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Medium size requires 1⅝ yards of 44-inch plain material and 1⅛ yards of 36-inch plaid goods.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

AVIATORS BOMBED WARSHIP.

TOKIO, Oct. 1.—It is asserted by Japanese aviators that they struck a German warship with bombs dropped from a height of 2,100 feet during the last engagement at the port of Kiaochau. A monoplane and two biplanes were engaged in the assault. The wings of the three machines were riddled with rifle bullets, but they succeeded in returning to the Japanese lines without incident.

A considerable force has been landed from the Japanese fleet and is now co-operating with the land forces. Laoche, described as a town of some importance, has fallen. Four field guns were taken in the assault.

The outer defences of the beleaguered stronghold of the Germans are said in high official circles to have been captured by the British and Japanese assaulting columns.

Col. Hughes Goes To England.

OTTAWA, Oct. 1.—Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes will go to England shortly and in his absence the Department of Militia and Defence will be administered by the Prime Minister. Col. Hughes, it is stated authoritatively, will not go as commandant of the Canadian troops, nor will he go to the front, but simply to England in an advisory capacity, while the Canadian division is in training. The date of Col. Hughes' departure has not been fixed.

Form Whole Brigade.

MONTREAL, Oct. 1.—The proposal to form a French-Canadian regiment for active service will probably widen into a much larger scheme. The promoters met yesterday morning and discussed the details of a plan to form a brigade of French-Canadians, commanded and completely officered by men of that race and consisting solely of French-Canadians This will mean that instead of enrolling 2,000 men for service, the recruiting officers will try to raise over 4,000 men.

To Give Apples To Poor.

LONDON, Ont., Oct. 1. — Mayor Graham has arranged to have apples offered by farmers of the district, distributed among the deserving poor of the city on Saturday next. Collegiate and public school students have offered to pick them, motorists transporting them to the orchards, while business men and merchants have offered motor trucks for the hauling of the fruit to London, and the charities organization will look after the distribution.

MORE MEN CALLED OUT.

Italy's Troops Under Arms Will Soon Number 1,890,000 Men.

LONDON, Oct. 1. — The calling to the colors of the 1885, 1886 and 1888 classes of Italian reserves early in October have been confirmed by several Italian newspapers, according to the correspondent of The London Daily Mail at Venice. Eleven first category classes will then be under the flag, and will total 1,390,000 men. Without counting the 80,000 men now in Tripoli, Italy will have an army of 1,310,000 men in her own territory, divided into 30 army corps.

Continuing the correspondent says that Austrian troops are still throwing up defence works along the front-ier, the Ponta Feltarvia line being defended by the Landwehr.

DOCTORS' DUTIES ON BATTLE FIELD

Must Count on Caring for Ten Per Cent. of Force in Each Fight

AND DIRECT BURIALS

Thousands of Dead in Present War Buried by Non-combatants

What becomes of the grievously wounded that are falling in the great battles of this war? Are they properly cared for, or are many of them left upon the field to be trampled upon by men and horses of the advancing armies, and do many of them die there without care?

And what becomes of the great heaps of the slain, piled five feet deep in long windrows? Are they all buried or are many left to lie where they fell?

Every soldier of every army carries, in a sealed tin box(a first aid packet, consisting of a bandage, antiseptic gauze and adhesive plaster. A part of the training of the soldier is how to use these, and if the wound is slight and in an accessible place he may apply the dressing himself; if more severe, a comrade may apply it for him.

The wounded soldier, with or without first-aid dressing, if he is able to walk, passes back to the rear to the field hospital, which is always more or less sheltered from the fire of the armies. If he is unable to walk he is carried back on a litter by the hospital corps. As soon as he can stand transportation he is passed on to the general hospital, and thence in due time to the convalescent camp to recuperate.

Ten Per Cent. the Casualties.

The medical staff of an army is equipped upon the theory, based upon past experience, that 10 per cent. will be killed or wounded in each battle. If the number of casualties is 10,000 the estimate is that fully 20 per cent. or 3,600, will be dead on the field; 8 per cent. or 1,400, will be so severely wounded that it will be inadvisable to move them; 40 per cent., or 7,200, will be able to walk, one-half of them to the station for the slightly wounded in the rear, the rest to the field hospital, and 32 per cent. will require to be carried off the field.

In the Manchurian campaign one-third of the wounded Japanese returned to the ranks within a month.

In deciding upon his arrangements for a battle, the chief surgeon bears in mind that the wounded will be distributed in "zones of losses." The usual proportion of wounded is 20 per cent. up to 1,000 yards range; from 1,000 to 400 yards range, 60 per cent.; in the final rush, 10 per cent.; in pursuit, 10 per cent.

The field hospital is not pitched until the tactical situation develops and the point where the main attack is to be made known. Then a site is chosen beyond the range of the enemy's fire, accessible to the front and rear by road, yet off the route of march of advancing troops, convenient to wood and water, if possible, near buildings which may be used for the overflow of wounded, for, of course, casualties in battle are not limited by rule and the facilities provided may be overwhelmed.

Conditions on the battlefield are all unfavourable for clean surgical work, and it is often impossible to reach many wounded for hours, and sometimes for days, as in the attack upon the liege forts in Belgium, where the Germans wounded in the assaults were unattended for long periods, thousands of them dying where they lay beneath the guns of the forts.

The chief surgeon has under him a corps of surgeons for amputating the limbs of the wounded and for dressing wounds, and also a corps of litter bearers and ambulance men. Many acts of heroism that are not recorded in the annals of battles are performed by the men of the hospital corps, and of the Red Cross, who go out often in the fact of terrific firing and gather up the wounded.

Where an army is entrenched, or fighting in the cover of a wood or in any other protected place which it holds for a long period of continuous fighting, the gravely wounded are gathered up as they fall by the litter bearers, assisted by the soldiers, and are passed back to the rear.

When a fighting army is driven out of its position and the advancing enemy rushes over the field and on in pursuit, the medical corps then has an opportunity to gather the wounded left in the wake of the two armies, and often the medical corps of the two opposing armies work together upon the field, each carrying off its wounded. Often an armistice is taken so that the wounded may be picked up and the dead buried.

Superintends Burials.

Generally, the medical staff of each army aims to care for its own wounded, but in every case where it is necessary the wounded of the enemy are cared for with the same attention that is given those of the home army. Thus in Antwerp the Belgians are caring for large numbers of wounded Germans, and the medical staff of the German army cared for the wounded Belgians they found when they captured the forts of Liege.

The last service rendered to the soldier by the medical staff is to see that those killed are promptly buried after the battle; for, as the dead soldier has now become rubbish, or waste matter, his disposal is properly a part of the sanitary work of the medical staff. The widows and orphans, waiting at home until anxiety deepens into dread, and dread into despair, may be able to form some estimate of the reverent care with which this last rite is performed for their loved ones "humanely" killed by modern methods, when they know that the chief surgeon counts on a burial squad of 500 men disposing of 110 bodies an hour after the bodies have been collected.

There is no ceremony about it, and no reverence shown for the dead. It is all a matter of the cold, horrible business of war. The dead must be buried, and as quickly as possible, for there is other work to do. One squad collects the dead in piles, another digs long, shallow trenches, and the bodies are packed in the trenches and covered with earth. The despatches told that before Liege the Germans had so many dead, and the soldiers were so needed for fighting and gathering in the wounded, that there was not time to dig trenches, so the bodies were piled in heaps, oil was poured on and they were burned.

Buried by Non-Combatants.

Often an army is driven from its position and must leave the dead behind. Then they are sometimes buried by the enemy which occupies the position, but more often, in the present war, the dead of both armies are left to be buried by the non-combatants. It is a common thing for the army officers to order the villagers near the scene of battle to bury the dead. At Liege and at other battlefields of the present war nearly all the dead were buried by the non-combatant natives, and in this the women helped.

An effort is made to get the names of each dead soldier so that it may be included in the list sent back to the home town of the regiment. But generally, where the fighting is as severe as it is in this war, and where one army is pushing another on and on, there is no time to do this, and the lists of dead are made up from those who do not answer to the roll call and are not among the wounded. The majority of widows and orphans will never know just how or where their loved ones were killed or where they were buried.

IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat Less Meat, Also Take Glass of Salts Before Eating Breakfast

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a teaspoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

CHICAGO, Sept. 30.—Big receipts and the diminishing foreign export enquiry cut a figure today in giving the price of wheat a downward slant. Closing quotations were heavy at 3-4c to 2⅛c net decline. The outcome in corn was unchanged to 2⅛c lower, oats finished 1-8c off to 1-8c up, and provisions varying from 30c down to a rise of 30c.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Sept. 30.—The local grain situation was unchanged today. A few inquiries for grain were received, but in all cases the prices bid were out of line and no business was reported done. The feeling here is that it is just a matter of time until English buyers must come into the market for Canadian grain and just so soon as this occurs prices will respond easily. Farmers evidently are not nervous and are clinging to their stocks. Large supplies are piling up at all stores and as there has been a temporary lull in the demand, it is felt here the natural course of the market will be easy until the demand increases but that this should be short lived.

Oats were also easy.

Little business was done in sheese, but the market held steady.

Butter continued in little demand.

The provision market was active and firm.

Belgians Declare That Germans Have Been Repulsed at Antwerp.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—The Germans for two days have been shelling forts Waelham and Wavre-Ste. Catherine, which cover the road from Malines to Antwerp. Behind Waelham are the waterworks that supply Antwerp, but even the destruction of these would not be fatal to the fortress, as a good supply of water has been provided for from other sources.

Concerning the progress of this attack, the official reports give widely different accounts. The Belgians say that the German attempts to advance have been repulsed and that their shells have had no effect on the forts. On their part the Germans declare that the Belgian sorties have been driven back.

Great Gale In Germany.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—A Central News despatch from Copenhagen says that all cable communication in Sweden and Germany have been interrupted since Tuesday as a consequence, it is stated, of the great gale prevailing. It is reported that Germany has been without any foreign mail since last week.

The Danish Government is issuing a domestic state loan of 50,000,000 kroners (approximately $15,000,000).

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, Sept. 28.—Prices should be high, particularly on food stuffs. At the same time it is well to remember that there was a severe money stringency previous to the outbreak of war, which tended to make business dull. This stringency has been accentuated by war conditions. When people can't buy prices must come down to meet them. Hence in the food market we have these two factors contending, a natural money stringency tending to bring prices down and war conditions which always send prices soaring, other things being equal. Lumbermen in the food line will, of course, suffer most from the stringency, as is already abundantly evident.

In considering prices on staples farmers will do well to remember that when more ocean space is available, or Britain wins a decisive naval victory, food prices will tend to stiffen perceptibly. The markets of the week have not shown any great variations, and changes that have occurred have been toward lower levels. A slight weakness in the dairy market may be attributed to lack of ocean space as much as anything.

WHEAT

Reports indicate an increased acreage of winter wheat. World prices would have been high even lacking the element of war, as the decrease in the wheat yield of Europe and Canada more than offset the bumper crop harvested in the United States. War, therefore, is not having as great an effect on the price as it is often credited with. What dealers would like to know, above all other things, is how long the war will last. That will be the prime factor in settling prices in the future. No. 1 Northern is now quoted $1.19; No. 2, $1.17; new crop 3c less; Ontario wheat, $1.08 to $1.10.

COARSE GRAINS

Ontario oats are down a few cents as dealers were not anxious to buy them at a figure above an export basis. Malting barley also does not appear to be in great demand at present prices. Quotations are as follows: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 60c; No. 3, 59c; new crop, No. 3, 55c; Ontario, new, 45c to 46c; corn, 85½c to 87c; peas $1.10 to $1.15; barley, malting 65c to 67c; rye, 75c. Montreal dealers attribute quietness in grains to lack of space on outgoing steamers: Oats, C.W. No. 2 43c to 43½c; No. 3, 42c to 42½c; local white, 54c to 56c; corn, 89c to 89c; barley, malting, 83c; feed, 80c; buckwheat, 84c.

MILL FEEDS

The tendency on this market is toward lower quotations. Bran now goes at $23 to $25; shorts, $25 to $27; middlings $28 to $30; feed flour, $32 to $34. In Montreal bran is unchanged at $25; shorts, $27; middlings, $30; feed flour, $33 to $34.

POTATOES AND BEANS

Potatoes have taken another drop during the week, and prospects are not good for higher quotations unless yields at digging are much smaller than anticipated. The wholesale trade quotes Ontario's in car lots at 60c to 65c, and New Brunswick's at $70 to $75. Montreal quotes potatoes at 70c to 70½c car lots.

Beans here are quoted $2.90 to $3 for primes; hand picked, $3 to $3.25. Montreal quotes new crop hand picked, $3.65 to $3.75; three-pound pickers $2.45 to $2.50.

HAY AND STRAW

Prices are unchanged though the undercurrent of the market tends to weaken. Dealers are looking for lower quotations. Quotations on track here are: No. 1 baled hay, $13 to $15; No. 2, $13.50 to $14; No. 3 $11 to $12; baled straw, $8 to $8.50. No. 2 hay in car lots is quoted at $13 to $19 at Montreal.

EGGS AND POULTRY

Receipts of eggs are unexpectedly large and, so far, cold storage stocks have not been resorted to. Quotations are unchanged: Strictly new laid in cartons, 30c to 32c; extra firsts, 28c to 29c; ordinary firsts, 25c to 26c. Montreal dealers hold fresh eggs at 30c to 35c; selected 28c; No. 1 stock, 25c; No. 2, 21c to 22c.

The necessities of the poor are probably responsible, along with increased receipts, for a decided drop in poultry. Quotations now are: Live spring chickens, 11c to 13c; old fowl, 9c to 10c; ducks, 9c to 10c; geese, 8c to 9c; turkeys, 13c to 15c.

DAIRY PRODUCE

Creamery butter is not on a very satisfactory basis. One week has witnessed a decline of almost three cents a pound and sales are reported at 28½c up to 29c for finest, although much that can be classified as finest has sold at 27½c. One feature of the week has been the receipt of three car loads of creamery butter from Western Canada. It seems that Western creameries are now in a position not only to supply themselves, but the coast demand as well. This is one of the first results of mixed farming in Western Canada.

Lack of ocean space for shipment has resulted in a quiet cheese market. More space is expected very soon, however, and, as the market on the other side has firmed considerably, satisfactory selling prices are expected. Exports are considerably below those of the same week last year.

LIVE STOCK

Last week's prices have held throughout all of this week's trading, and in not a few cases quotations on top quality steers have advanced. Quality is what packers want. In the liberal receipts that figured on the market every day of the week, the percentage of really well finished animals was almost negligible. Several shipments of steers were received from the West, and these too were in poor shape and went slowly. Supplies of stockers also continue to be neutral, and almost in excess of demands, although quotations have not been lowered.

Choice heavy steers, $8.60 to $8.85; handy steers, $8.25 to $8.50; butcher steers, good, $8 to $8.25; com. to med., $7 to $8; heifers, $7.25 to $8.25; choice cows, $6.75 to $7.50; com. to good, $6 to $6.75; butcher bulls, $6 to $7.85; feeders, $7.25 to $7.75; stockers, $5.50 to $7.50; canners and cutters, $3.50 to $5.

Choice milch cows have been in unusual good demand these last few days at $75 to $95, and down to $45 for lower grades. Springers are $50 to $70. Calves are quoted $5 to $10.50.

Lambs are holding steadily at $8 to $9; yearling lambs, $7 to $7.60; buck lambs, $6.25 to $6.75; light ewes, $5.25 to $6.50; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $5.25, culls, $2 to $4.

Hogs have taken another dip, packers through the week quoting only $8.90 f.o.b.

St. Hyacinthe, Que., Sept. 19.—225 packages butter sold at 27c, and 480 boxes cheese at 13½c.

PICNIC OF RICE PICKERS BIG SUCCESS

Special to The Examiner:

KENE, Sept. 29.—The annual Rice Gatherers' picnic was held last Wednesday at Sugar Island, Rice Lake. In spite of the rainy weather the committee in charge proved themselves efficient and the day was a grand success. The Alderville Brass Band furnished an excellent programme. Owing to the misfortune of the Keene Baseball team being unable to get on the grounds in time the Alderville team took their place and played the Beavers, under the management of Robert Macklin. The Beavers played an exciting game, the score resulting in Beavers 9, Alderville 5.

War canoe (4 in canoe)—1 Z. Smoke, E. Blaker, E. Crow, S. Taylor; 2 P. Comeigo, J. Bigwin, A. Chubb, S. Beaver.

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the muscles and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

BERNE, Switzerland, Sept. 28 — Since the capture of Lemberg by the Russians, German capitalists are said to be eagerly buying Russian securities which have risen rapidly since the Russian victory.

SWEEPING VICTORY FOR THE ALLIES CLAIMED

SUPREME CONFIDENCE PREVAILS IN PARIS

OFFICIAL STATEMENT STILL SAYS NO CHANGE

ALTHOUGH OFFICIAL REPORTS DO NOT GIVE MUCH INFORMATION FEELING IS ALLIES ARE VICTORS

Jubilation Among Officers of General Gallieni's Staff in Spite of the Fact That War Office Merely Says "Allies Are Making Some Progress But There Is No General Change."

GERMANS ARE REPORTED RETIRING

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Oct. 1.—Supreme confidence prevailed at military headquarters to-day. The battle of the Aisne is already claimed as a sweeping French victory; there was no disguising the jubiliation among the members of General Gallieni's staff, but there is still no deviation in the official communique which brusquely declares "there is no change." The same anonuncement says,—"The French left progreses to the north of Somme and we also make progress in the Woevre region." In explanation of this, however, it is pointed out that the French war office has already announced that it will not be put in the position of making premature announcements of victories; "not until we are actually holding the entire German line will we officially claim a complete victory," declared one of the highest officials on duty here to the assembled newspaper reporters here this afternoon. "Personally we are confident. We know that the Germans are retiring, very rapidly at some points, and that they have been forced to fight with desperation to prevent their extreme right being completely routed, but that does not yet justify an official claim of a sweeping victory. So long as the Germans hold the lines so long will there be danger that they may yet turn the tables. You will probably see an entirely new alignment by the first days of next week."

This statement leads to the belief that the victory (for that is the way in which even French military experts designate the situation) was actually won by Britain's fresh levies. The Indian troops are unofficially reported to have taken their places in the battle line; in addition certain of her territorial forces are also reported in action, and it was probably this latter force that turned the tide on the extreme French left north of Noyon. It has been a most costly action. The losses on both sides are declared to be so large that it is considered the wisest policy to withhold them for the present.

OPTIMISM IN LONDON

LONDON, October 1.—Despite a noticeable optimism on the part of the high officials of the war office, not a single word was obtainable to-day explanatory of the general war situation. It was stated that no word had been received from General French, and "he was probably too busy just at present to communicate." Nevertheless unofficial reports all induced the belief that the Germans are again in retreat in France. There is however grave concern for the fate of Belgium. Antwerp is being subjected to a continual bombardment, and a score of Belgian cities are also being shelled at the present time.

AUSTRIA REPLIES

ROME, Italy, October 1.—The Austrian Government has replied to the Italian protest against floating mines in the Adriatic Sea, deploring the loss of Italian vessels, and promising to take measures to remove the mines and to fully indemnify the families of the victims.

THE SUCCESS OF RUSSIANS IN POLAND

Officially Reported That Czar's Forces Have Captured Several Important German Positions

ADVANCE CONTINUES

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—Colonel Golejewski, military attache of the Russian Embassy, to-day issued the following official report from Petrograd: "On Sept. 28, after stubborn fighting, our troops have captured the German positions at Augustowo and Kopets. On Sept. 29 we took the defiles between the lakes at Simmo, Serepe and Lejpuny. The Germans have been driven back into the region between Suwalki, Sejny, and Marionpol. Our advance continues. The German siege artillery continues the bombardment of Ossowitz but without success. At Schutchkien and at Andrejew only unimportant skirmishes are reported."

DEVELOPMENTS EXPECTED.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—The general feeling here is that we are on the eve of vitally important developments. Yesterday the French ambassador conferred with Premier Asquith, and the representatives of Turkey and Italy. Their final decisions are now expected at any hour in England.

MACKENZIE KING CHOSEN FOR POSITION

Selected by John D. Rockefeller to Investigate Labour Conditions in the United States

IMPORTANT UNDERTAKING

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—According to The New York American, John D. Rockefeller, whom some Socialists assail as the enemy of labour, is preparing to spend a goodly share of his vast wealth for the cause of labour.

The American learns that the Rockefeller Foundation, endowed with $100,000,000, has chosen Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, former Canadian Minister of Labour under Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as a special investigator of labour conditions. The scope of his work is understood to be as wide as the continent of North America.

Whether or not the clash of his great coal interests with the miners has anything to do with the movement could not be learned last night. Inquiry by The American only developed the fact that the Rockefeller Foundation has been making a far-reaching preliminary inquiry into the most practical method of conducting labour research, and that Mr. King has been selected as one of the most prominent experts in this line of work.

Mr. King is well known in labour circles both in the United States and Canada.

TORNTO, Oct.1.—The appointmen of Mr.Kenzie King is confirmed here

PARIS, Sept. 30—After passing through the censor's hands the "Intransegeant" appeared recently with headlines in the first column of an article on German trade marks. The signature of the writer, Leon Bailby, appeared, but the entire text of the story was missing. The column was simply blank.

ADVICE FROM BOBS

Veteran Field Marshal Warns Britain That Big Fight Will Come When Germans Are Driven Into Their Own Country

"KEEP OUR HANDS CLEAN"

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, Eng., Oct. 1—Lord Roberts, who was 82 years old yesterday, in an article published to-day, urges his countrymen not to under-estimate the power of Germany, with its sixty-six million people. "I cannot help thinking," he said, "that the great task of subduing that nation will begin when we with our French, Russian and Belgian allies, have driven the German allies into the heart of their own territory.

"When we read charges against the German troops, let us remember that gross charges, absolutely untrue, were brought against our own brave soldiers when they were fighting in South Africa. But whether such charges are true or not, let us keep our own hands clean, and let us fight against the Germans in such a way as to earn their liking as well as their respect."

BELIEVE ITALY IS NOT QUITE READY

But It is Believed She Will Enter the War on the Allies' Side

TURKEY'S VIEW CHANGED?

LONDON, Sept. 29. — Following First Lord of the Admiralty Churchill's interview in which he gave reasons for Italy's participating in the war on the side of the Allies, there is renewed interest in the question of that country's probable action.

Inquiry in authoritative quarters indicates that Italy is not ready to act just now, although there is ground for believing that she will ultimately enter the conflict on the side of the Allies.

The British Government is, officially, doing nothing in the way of seeming to help in dragging Italy into the war, but there seems little doubt that this Government feels certain that sooner or later Italy will join the Allies.

At present Italy is in a position in which participation would be founded only on her opportunity to take advantage for selfish reasons of Austria's weakness and imperiled position. Italy, it is asserted, is awaiting a better moment, when she could justify herself on account of some specific action. Just what this may be remains to be disclosed, but there is reason to believe that the opportunity will appear.

England's official information coincides with press reports to the effect that the attitude of the Italian public favours war. The Government, however, is described as holding an attitude of strict neutrality, and endeavouring to avoid being forced into war through popular clamour.

In the meantime, the Allies are quite content with Italy's attitude. If Italy had cast her lot with Germany and Austria the campaign would not be nearly so favourable, as France would have been compelled to send a large army to the Italian frontier, while the naval situation in the Mediterranean would have been greatly complicated. In that way Italy's position has been decidedly helpful, and there is every reason to believe that she is most friendly to the Allies, while there is hope that finally she will actively join them.

Turkey's decision is awaited with equal interest. Observers here think that Germany's machinations are now making an unfavourable impression in Constantinople, where the Government is usually acute in discerning what is best for itself. The evidence at hand seems to show that Germany has been overdoing the propaganda in Turkey in the same manner as in America, thus lessening the chances of Turkey's participation on her side.

PRIZES BY CRUISER

The British "Cumberland" Captured German Gunboat, Two Liners and Nine Merchantmen

BALANCING ACCOUNT

LONDON, Oct. 1, 1.50 a.m.— The Admiralty announces that the British cruiser Cumberland has captured, off the Cameroons River in West Africa, the Hamburg-American liner Arnfried, and the following merchant steamers: The Max Brock, Kenapa, Amsinck, Paul Woermann, Erna Woermann, Henrietta Woermann, Aline Woermann, Hans Woermann and the Jeannette Woermann.

All were in good order and most of them contained general cargoes and considerable quantities of coal. The European crews have been removed as prisoners, but the native engine-room hands are being retained.

The gunboat Soden has also been captured and has been placed in commission, while it is expected that the floating dock and the Herzogin Elizabeth, which have been sunk, can be raised.

The Cameroons is a German colony on Western Equatorial Africa. It has heretofore been announced that because of the deadly climate of the place the British would not disturb this colony. The announcement of the Admiralty, however, indicates that the British forces have visited the place and captured the German shipping assembled there.

APPEAL IS DISMISSED

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Oct. 1.—At Osgoode Hall to-day the Appellate Court of Ontario dismissed the appeal of W. F. Hamilton, of Peterborough, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Middleton for five thousand dollars on a note made in favour of his wife. The argument of Hamilton's counsel was that he was incapable of properly attending to such business when he made a note in favour of his wife, but the higher court agreed with Mr. Justice Middleton that he was responsible for the claim.

Population Of City Has Been Increased By 503 During Year

Assessor's Figures Show That Peterborough's Population is 20,653--The Assessment Has Jumped to $15,493,-030, an Increase of Nearly $2,800,000 Over Last Year's Total--Some Interesting Figures.

The assessment rolls for this year on which the taxes for 1915 will be paid, have been completed. The figures give Peterborough a total Assessment of $15,493,030, and a population of 20,653. The increase in assessment over last year's figures is $2,077,566, and the increased population is 503. Of the $2,077,566 increase in the assessment $1,341,266 is in the Centre Ward. The number of taxable persons has increased in proportion with the population from 5,462 to 5,764, and the figures in everything from the total assessment to the number of dogs in the City show an increase for the present year. It is interesting to note that the increase in population is built upon the solid foundation of 389 births during the year and only 102 deaths. There were six more births in 1913 than in the present year, but on the other hand there were sixteen less deaths, showing a net gain from the standpoint of vital statistics. In taxable property the amount has increased from $9,269,480, in 1913, to $10,-484,450 in 1914. The actual figures for the City and the five Wards are given below.

THURSDAY, OCT. 1, 1914

THE REAL THING.

Not long ago an intelligent and educated German came to Peterborough and associated himself with a local manufacturing establishment, with the object of practically learning its processes that he might apply them in his own country. He attained his object, but during his stay in Canada he learned more than that. When he was about to return to Germany some one said to him that he would doubtless be glad to return home.

"No," he said, "I am not glad to get home," and he significantly added, "This is a free country—we have nothing like it in Germany." There's a whole volume in these simple remarks. Germany may have "culture," intellectual eminence, a relentless system of accomplishment, scientific achievement; but it lacks the essential part, the institutions that mean a free people. The common people are under a ruthless tyranny, blinded by false lights, by dazzling visions of conquest, but they are without the one thing that makes a nation really and effectively great— human freedom, right and justice. For these things Great Britain and her allies are fighting; and with the overthrow of organized tyranny the German people will learn what real freedom is. They will, however, pay a far more terrible price than the German who learned his lesson by a few months' residence in a free country.

CHOICE OF A LEADER.

Conservative papers who believe in government according to the principles of democracy are not inclined to favour the German way—one man rule—in the selection of a leader. They are urging the holding of a party caucus to select a successor to Sir James Whitney. It looks at present as if the choice of a party leader and, necessarily, of a Premier, will not be made by the party that is to be led, but by a small group, which the Toronto World limits to a single dictator, Hon. Frank Cochrane.

However, this may be, and who ever the new leader may be, who he will not be is under no doubt. It is clear that he will not be Hon. Adam Beck. The appointment of Col. Hendrie as Lieutenant-Governor settles that. He and Mr. Beck haven't pulled any too well together on the Hydro-Electric; they are not congenial spirits and, therefore, it is quite improbable that Col. Hendrie will call upon Mr. Beck to form a government.

If Mr. Hanna is overlooked the public will be strengthened in the belief that his record for the past two or three years practically disqualifies him for the position of party leader and prime minister. Previous to the Provident and Snider affairs, his nomination would have been expected.

There will have to be a severe shaking-up, a reorganization of the Cabinet. The Liberal Opposition founded their protest against a premature general election upon the necessity of giving the people a chance to vote for something better than a moribund and disorganized government. The people returned the Whitney government on the strength of Sir James Whitney's personality. Sir James has gone and the people have not got what they voted for. The matter of the choice of a party leader may be regarded as a thing that concerns only the party, but when the party leader necessarily becomes the premier, the head of the government, the selection of a party leader is a matter of public concern. It makes a great difference whether the choice of a leader is matter of popular selection, or the work of a political clique that does not in any way represent the party at large or the WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

Many persons point to the existence of the present horrid war as an evidence of the failure of Christianity. It may be so; but that is not the only evidence of the failure of Christianity. In the minds of many ladies this evidence is furnished by the General Conference of the Methodist Church now in session at Ottawa in denying equal rights to women. A report of a committee appointed to deal with the subject of the ecclesiastical enfranchisement of women, reported in favour of equal rights for women, in the matter of church government, involving the right of membership of all church courts, boards and committees. The report was rejected, the vote in favour having failed to reach the three-fourths majority required to give effect to a constitutional amendment. While a layman may very properly be denied the right to interfere in a matter of church polity, his right to an opinion on the grounds of the broad principle of fair play and justice cannot be denied. Great Britain in declaring and waging war stands for the principle of the highest human right, freedom and the concomitants of true freedom—equal right and privilege. If Great Britain's attitude is right; if it is aligned with the principles of Christianity, then the attitude of some members of the conference is not in line with Christian principles. The plan and scope of salvation does not provide for a sheep and goats differentiation between men and women; and there should logically be no distinction in the distribution of rights and privileges. Not only as a matter of simple human right and justice, but as a matter of good services have women a right to equality of status with men in church matters. The women of the church are the real strength of the church. If religion involves devotion then the women of the church are more entitled than men to consideration. Where would the mid-week services of the church be if it were not for women? Men are few at these meetings compared with the attendance of women. The success of church work is largely due to the auxiliary service of women. They are graciously permitted to do a great deal of work that men can't, or won't or don't, do. For this they are praised, patted on the back and patronized, but when it comes to the proposal to make women something more than hewers of wood and drawers of water, to recognige their intelligence, to give them a voice in matters in whose promotion they are personally interested, and show and possess as much good sense and judgment as men, not to speak of a great deal more zeal, they are told to take and keep a back seat.

The members of a church conference or synod that thus deny equal rights to women are not only doing a wrong in the abstract, but are establishing a precedent for the denial of equal civil rights to women. Fogey legislators will be encouraged to deny franchise rights and equal civil rights to women by the example of a church court, supposed to pre-eminently stand for righteousness and justice. It would be impossible to suppose that a member of a church court would beat his wife; but does he not do as badly when he denies her intelligence and opportunity for service, as the expression of an estimation of woman's place in the world, that is not very remotely related to the Mohammedan doctrine that women have no souls.

LEARN TO SHOOT.

"It is the nation's task now to make armies," is the opinion of Professor Spencer Wilkinson. In a recent issue of the London Morning Post he says that anyone who has read the accounts of the fighting at Mons and at Cambrai, sees that only first-rate soldiers will be able to stand in that kind of fiery ordeal. Discussing the training of the British Territorials—corresponding to the Canadian volunteers—he writes:

Living together in complete units at full strength, the Territorial troops must be gradually gaining that quality of cohesion which marks an army. Daily marches will harden them for the field. Their officers are keen and intelligent and many of them have studied war. What they are now acquiring is the confidence which comes from practice. But there is one other thing which is indispensable to give officers and men the spiritual quality which will enable them to emulate the achievements of the Army now in France. That one thing is the power to shoot straight. It is everything.

The weapon with which the infantry soldier destroys his enemy is the 120 bullets which he carries. The rifle is merely a machine for directing them. Give a recruit a rifle and he will be afraid of it. When he fires it kicks him, and the bullets seem to go everywhere except to the particular point at which he thought he was firing. A man in that condition is bound to be afraid when he hears the enemy's bullets whistling past him in the air. He may hope that one of his bullets may hit the enemy, but in his heart he is quite sure that it will not.

But let the recruit be quietly taught to handle the rifle; let him practice every day on the range, firing in every practice only a few deliberate shots, and let this practice be continued day after day for weeks. By degrees the man will find that he can hit the target and even the bulls-eye. The practice should begin at short ranges, and continue until the recruit has reached the stage when he knows that at short range he will hit the target and probably the bull's-eye. Then the bull's-eye may be diminished and, in proportion to the power the recruit has acquired the range may be lengthened. The object is not merely to teach the man to hit, but to give him the knowledge that he can do it and the confidence that comes of that knowledge.

He claims that all required to make volunteers a first-rate army is daily practice with bullets against targets, beginning with the individual practice until it has produced its full results, then going into the field firing in squads, by platoons, and by companies. This is about the same view as that taken by Lord Kitchener, who said what he wanted above all was men who knew how to shoot.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

PEN AND INK PICTURE OF THE INCOMPARABLE KITCHENER

It was our own O. Henry who told the story of the little department store girl, of the shirking "Piggy" waiting below stairs and of the eyes that seemed to glow from the lithograph of the Sirdar, Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, on the wall of the little girl's third-floor-back. Those steady, cold, fierce eyes are responsible for many more remarkable things than the rescue of a department store girl in Gotham. They have made the Englishman, who the Hartford Times remarks, is not an imaginative person and is strongly averse to hysteria of any sort, work himself up into a state of mind wherein he regards the present head of his army as a sort of supernatural being. It is interesting to re-read George W. Steeven's chapter on Lord Kitchener, in his "With Kitchener in Khartoum" (New York. Dodd, Mead & Co., 1899), to note with what superlatives his eulogy is phrased. Steevens, of the London Daily Mail, was one of the most brilliant of modern English journalists, and his estimate of a man should not ordinarily fall too high or low of the mark. We may believe, then, that we are come near to looking at the real Kitchener in his pen portrait from Steevens' book:

Major-General Sir Horatio Herbert Kitchener is forty-eight years old by the book; but that is irrelevant. He stands several inches over six feet, straight as a lance, and looks out imperiously above most men's heads; his motions are deliberate and strong; slender, but firmly knit, he seems built for tireless, steel-wire endurance, rather than for power and agility; that is almost irrelevant. Steady, passionless eyes, shaded by decisive brows; brick-red, rather full cheeks; a long moustache, beneath which you divine an immovable mouth—his face is harsh and neither appeals for affection nor stirs dislike. All this is irrelevant, too; neither age, nor figure, nor face, nor any accident of person have any bearing on the essential Sirdar.

You could imagine the character just the same as if all the externals were different. He has no age but the prime of life, no body but one to carry his mind, no face but one to keep his brain behind. The brain and the will are the essence and the whole of the man—a brain and a will so perfect in their workings that, in the face of extremest difficulty they have never seemed to know what struggle is.

You can not imagine the Sirdar otherwise than as seeing the right thing to do and doing it. His precision is so inhumanly unerring, he is more like a machine than a man. You feel that he ought to be patented and shown with pride at the Paris International Exhibition. British Empire: Exhibit No. 1, hors concours, the Sudan Machine.

The man has disappeared. The man Herbert Kitchener owns the affection of private friends in England and of old comrades of fifteen years standing for the rest of the world there is no man Herbert Kitchener, but only the Sirdar, neither asking affection or giving it. His officers and men are wheels in the machine; he feeds them enough to make them efficient, and works them as mercilessly as he works himself. He will have no married officers in the army —marriage interferes with work. Any officer who breaks down from the climate goes on sick leave once; next time he goes, and the Egyptian Army bears him on its strength no more. Asked once why he did not let his officers come down to Cairo during the season he replied, "If it were to go home, where they would get fit, and I could get more work out of them, I would. But why should I let them go down to Cairo?" It is unamiable, but it is war, and it has a severe magnificence. And if you suppose, therefore, that the Sirdar is unpopular, he is not. No General is unpopular who always beats the enemy. When the columns move out of camp in the evening to march all night through the dark, they know not wither, and fight at dawn with an enemy they have never seen, every man goes forth with a tranquil mind. He may personally come back and he may not; but about the general result there is not a doubt. You bet your boots the Sirdar knows; he wouldn't fight if he weren't going to win. Other generals have been better loved; none was ever better trusted.

So far as Egypt is concerned, he is the man of destiny — the man who has been preparing himself sixteen years for one great purpose. For Anglo-Egypt he is the Mahdi, the expected: the man who has sifted experience and corrected error; who has worked at small things and waited for great; marble to sit still and fire to smite; steadfast, cold and inflexible, the man who has cut out human heart and made himself a machine to retake Khartoum.

Lord Kitchener is sixteen years older now and it may be supposed that his ambition, which Steevens has hinted was the back-bone of his never-fail" efficiency, of the old days, will not be as keen an inspiration as before. Still he has already fulfilled one prophesy of 1898, for Steevens writes: "There are some who nurse a desperate hope that he may some day be appointed manager of the War Office. He would be a splendid manager." And that is just what he is at present. The Hartford Times comments briefly upon the man's career, and upon the part that he is likely to play in the present war:

In his two best known campaigns Kitchener has shown a tremendous capacity for arrangement; a genius for the utilization of men and munitions. Seemingly inspired at times in his plans of campaign and ruthless in the accomplishment of his purposes, Kitchener, although never tested in a really great war, undoubtedly holds place in many military minds as the ablest soldier of Europe. He is 64 now and old as field commanders go, but if physical decay or loss of mental alacrity has made itself felt in him it has given no outward sign. As the administrator of the English Army he has a difficult task. The fine forces of the Empire are not generally credited with the professional skill of their continental neighbours, the Territorials are an unknown quantity, and while the Boers made plain the lesson that men on horses move faster than men on foot, and that modern cannon with greater rapidity, range, and accuracy than venerated armament of an earlier date, there is some ground that fear that the War Office may not have maintained the efficiency it knew just after 1900.

But in the balance of international conflict a master mind may outweigh many physical defects. Of what value was the mitrailleuse, whwich Bazaine did not know how to use, against the infantry which Moltke did know how to use.

In view of these comments upon the personality of England's leader on the field of battle, it is interesting to run over Lord Kitchener's last word to the men of the English expeditionary forces. Each British soldier now on the continent carries in his knapsack a pamphlet signed by Field Marshal Earl Kitchener advising him how to conduct himself. The text of the pamphlet is as follows:

You are ordered abroad as a soldier of the King to help our French comrades against the invasion of a common enemy.

You have to perform a task which will need your courage, your energy and your patience.

Remember that the honour of the British Army depends upon your individual conduct.

It will be your duty not only to set an example of discipline and perfect steadiness under fire, but also to maintain the most friendly relations with those whom you are helping in this struggle.

The operations in which you will be engaged will, for the most part, take place in a friendly country, and you can do our own country no better service than in showing yourself in France and Belgium in the true character of a British soldier by being invariably courteous, considerate and kind.

Never do anything likely to injure or destroy property, and always look upon rioting as a disgraceful act.

You are sure to be met with a welcome, and to be trusted. Your conduct must justify that welcome and that trust.

In this new experience you may find temptation both in wine and women. You must entirely resist both temptations, and while treating all women with perfect courtesy you should avoid any intimacy.

Do your duty bravely. Fear God and honour the King.

MAY PROSECUTE THE MAGISTRATE

Ald. Johnston brought to light the fact, at last night's Board of Works meeting that Magistrate Dumble had dumped some plaster and other refuse in a drain on Edinburgh Street. It was decided to notify the party to remove the stuff at once from the street, and if he failed to do so, that legal action would be taken by the City to have him remove it.

Dispute Over Telegraph Wires

At the Board of Works meeting last night Mayor Buller drew the attention of the committee to the fact that the G.N.W. telegraph lines had been moved from Charlotte Street to Simcoe Street instead of to King Street as the Council wished. He explained that when in conversation with the managers of the company he had told him that it was the city's wish to have the company move the wires to King Street instead of Simcoe Street. But the manager had gone ahead and got permission from the Bell Telephone to put their wires on the Bell 'Phone's poles on Simcoe Street. The placing of the wires had already been completed. On the motion of Mayor Buller and Ald. Green, the matter was referred to the City Solicitor for a report to see if the Bell Telephone Co. have any right to allow the Telegraph Co. its wires on their poles without first getting the consent of the city. The solicitor will also look into the matter as to whether the city cannot compel the company to put their line on King Street.

MEDITATIONS OF A "NOBODY"

There is exhilaration in the distinction of being a celebrated Nobody, going about the world mingling with noted people, and yet escaping being in real celebrity. The age-old craving for liberty is felt again in this enlightened time, mingling among men who are eminent, famous or notorious.

Many real celebrities and notables are prisoners in the manner portrayed by the novelist who tells us of Lady Vere de Vaux or the Countess de Luxe, the wealthy heiress or social queen, craving the freedom of pastoral life, amidst the luxurious but prison walls of the castle, chateaux or an American summer castle at Newport. The eyes of the [illegible] with a "last rose of summer" see visions of happiness in running to settle for real life. Every one has its problems. At some time or other during our existence we seriously suggest our solvent for all evils and begin philosophizing at resort hotels, where we have not the wealth to tarry long.

This is real philosophy, only observation. It is written on embossed hotel paper, and here are the notes: Got up early; found the blond-haired porter arranging the rocking chairs in military array on the solid cement verandah. Late last night I saw them all sawing in the wind and rain to the rhythm of the breakers; in the farthest corner sat a young man muttering, "I am as broke as the breakers," as he thought of that last game. He looked in at the ball room and saw Her dancing the red pepper tango in the embrace of a rival as the orchestra rattled out the ragtime. Fond mammas, fat and lean, looked on. Little girl under 10 with long hair danced with little fat boys with linen collars, and the front, back and side stepping continued until the cornetist turned bugler and sounded the reveille. The be-diamoned ladies at the card tables yawned as the little groups broke up one by one. Before retiring they tripped over to the water tank as 'twere a purling brook. The costumes and toilets that had taken hours and thousands of dollars' original investment to prepare had flashed in butterfly brilliance in the soft light of the "lounge." In America there must be a show room for costumes in well-regulated resort hotels as well as sample rooms for the drummer.—

CITY AND THE STREET RAILWAY CO. AT LOGGERHEADS

Board of Works Does Not Like the Way the Company Has Acted in the Past and May Refuse Request

A QUESTION OF POWER

As a result of what it feels have been repeated attempts on the part of the Street Railway Company to inconvenience the City, the Board of Works adopted last night a definite policy of antagonism to the Peterborough Radial Railway Co. The Board was unanimous in declaring that while the city had always dealt liberally with the company, the company on every occasion appeared unwilling to co-operate with the municipality.

Mayor Buller said that as the Company would not accept amicable offers from the city, the city were in a position to make it very disagreeable for the company. While it had always been the city's wish to remain on good terms the company itself has made this impossible, and if the city undertook to light the company, the latter would begin to see that the thing worked both ways. Ald. Johnston also expressed the opinion that the city was now in a position to dictate to, rather than be dictated to, by the company.

The last evidence that the city had of the company's attitude was, said Ald. Duncan, when the company was getting ready to put in two iron poles on George Street near the C.P.R. station. The company wanted to charge the city $25 apiece for the iron poles, which were only worth about half that price. When the city refused to pay it the Street Railway Company carted away the poles and said they would proceed to instal wooden ones. So, to protect the interests of the ratepayers in the vicinity the city was forced to allow the poles to be put in and pay for them. But, said Mayor Buller, that $50 would be charged up to the company in some other transaction.

Mr. W. H. Munro appeared before the Board last night and asked to be allowed to put poles on certain streets to feed the Street Railway Company's lines with power. Instead of granting his request as they claim they have done on every occasion in the past, the Board referred it to the City Solicitor to see if they could not stop the poles being put up, and also to see if, even if the company could go ahead with the poles, the city could not stop them putting power wires on them. If the Board receives a favourable report from the City Solicitor the indication was that they would refuse the request and that the Radial Railway Company may be crippled for want of power. Or else they may be forced to buy power from the city.

RUGBY GAME SUGGESTED

As another feature for the big Athletic Meet on Thanksgiving Day it has been suggested that there should be a Rugby game between the married and single men. The Benedicts are ready with a line-up already mapped out and it is up to the single men to get busy. It would be a splendid addition to what is already a noteworthy programme of sports.

COMMANDING CANADA'S HIGHLAND BRIGADE.— Colonel R. E. W. Turner, V.C., of Quebec, who commands the Highlanders (4 regiments) of the first Canadian expeditionary force to Europe. Colonel Turner is probably the most distinguished Canadian soldier to go with the contingent, though he is not a regular, but an officer of the volunteer militia. He wears the coveted Victoria Cross as well as the Distinguished Service medal for his work with the Canadian contingent in South Africa. He also wears the King Edward, the Seventh Coronation Medal and long service medals. It is predicted that the Canadian Highland Brigade, with such an experienced officer in command, will soon earn the complete confidence of Lord Kitchener and be early placed on the battle front with the flower of the British army.

PARIS, October 1.—Although it described the general situation as unchanged, the official war office statement made public at three o'clock this afternoon, declared that the French advances north of the Somme and in the Woevre region continue.

ANOTHER CASUALTY LIST

BERLIN, Germany, October 1.—The 38th casualty list published to-day, contains a list of 8,000 names, including three major generals, one killed and two wounded.

WILL HOLD CONFERENCE

WASHINGTON, October 1.—Sir Edward Grey and Ambassador Page are scheduled to discuss at London to-day or to-morrow questions arising from Great Britain's decision to seize American conditional contraband cargoes bound for neutral points. This was learned officially here to-day.

FOUR GIGANTIC BATTLES

VIENNA, via Rome, October 1.—Four gigantic battles and two fort borbardments, involving fully six million men of the Russian, German and Austrian armies are in progress in the eastern theatre of war to-day. As no point has there been any decisive result, and it will be several days before the fighting reaches a crisis.

ANTWERP, via The Hague, October 1.—The Germans continue their bombardment of the outer line of the Antwerp forts. Aviators who returned to-day from reconnoitering over the German lines, report that companies of engineers are apparently constructing concrete bases at a number of points. These, it is believed, will be used to mount the large siege guns which are now being rushed westward from Liege, and drawn by traction engines. The war office this morning issued the following statement, reviewing the situation,—"The German bombardment of the first line of forts continued throughout Wednesday; the Germans had the range but their shells had little effect other than slightly chipping the concrete at a number of points. It is not believed that it will be possible for the Germans to make a single breach in the Antwerp fortifications." It is also stated the Belgians are slowly retiring from the Termonde district.

CASE IS PROCEEDING

Mrs. Leavis and W. Nelson Charged With Keeping Disorderly House At 221 Brock Street

The case of Mrs. Leavis and Wm. Nelson, who were remanded some days ago on a charge of keeping a disorderly house at 221 Brock street, was commenced at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in a closed court. Alice Butcher, originally from Toronto, Margaret Tucker of Newfoundland, and Mrs. Bertha Green, of Toronto, alleged inmates of the house appeared as witnesses.

As stated previously the house in question has been under police surveillance for several years, but as the property belonged to Mrs. Leavis, considerable difficulty had to be overcome before access to the house could be obtained. At length, however, Adjutant McElhenny got hold of one of the girls and brought her to Chief Thompson who got a statement. The girl having been detained by the police, Nelson came and asked for her, and on the evidence of the statement the police arrested him. Subsequently on visiting the house, officers discovered quantities of morphine and other drugs, and the two other girls were ultimately detained. The case was brought up a week ago and adjourned owing to the indisposition of Mrs. Leavis.

Yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Leavis, pale, wan, wasted almost to a shadow, and showing visibly the effects of drugs, walked weakly into the court room supported by Mrs. McElhenny, and pleaded not guilty to the charge. Nelson made a similar plea from the prisoner's box. Mr. Widdifield, of Gordon and Widdifield, appeared for the defence.

Alice Butcher, the first witness, stated that she became acquainted with Mrs. Leavis through another girl, and visited that woman several times. Mrs. Leavis, she said, introduced young men visitors to her in the house. Referring to the result of it all witness stated that she gave Mrs. Leavis money, but none to Nelson.

Mrs. Green, the next witness, said she became acquainted with Mrs. Leavis through Mr. Nelson who introduced her for the purpose of helping in the house. The balance of her evidence was to the same effect as that of the previous witness.

Margaret Tucker, the third witness, gave evidence along the same lines. She became acquainted with Mrs. Leavis through a Mrs. Guy. Here the case was adjourned till this afternoon.

Continuing shortly before 3 o'clock this afternoon, a resident of the vicinity, who was called as a witness, stated that the house was noted for ill-fame. He, himself, had seen people going in and out of the house in such numbers and at such times as to cause remarks.

Another woman, "Fevvie" Butcher, also admitted having [illegible] house. She [illegible] Mrs. Leavis [illegible] ers are [illegible] son to go up town and get [illegible] y march [illegible] od heads" for money was [illegible] ey are gi[illegible] needed more morphine.

So it is all over. Well, we all thought so for some time.

OTHERS AFTER THE POSITION

It is stated about town that while G. W. Hatton has been regularly recommended for the position of County Crown Attorney, several other lawyers are presenting certain claims for the appointment. S. T. Medd and R. Ruddy are generally mentioned as being applicants. While Mr. Hatton has been supported by a large section of the prominent Conservatives of this section, it is understood that he will have opposition probably from the direction mentioned above.

South End Family In a Mix-up

That a thing, either abstract or concrete, effects individual minds in a different way is a well known phenomenon. This morning a South End lady and her mother-in-law gave their versions of the case when in the Police Court the former charged the latter with assault.

The young woman said that when she went to her mother-in-law's house to enquire for her husband, she was greeted with a blow upon the head with a broom. The older lady, however, stated that she had a baby in her arms and not a broom, and that furthermore her daughter-in-law knocked her down and kicked her. Can it be wondered that a magistrate is sometimes in a quandary.

His Worship allowed the case to stand over and exhorted the parties to live as became their relationship.

THE LIFE OF A WATCH

It should be cleaned and oiled once a year. Many dead watches are allowed to go without cleaning and oiling, and the result is the oil is entirely dried up, the pivots become cut and rusted so badly that it costs nearly as much as a new movement to put it in proper condition again. The old saying "A stitch in time saves nine" holds good.

BUILDING PERMITS SHOW INCREASE

To date this year there have been 275 building permits issued, amounting in value to $440,625. This compares favourably with the same term last year, during which time there were 229 permits issued, amounting to $381,446. Last month 23 permits were given out, totalling $32,166, an increase of nearly $10,000 over September of last year, when only seventeen permits, amounting to $12,100, were issued. The indication that the City has progressed, which may be taken from these figures, is borne out in other statistics in another column of to-night's Examiner.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS

It seems exceedingly early to talk of preparing Christmas gifts, but we have recently come across a unique idea on which we may spend a few moments at intervals from now until Christmas. This idea applies to the kodak owner, and it should therefore interest many of our readers, for the kodak is ever gaining in popularity on the farm and is a source of untold pleasure to the farm family.

Why not extend this pleasure to some far-away friends who have left the old home, by preparing books of kodak views and presenting them as Christmas gifts? We cannot think of any gift that would be more appreciated. It is a gift that we can have fully completed and out of the way before the Christmas rush begins, and it is also one from which we should derive a great deal of pleasure while preparing. Why not prepare such a gift for the friend who has left the old home place? We believe it would prove to be one of their most treasured possessions.

Montreal Citizen Is Dead and Son May Die — Man Arrested.

MONTREAL, Oct. 1. — Jules Lavergne, photographer, Ontario and St. Denis streets, was shot dead at six o'clock last night. His son, Rene, is in the General Hospital in a critical state from a bullet wound, and J. N. Judge Lanctot took Rene Lavergne's statement in the hospital last night, as it was thought he might not recover.

REPORT WAS EXPECTED.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1. — Official and diplomatic quarters united yesterday in discrediting a published report of a secret Anglo-Japanese agreement under which Japan was to have a free hand in China, was to be permitted to send Japanese immigrants to all parts of the British Empire, which would include Canada and Australia, and was to have a British loan of $200,000,000, while Japanese troops were to assist in putting down disaffection in British India.

At the British Embassy it was stated that official warning had been sent from London some time ago to be on the watch for such a report. British officials having advised the Home Government that the report would be set in circulation for the purpose of arousing antagonism.

GERMANS RETIRED.

They Report That Japanese Force at Kiaochau Is Overwhelming.

PEKIN, Oct. 2.—A German report from Tsingtau, the fortified position of the Kiaochau territory, sent by carrier pigeon to Tsinan, in Shantung Province, and thence to Pekin by telegraph, indicates that the German retirement from the second line of defence around Tsingtau, which took place last Monday, was due to the overwhelming numerical strength of the Japanese.

Continuing, this report says that the Japanese losses were 1,700 killed and 800 wounded, a result of the fire from German warships, coupled with the fire of machine guns on land. The German losses are described as small.

At the German legation in Pekin it was said yesterday that Germans caused the destruction early this week of the railroad bridge at Yayuho, six miles west of Weihsien, and that they will cause other bridges to be dynamited if the Japanese continue their westward movement. They will dynamite also all the Government buildings at Tsingtau when a further defence of that place becomes impossible.

GERMAN OFFICIALS BREAKING BAD NEWS

VON KLUK STILL RETREATS

LONDON, Oct. 2.—The following official announcement was issued by the French War Office last night:

"This evening there is nothing of particular importance to describe, except in the region of Roye, on the French left wing, where a violent action has successfully turned in our favor, and in the Argonne, where we have made progress at several new points. The general situation remains satisfactory."

The British war information bureau made it known yesterday that Indian troops were landed in France last Friday.

All unofficial reports agree that the army of Gen. Von Kluk is slowly retreating in the region north of the Somme, and that the long-predicted backward movement of the German right wing is at last taking definite shape. The belief obtains that he will retreat through the southern corner of Belgium, and thence through the Duchy of Luxemburg. Strong reinforcements have come up to the aid of the allied left, and the much-talked-of turning operation on the flank of the Germans continues without intermission. It is authoritatively stated that several towns until recently held by the Germans between the Oise and the Somme have fallen before the allies' advance.

Paris is enthusiastic over what is generally accepted as the German defeat in the greatest battle the world ever saw. It was said by an official of the Government yesterday that the French War Office will enter no claims of victory until the result is certain. The utterance of Gen. Galliéni a few days since, when he declared that victory would incline to the side able to throw the largest number of fresh troops into action, is recalled in connection with the British Indian troops on the far north of the allies' line. These are believed to have entered the fighting at the crucial moment.

A Rotterdam despatch to The Daily Telegraph says:

"The Germans in Rotterdam are aghast at the tone of the German newspapers which arrived to-day (Thursday). Only one meaning can be attached to what they contain—they are preparing the German people for defeat and the ruin of their hopes.

"Official messages ask that judgment be suspended if news should arrive that the German troops have been compelled to abandon certain positions.

"The British troops are mentioned as pushing on by the sheer weight of their masses, and the French are admitted to have taught a severe lesson. A week ago such statements would have meant the suppression of the newspaper printing them."

A correspondent of The Daily Telegraph in France describes the fighting between the allies and the Germans in the quarries where the Germans have been entrenched.

"From some of these natural fortresses," he says, "the Germans have been driven at last. It is rumored that they left others owing to the unburied dead, whose bodies poisoned the air. A quarry near the forest of Aigue was attacked under cover of a mist by the French, who drove out the defenders after desperate fighting. Another quarry was won similarly by the French, who set fire to several buildings and attacked the batteries under concealment of the smoke.

"A prisoner taken here, who was formerly a professor in one of the universities, said that the casualties during the past fortnight have been terrible. French bayonet charges have left the plains along the Aisne strewn with dead.

"Victory everywhere has been with the allies. The enemy's resistance has been broken, and there must soon be another retreat to the north and east. But the Germans must hold this right flank at any cost until the last moment in order to save the centre, which has been shaken by the British."

A Reuter despatch from Paris says: "A fight is proceeding on one part of the allies' left resembling that at Paardeberg, in the South African war. Nearly 4,000 Germans are in the same plight as Gen. Cronje was. They are completely surrounded by French troops in some quarries, where they are cut off from all hope of rejoining their division, and are being shelled."

At the town of Albert, 12 miles from Amiens, the Germans made a two-day attempt to cut through the allied lines. The fighting at this point was some of the bloodiest of the combat, resulting in tremendous losses to both sides. It came as the result of a sudden change in Von Kluk's tactics. Following his effort to counteract the flanking movement to the north, he suddenly concentrated heavy artillery at Albert and strove valiantly to cut through. The guns were supported by endless columns of infantry, and for a time it seemed that the assault would succeed, but the French brought up their redoubtable machine guns and the tide was eventually stemmed. On the French right the Germans have been driven back, and Metz is declared to be isolated. This narrows the route by which the Kaiser's armies can fall back, and will materially shorten the opposing battle lines.

German Organization Wonderfully Complete

American Newspaper Man Points Out the Ingenuity and Thoroughness of Attention to the Minute Details--How Each Man Was Provided With an Outfit.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—Six American newspapermen, representing various newspapers and news associations—Irving S. Cobb, Roger Lewis, John T. McCutcheon, James O. Bennett, Harry Hauson and Arnold Dosch—got themselves arrested intentionally by the Germans in Brussels in order to get within the German lines. They have been permitted to follow the German army provided they keep twenty miles away from the firing line.

They are having the time of their lives. They are extremely well treated by the German officers. One of the letters smuggled out contains the following interesting details of the thoroughness of the German army organization.

"Before the present war began no one outside of a few in the army knew the colour of the uniforms that were to be worn. Four million new uniforms, made of the peculiar dust coloured grey that blends so completely with a landscape, awaited the men who were to wear them.

Double Buttons.

"An item in the making of these uniforms illustrates the German ingenuity and thoroughness of attention to minute details. Suspender-buttons were sewn doubly upon trousers instead of singly so that, in case of the bursting of a button under the strain of moving artillery, a soldier simply moves the suspender along to the twin button.

"In four million lockers in barracks throughout the empire were these uniforms, each locker marked with the name of the man who was to use the contents. In each locker was a complete uniform, underclothing, socks, boots, helmet, rifle already loaded and oiled ready for instant use, and a canteen already filled with fresh water. Each day this water has been replaced by fresh water.

"In each locker was a stout paper bag with string attached, and on the bag was written the address to where it should be sent. When the order to mobilize came every man subject to the first call to army duty consulted his badge and found that he was to go at once to a certain locker in a certain place and in that locker he would find his complete equipment.

Amazing Detail.

"Arriving at the locker, he was to put on his uniform, and in a few minutes he was a soldier, complete, from the soles of his heavy boots to his cap. Almost instantly he was ready for the field.

"He was then to wrap his citizen clothes in the paper, already addressed, and leave the bundle by the locker, from where it would be collected and sent to his home.

"By means of such a thorough system the German army was mobilized so quickly and systematically that the world was amazed. Complete regiments, officers, horses, men, even the band, were ready for service at the end of the first twenty-four hours.

"Even the German reservist in distant countries knows that his uniform is waiting for him in a locker for which he carries the key.

"The secret of German military efficiency, said a German officer, was good infantry, good cannon and good cooking. Every morning the soldiers are given a hot breakfast. They march or fight until noon, when they are given a hot lunch; then they march or fight some more, have a hot supper, and then sing for a couple of hours.

Emergency Rations.

"Often in the evening I have heard soldiers singing, even after a long, gruelling day on the field or on the march. In the windows of their quarters they may be seen gathered about in groups and singing, while through other windows may be seen the officers poring over maps.

"'These rations,' said one of our officers, 'are placed in little tins, where they remain good for years.' He looked at the date on a box of lentil and said it was packed in 1911.

"'It will be good until 1931,' he remarked.

"It was like vintage soup.

"From one little tin an excellent soup is made, sufficient for two men at a single meal.

"With three hot meals a day it is not to be wondered that the German soldier is so sturdy and efficient. A look at a column of marching men shows them to be hard in muscle, with the strong, lean faces of men in splendid training.

"The German army supplies fine field glasses to its commissioned and non-commissioned officers, but in many cases the officers like to provide their own glasses.

Carries No Tents.

"The German army carries no tents. Its officers and soldiers are quartered in the houses of the towns and villages through which the army passes. Every house must furnish temporary quarters according to its capacity.

"The German officers during these stirring days never undress. One told us he had not had his clothes off for three weeks. Not even their boots or leggings are removed, so that, sleep or awake, the officer is instantly ready for duty.

"Among the men, each wears a ponderous boot, strong and ample in size, and which will fit almost any other soldier."

British Steamer Sunk.

CALLAO, Peru, Oct. 2.—The Kosmos steamer Mario arrived here yesterday with the crew of the British steamer Bankfields, which was sunk by the German cruiser Leipzig off Eten, Peru.

The crew of the Bankfields have appealed to the British consul here in the hope of obtaining their liberty. The men said that their ship carried a cargo of sugar valued at $500,000.

The Mario was followed into port by the German steamer Amasis, also of the Kosmos Line.

Would Tie Up Krupp Factory.

LONDON, Oct. 2.—Application for a receiver for the assets of the Krupp Company in England was denied by the court yesterday. The application was by a railroad creditor who desired to tie up the assets of the company in this country, before the end of the war would make it possible to remove them from England to Germany.

HOW RUSSIANS ENTERED CITY OF LEMBERG

Told By An Englishman Who Says Invaders Treated Population With Every Consideration

WELCOMED BY SLAVS

PETROGRAD, Oct. 1—A graphic story of the fall of Lemberg, Galicia, and the scenes attending the Russian occupation of the city has just been given by an Englishman who has just arrived here after witnessing those historic events.

"I am an engineer," he said, "and with a friend of the same calling, had a business in Lemberg. We were not molested in any way until about a week before the arrival of the Russians, when we were suddenly sent for by the Austrian police, placed under arrest and conveyed to prison. Simultaneously all our money was confiscated.

"We were kept in cells for four or five days during which time absolutely no food was given to us. Fortunately we received a small portion of drinking water each day or the "hunger strike" would have been as complete as any undergone by suffragettes in the London jails.

On the fourth or fifth day we were released, but we were both so weak from absence of food that we could hardly stand.

"Just about the time we were released word was received that the Russians were advancing upon the City and panic broke out. The entire Austrian administration fled precipitately.

"Defence of the City was not attempted at all. The Russians gave the demoralized Austrian military authorities, three days in which to surrender and evacuate the place so the inhabitants would be spared the horrors of a bombardment.

"On the third day toward the appointed time, a Russian aeroplane made its appearance over the city watching for the Austrian's departure.

"The Austrians fired upon the aeroplane, but it returned apparently uninjured to the Russian lines.

"Then the invaders made some show of opening a bombardment. I should say it was only a feint; at any rate no shells seemed to fall in the city. Surely the Russian gunners were not such bad marksmen as all of that.

"The noise of the Russian artillery was terrific and it scared the already panic-stricken townspeople almost into hysterics. Thirty-five thousand people, some of them residents of Lemberg and others refugees from the surrounding country, bolted helter-skelter. The large Jewish population of Lemberg was particularly frightened as the Austrians had systematically circulated stories that the Russians would massacre the Jews. They fled along the roads with many of their valuable possessions. Some had the advantage of horse carts and a few had automobiles. Weeping children and women rushed about with tearful eyes.

"Bankers made their escape with all the money belonging to other people and even the savings boxes of the poor people were broken open, and the money taken.

"Nobody was allowed to leave by train for Vienna unless he or she could deposit at the railway station the sum of 5,000 kronen which was to be returned when the depositor reached the capital. The reason advanced for this decision upon the part of the authorities was that the money was required as security for the ability of the intending traveller to meet the enormously increased cost of living in Vienna. Those seeking to go to Budapest were compelled to deposit 1,000 kronen. The cost of living there did not seem to be so high.

"There were pitiful sights in the streets, notably the spectacle of Austrian soldiers with wounded bodies—hatless, shoeless and in rags munching a crust of bread.

Numbers of them belonging to the Slavonic race got into civilian clothing and were to be seen carrying their uniforms under their arms in bundles. They said they were going to burn them.

"The utter disorganization of the Austrian military administration and the state of anarchy and chaos into which the Austrian war commissariat degenerated are beyond all criticism. The Austrian army itself proved to be disunited and an unwilling mass of men that fell apart in the face of danger. Many of them were only too glad to throw down their arms and surrender. When taken prisoner they fraternized like brothers with the Russians.

"The Russian army entered Lemberg in splendid condition. It was attended by an enormous provision train with every requisite in abundance. The inhabitants, especially the Ruthenian Slavs, met the Czar's soldiers with demonstrations of delight. The Russian officers were showered with flowers and men and women kissed their hands.

"Exemplary order was immediately established by the Russians, soldiers being used for police duty. The Russian Commander visited the city hall and declared that he wished to co-operate with the local authorities. This system proved so efficacious that the chief deputy went to the Russian Commander and thanked him.

"We ourselves were magnificently treated by the Russians who lent us money and enabled us to travel via Kiex to this city. We made the journey free of all expenses, first class, with a party of wounded Russian officers. We were told that we would not be expected to pay for anything and the Russians were offended when we tried."

In speaking of the Russian operations through the Carpathians a member of the war staff told me that the success of the Russians was one of the most notable in military history.

"Despite the generally accepted idea," he said, "that Russian troops are unable to operate in the mountains, as shown in the Manchurian campaign, the Russians on this occasion proved that under able leadership they are able to conquer alike on the plains or in the mountains."

The Russians are now on the point of securing the whole of Galicia from Roumania to the Carpathians. The Austrians are flying before the Russians advance guard which is sweeping along at a tremendous pace, and it is not likely that any serious resistance will be given the Russians until they are ready to attack Cracow.

The officials of Petrograd banks have placed at the Czar's disposal one million roubles ($510,000) for the necessities of war, and another million for the organization of a hospital service to aid the families of soldiers at the front.

TO REVIVE OLD OFFICE.

Gen. Joffre Will Probably Get Post of Marshal of France.

PARIS, Oct. 2.—The office of the marshal of France will probably be filled again soon. A decree issued Tuesday fixes a salary for that post, which has long been empty, and in the minds of the French people there is no doubt where the honor will be bestowed.

The marshal of France was the highest rank in the old royalist armies, and the post was retained when the French army was reorganized in 1875. It was provided then that the conditions under which the rank should be bestowed should be fixed later.

No one has ever been appointed to the dignity under the present French Republic, because, as The Matin says in an editorial yesterday: "No prominent figure has appeared in French military affairs who has merited it until the present commander-in-chief confronted the emergency of the present war."

The salary is fixed at 30,000 francs ($6,000).

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allen England

The rain steadily continued to drum down, now lessened, now again in terrific deluges of solid black water churned to white as they struck the sea and flung the froth on high. The two Americans passed an hour that afternoon in the old man's hut, drawing up a calendar on which to check as accurately as possible the passage of time as reckoned in the terms of life upon the surface.

They scratched this on a slab of slatelike rock, with a sharp iron awl; and, reckoning the present day as about October first, agreed that every waking-time they would cross off one square.

"For," said the engineer, "it's most important that we should keep track of the seasons up above. That may have much to do with our attempts to transplant this colony. It would never do to take a people like this, accustomed to heat and vapour, and carry them out into even the mild winter that now prevails in a present-day December. If we don't get them to the surface before the last of this month, at latest—"

"We'll have to wait until another spring?" asked she.

"Looks that way," he assented, putting a few final touches to the calendar. "So you see it's up to us to hurry—and certainly nothing more inopportune than this devilish rain could possibly have happened! Haste, haste! We must make haste!"

"That's so!" exclaimed Beatrice. "Every day's precious, now. We—"

"My children," hurriedly interrupted the patriarch, "I never yet have shown you my book — my one and greatest treasure. The book!

"You have told me many things, of sun and moon and stars, which are mocked at as idle tales by my unbelieving people; of continents and seas, mountains, vast cities, great ships, strange engines moved by vapour and by lightning, tall houses; of words thrown along metal threads or even through the air itself; of great nations and wars, of a hundred wondrous matters that verily have passed away even from the remotest memories of us in the Abyss!

"But of our history I have told you little; nor have you seen the book! Yet you must see it, for it alone remains to us of that other, better time. And though my folk mock at it as impostue and myth and fraud, you shall judge if it be true: you shall see what has kept the English speech alive in me, kept memories of the upper world alive. Only the book, the book!"

His voice seemed strangely agitated. As he spoke he raised his hands toward them, sitting on the stone bench in the hut, while outside the rain still thundered louder than the droning roar of the great flame. Stern, his curiosity suddenly aroused, looked at the old man with keen interest.

"The book?" he queried. "What book? What's the name of it? What date? What—who wrote it, and—"

"Patience, friends!"

"You mean you've really got an English book here in this village? A—"

"A book, verily, from the other days! But first, before I show you, let me tell you the old tradition that was handed down to me by my father's fathers, down through centuries—I know not how many."

"You mean the story of this Lost Folk in the Abyss?"

"Verily! You have told me yours, of your awakening, of the ruined world and all your struggles and your fall down into this cursed pit. Listen now to mine!"

CHAPTER XXXIII.

THE PATRIARCH'S TALE.

"In the beginning," he commanded, slowly and thoughtfully, "our people were as yours; they were the same. Our tradition tells that a great breaking of the world took place very many centuries ago. Out of the earth a huge portion was split, and it became as the moon you tell of, only dark. It circled about the earth—"

"By Jove!" cried Stern, and started to his feet. "That dark patch in the sky! That moving mystery we saw nights at the bungalow on the Hudson!"

"You mean—" the girl exclaimed.

"It's a new planetoid! Another satellite of the earth!! It's the split-off part of the world!!!"

"Another satellite?"

"Of course! Hang it, yes! See now? The great explosion that liberated the poisonous gases and killed practically everybody in the world must have gouged this new planet out of the flank of Mother Earth in the latter part of 1920. The ejected portions, millions of millions of tons, hundreds of thousands of cubic miles of solid rock—and with them the ruins of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Omaha, and hundreds of smaller cities—are now all revolving in a fixed, regular orbit, some few thousand miles or so from the surface!

"Think! Ours are the only living eyes that have seen this new world blotting out the stars! This explains everything—the singular changes in the tides and in the direction of the magnetic pole, decreased gravitation, and all the other strange things we noticed, but couldn't understand. By Gad! What a discovery!"

The patriarch listened eagerly while Stern and the girl discussed the strange phenomenon; but when their excitement had subsided and they were ready again to hear him, he began anew:

"Verily, such was the first result of the great catastrophe. And, as you know, millions died. But among the canons of the Rocky Mountains—so says the tradition; is it right? Were there such mountains?"

"Yes, yes! Go on!"

"In those canons a few handfuls of hardy people still survived. Some perished of famine and exposure; some ventured out into the lowlands and died of the gas that still hung heavy there. Some were destroyed in a great fire that the tradition says swept the earth after the explosion. But a few still lived. A one time the number was only eighteen men, twelve women and a few children, so the story goes."

"And then?"

"Then," continued the patriarch, his brow wrinkled in deep thought, "then came the terrible, swift cold. The people, still keeping their English tongue, now dead save for you two and still with some tools and even a few books, retreated into caves and fissures in the canons. And so they came to the great descent."

"The what?"

"The huge cleft which the story says once connected the upper world with this Abyss. And—"

"Is it open now?" cried Stern, leaning sharply forward.

"Alas, no; but you hurry me too much, good friend. You understand, for a long time they lived the cave-life partly, and partly the upper life. And they increased a great deal in the hundred years that followed the explosion. But they never could go into the plains, for still the gas hung there, rising from a thousand wells—ten thousand, mayhap, all very deadly. And so they knew not if the rest of the world lived or died."

"And then?" queried the engineer. "Let's have it all in outline. What happened?"

"This, my son: That a still greater cold came upon the world, and the life of the open became impossible. There were now ten or twelve thousand alive; but they were losing their skill, their knowledge, everything. Only a few men still kept the wisdom of reading or writing, even. For life was a terrible fight. And they had to seek food now in the cave-lakes; that was all remaining.

"After that, another fifty or a hundred years, came the second great explosion. The ways were closed to the outer world. Nearly all died. What happened even the tradition does not tell. How many years the handful of people wandered I do not know. Neither do I know how they came here.

"The story says only eight or ten altogether reached this sea. It was much smaller then. The islands of the Lanskaarn, as we call them now, were then joined to the land here. Great changes have taken place. Verily, all is different! Everything was lost—language and arts, and even the look of the Folk.

"We became as you see us. The tradition itself was forgotten save by a few. Sometimes we increased, then came pestilences and famines, outbreaks of lava and hot mud and gases, and nearly all died. At one time only seven remained—"

"For all the world like the story of Pitcairn Island and the mutineers of the 'Bounty'!" interrupted the engineer. "Yes, yes—go on."

"There is little more to tell. The tradition says there was once a place of records, where certain of the wisest men of our Folk placed all their lore to keep it; but even this place is lost. Only one family kept any knowledge of the English as a kind of inheritance and the single book went with that family—"

"But the Lanskaarn and the other peoples of the Abyss, where did they come from?" asked Stern eagerly.

The patriarch shook his head.

"Some other groups, probably," suggested Beatrice, "that came in at different times and through other ways."

"Possibly," Stern assented. "Anything more to tell?"

"Nothing more. We became as savages: we lost all thought of history or learning. We only fought to live! All was forgotten.

"My grandfather taught the English to my father and he to me, and I had no son. Nobody here would learn from me. Nobody cared for the book. Even the tradition they laughed at, and they called my brain softened when I spoke of a place where in the air a light shone half the time brighter even than the great flame! And in every way they mocked me!

"So I—I—" the old man faltered, his voice tremulous, while tears glittered in his dim and sightless eyes—"I ceased to speak of these things. Then I grew blind and could not read the book. No longer could I refresh my mind with the English. So I said in my heart: 'It is finished and will soon be wholly forgotten for ever. This is the end.'

"Verily, I laid the book to rest as I soon must be laid to rest! Had you not come from that better place, my thought would have been true—"

"But it isn't, not by a jugful!" exclaimed the engineer joyously, and stood up in the dim-lit little room. "No, sir! She and I, we're going to change the face of things considerably! How? Never mind just yet. But let's have a look at the old volume, father. Gad! That must be some relic, eh? Imagine a book carried about for a thousand years and read by at least thirty generations of men! The book, father! The book!"

Already the patriarch had arisen, and now he gestured at the heavy bench of stone.

"Can you move this, my son?" he asked. "The place of the book lies beneath."

"Under there, eh? All right!" And, needing no other invitation, he set his strength against the massive block of gneiss.

It yielded at the second effort and, sliding ponderously to one side, revealed a cavity in the stone floor some two feet long by about eighteen inches in breadth.

Over this the old man stooped.

"Help me, son," bade he. "Once I could lift it with ease, but now the weight presses my strength."

"What? The weight of the book? But—where is it? In this packet, here?"

Dr. Chase Is No Stranger

There is no better safeguard against disease and suffering than a good cathartic medicine. In the great majority of homes Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are constantly kept at hand, because they quickly awaken the action of liver, kidneys and bowels, and cure the most common ills of life.

Mrs. Thos. Smith, Jamestown, Ont., writes:—"Dr. Chase is no stranger in our home, for we have two of his Receipt Books in the house. My father and my husband's father each had one, and I ahve been familiar with it ever since I can remember. It was only natural that we should use the Kidney-Liver Pills, and we found them so satisfactory in regulating the digestive system and curing the common ills of life that we always keep them on hand. Many a time these pills have saved me much suffering and prevented serious disease. We also keep the Ointment in the house all the time."

Broiling or toasting is done better and more easily because the broiler door on a

MANAGING DIRECTOR

Present War May Cure Kaiser's Heir of His Bellicose Tendencies

THE Crown Prince of Germany, the Kaiser's eldest son, has apparently come into his own, so far as fighting is concerned, although whether or not the outcome will be to his liking is a story yet unfinished. Indications are that it will not.

For years he has been a leading advocate of a warlike policy for Germany. He has identified himself entirely with the army. He has resented anything that bore the faintest resemblance to a slur upon it, enthusiastically commended utterances of a militaristic tendency, and became at times so outspokenly belligerent that his imperial father was compelled to curb his ardor. An instance of this was his "banishment" to Danzic a few years ago; and it was authoritatively reported that similar measures were contemplated after the Crown Prince's praise of Lieut.-Col. Frobenius' recently published pamphlet, "Germany's Fately Hour," in which that officer spoke of England's "stealthy plans" plans against Germany, France's thirst for revenge, and Russia's hatred of all things Teutonic.

RECEIVED IRON CROSS.

But now this youthful advocate of militarism finds the war which he believed imminent actually under way. And, instead of "banishment" and repression, he has received from his father, the emperor, the much-coveted Iron Cross for a brilliant victory placed to his credit against the French in Lorraine. It would certainly appear that the fire-eater has come into his own with a vengeance.

What manner of man he is becomes now a matter of general interest, and, to supply the information, a book called "Der Kronprinz," by Dr. Paul Liman, has made its opportune appearance in Germany.

Dr. Liman paints an attractive portrait of the Kaiser's heir. In spite of all his vagaries, we learn that he is popular throughout Germany, totally devoid of "side," and the keenest sort of a sportsman. Moreover, we hear of him as a diligent reader of books, especially on history, and as a warm admirer of Napoleon, despite the fact that the great Corsican humbled Germany to the dust in his campaigns. In Napoleon, says Dr. Liman, the Crown Prince sees not a "parvenu," but a genuinely great man.

BANISHED TO DANZIC.

During the Crown Prince's long stay in Danzic at the head of his regiment—a stay forced upon him as a punishment, it is said, for his obstreperousness in Berlin—he gave plenty of chance to those desirous of studying his character. This part of his career is summed up by Dr. Liman thus:

"People qualified to judge declare that Crown Prince Wilhelm kept his regiment at Danzic in excellent shape. He knew every man and every horse, concerned himself with every detail of the service, gave personal attention to everything, and saw to it that he should not be accused of being a mere figurehead."

Nor did his military duties take up all his time. Like his father, who has dabbled in the fine arts, his heir also has tried his hand at composing music and painting pictures. But, avers Dr. Liman, he is not at all conceited about his productions. When he has finished a picture he smilingly inquires of those privileged to see it whether they can guess what it represents—a snowy landscape or a negro chieftain, "still life," or a battle scene.

A HARD WORKER.

He does his duty just like any one of his comrades, from early morning until the moment when the rest of his fellow-officers are relieved And sometimes even he stays behind a couple of hours to listen to the instructions of superior officer, cheerfully observing: "Oh, my wife will send me some sandwiches and a half bottle of wine!"

Dr. Liman writes for Germany where he is required to say things prettily and admiringly. There are less pleasant stories of the Crown Prince, and one of them has it that it was another of his boyish exuberances which plunged Europe into the present war. And rumor also says when the Kaiser returned to Berlin and found what had happened he struck the prince in his anger. History will probably have something to say on the subject later on.

An aged offender who has tried all forms of punishment told a British court that he prefers penal servitude; it's a comfort to have a settled suit look, even in jail.

THE WIDOW PEPPER'S TACTICS.

They Brought Quick Results In Two Love Affairs.

By HARRIET WHITNEY.

It was 7 o'clock Monday morning, and the smoke of Louisy Cottonwood's wash fire in the back yard was threading its blue haze into the fresh, early air.

Louisy's father, Lyman Cottonwood, striking out cross lots, lagged a little while he started his after breakfast cob pipe. His gaze dwelt ruminatively upon the big ash hopper a few moments, then traveled back to the form of his daughter just appearing from the smokehouse with a tub in her arms.

"Louisy!"

The young woman turned her head around, set her tub upon a backless chair and came forward, her low, flat shoes patting softly over the short "goose grass." Her figure looked skimp in its blue calico washing gown; her locks were hempy in color and not too plentiful; she had gathered them up high and twisted them so tightly that the outer corners of her eyes were drawn upward like those of a Chinese woman.

"Louisy," said her father, leaning an elbow on a corner of the hopper, "I was goin' to tell you an' furgot; the Widder Pepper's a-comin' up today for a basket of windfall Spy apples to make dumplin's, an' I gotter be at Harris' all day helpin' thrash. You show 'er where the good ones is at, an' don't you pass 'er none. You understand?"

"I ain't carin' how many Spy apples she gathers. Reckon apples wasn't the only thing you an' her was settlin' about yes'day evenin'."

"Wull"—Lyman looked off slantwise across the hopper—"I got 'er penned up as clost as you ever kin pen a woman. The darned contrary birds won't never give you a square but 'yes' tell after the preacher's sent for. But you kin count on havin' a stepma before pumpkins is ripe."

"I wouldn't think, then, paw"—Louisy's voice became mildly reproachful—"seein' how happy you're a-goin' to be, you'd begrutch me—an'—an'—Sam"—

"Louisy Jane Cottonwood, how many times I gotter tell you that's difrunt? Now, listen yere"—he ticked off his points with the forefinger of his right hand in the spread palm of the left—"I told you the what fors an' why nos yes'day, an' that's nuff said. An' now listen at this: Ef I don't find Sam Dorkins at Harris' thrashin' today it's a sign he's over yere, an' ef he is you'll see me back, an' you'll see me bounce Sam over the fence into the brush quick enough to jolt his ears crooked. Now, mind what I've told you."

Louisy shed so many tears over her wash that morning that when the fat little Widow Pepper came with her basket she cast many sharply inquisitive glances at the red rings of the forlorn maiden's eyes.

"Looky here, Louisy Cottonwood," said she at length as the two trudged up to the orchard, "you ain't been actin' the baby 'cause your paw wants to marry ag'in, hev you?"

Louisy shook her head.

"I wouldn't care a speck if he married tomorrow if he'd have the manners to leave me an' Sam Dorkins alone."

"Humph!" said the widow. "What's he layin' up against Sam?"

"Nothin' particklar, but he 'lows there's no sense of me a-marryin' for half a dozen years er so. He's countin' on takin' a lot of city folks to board of summers after you an' him air married, an' he says two women'll be needed to cook for 'em."

"Well, I say!" Mrs. Phebe Pepper brought the exclamation out with a chop. Then she stopped in the path and laughed with a heartiness that threatened to break her apron-strings. Mrs. Pepper was short and wide, and her little round, dark face expressed a mixture of good nature, shrewdness and obstinacy.

"He's a curious old plant, your paw is," said she, "but I've jist got this to say: If any man o' mine ever takes my summer boarders he'll do the cookin' or else he'll hire it done."

Louisy shook her head dissentingly.

"You'll think different when paw gets you."

"He ain't got me yit," said the widow cheerfully. "Looky here, Louisy, how old air you?"

"Thirty-three," confessed Louisy, with a slight blush.

"The law me! An' you're scared to marry without your paw says you kin?"

The blush widened, taking in Louisy's ears.

"You don't know paw," said she dismally.

"Couldn't more than kill you, could he?"

"Some folks' tongues is worse than killin'."

The widow trudged forward in silent self communion, which lasted until they reached the Northern Spy apple tree. Louisy began to fill the basket with the bright streaked wintlings, but Mrs. Pepper plumped herself down comfortably into the clover.

"Sam Dorkins is goin' on forty," said she meditatively. "He's a sight nigher to my age than yourn."

"Oh, I was jist a-thinkin'," the latter observed carelessly, biting juicily into a big apple. "Me an' Sam was allus good friends. Better stay now, Louisy. That's spray on I his pant."

* * * * * * *

Lyman Cottonwood was in the corner lane between his cornin field and his tobacco patch stopping a gap in the fence when a thudding of feet on the mellow earth drew his attention. A broad shouldered fellow was swinging briskly along with an ax on his shoulder.

"Hello, Unc' Lyme!" he hailed cheerfully.

"Here, you, Sam Dorkins!" Lyman barred his way with belligerent elbows. "This yere lane's a private one, ef you want to know it, an' you's gotter keep 'way from Louisy Cottonwood whether you want to know it er not."

"I ain't a-goin' to tote the lane off with me, ner Louisy either. I wasn't aimin' to stop yere. Didn't know as I'd spile the lane goin' through it to the Widder Pepper's."

"Widder Pepper's!" bawled Lyman frantically. "What business you goin' anywhere nigh the Widder Pepper?"

"Cousy now, Uncle Lyme," grinned Sam; "don't hev a fit. Reckon I kin go chop a little stove wood fer a good lookin' widder without you floppin' up like a skyrocket. I've knowed the widder a-many a year."

"I don't care a con taked turnip seed what you're knowed," foamed Lyman. "The widder kin git stove wood without you a-cuttin' it. You take an' let that widder alone or you shuck off yer coat an' watch out fer me."

"Sure now," returned Sam, "you know I'm a younger man 'n you, Uncle Lyme. Better not be too biggety. You may think you're the only speckled bean in the bill, but widders is notionated an' kin fly about t'other way as easy as a flapjack. An' the country's free, as I've heard say. There's no statute that says two men shan't spark one widder, an' I reckon my chances is good as yourn ef I choose to stake 'em right hearty. You kin fence me off from Louisy, but you can't fence me off from the widder."

"I kin send you flyin' over them rails," declared Lyman wrathfully.

"Well, now, I ain't right shore it 'd be good policy to tackle the job," said Sam argumentatively. "You got right smart of rheumatiz, ye know, Uncle Lyme. Ye might pitch me over an' ye mightn't. Now, I'll tell you what. The widder's in need of stove wood. I shall go there an' cut it fer her an' stay to supper 'r else I'll loan you my ax an' leave you go cut the wood fer her, an' I'll go in an' talk to Louisy a spell. Which'll it be?"

Lyman leaned against the rail fence, his brain whizzing with new battery ideas. The desirability of the widow had increased tenfold since this bold rival had proclaimed himself so determinedly. What was Louisy in comparison? The ideas came to a focus. He stepped forward resolutely.

"Han' over the ax," he said briefly, "an' go 'long in. Louisy's ironin'. You an' her kin be as big fools as you want."

When Mrs. Phebe Pepper, looking from her doorway, saw Mr. Lyman Cottonwood coming up the walk with Sam's ax on his shoulder her black eyes sparkled with fun.

"I 'lowed that would fetch Lyme ef Sam worked it all right," she said to herself, with a smothered chuckle, "an' mighty lucky thing fer Louisy Cottonwood her future stepmaw's got a leetle grain o' gumption, seein' Louisy don't know no more 'n a goslin' how to tend to her own love affairs."

Had Nervous Dyspepsia

With Frequent Sick Headaches and Much Pain After Eating — Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Cured.

This letter is from a lady who gained 14 pounds by using the great food cure. It did wonders for her in improving her general health. She is enthusiastic in its praise, and refers to her neighbours as witnesses of the splendid results obtained.

Mrs. Susan oDbson, Spring Hill Mines, N. S., writes:—"It is with pleasure that I write to you in praise of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I was troubled with dyspepsia, and could not eat without suffering much pain; also had sick headaches frequently, and my nerves were in bad condition. About ten years ago I took a thorough treatment of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, using altogether 21 boxes, and since then can eat anything, have been freed from headaches, and my health has been greatly improved in every way. I gained 14 pounds in weight, and feel sure I owe everything to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. You may use this letter, and my neighbours can tell you of my condition before using this treatment."

Vanity.

There is a stirring of the spirit captive in the worn mesh of the body. People are breaking down under the tyranny of material possessions. There was never a time when women's intelligence was so eager and inspirational; never a time when men were so weary of metal and meals and miles. It is all clear to a prophetic understanding that we are nearing the end of our lessons in three dimensions and five senses.—Will Levington Comfort.

Gold Coins.

The first gold coined in Rome was known as the aureus or aureole. This coin was issued in 207 B. C., and its face value varied at different times. According to conditions it was worth from about $3 to $6.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, Port Stanford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her, and on recommendation of a friend, I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

Prolonged Applause.

It was at the end of the second act of the worst musical comedy of the season—absolutely the worst.

"What are you applauding for?" said the thin man to the stout person at his side.

"To show how thankful I am that the curtain's down at last," replied the stout person as he reached for his hat.

One Result of The War Is Certain

CANADA must Manufacture for part of the World now involved in War.

Let Peterborough enlist in this movement to boom Canadian Made Goods.

Let Peterborough Manufacturers get on the job, and let us read, mark and hear more of "Made in Peterborough" Goods.

How many good-going factories in Peterborough never tell our own Citizens what they manufacture.

SCENES IN TERRITORY WHERE FRENCH STOPPED THE GERMAN LEFT WING

1 Chalons-sur-Marne is a garrison town of France, on the right bank of the River Marne. It is an old walled town and the seat of a bishopric, and is of great historical importance. It was known as the Roman Catalaunum in the Third Century; witnessed the defeat of Tetricus by Aurelian in A. D. 274; the defeat of Alemanni by Jovinus in 366, and in the district, the Catalaunian Fields, in 451, was fought out one of the fifteen decisive battles of the world, according to Sir Edward Creasy, when the Romans and their allies, the Visigoths, defeated Attila and his Huns. The town successfully resisted the English attacks in 1430-1434; it was taken by the Prussians in 1814 and by the Russians in 1815. In 1870 it was occupied by the Germans after its evacuation by MacMahon of the celebrated camp established at Chalons in 1856 by Napoleon III.

2. The little village in the distance is Gravelotte, in Lorraine, about eight miles west of Metz; it gave its name to what has been considered the most important battle of the Franco-German War. The battle was fought on August 18, 1870, and was third in the series about Metz, following General Bazaine's attempt to retreat from the Moselle to Chalons to effect a junction with the army of General MacMahon. General Bazaine, after two battles, and in fear of being cut off, fell back upon Metz, and finally abandoned all hope of joining General MacMahon. The German forces, which consisted of the armies of Steinmetz and Prince Frederick Charles, and which were commanded by King William in person, numbered about 200,000 men, and suffered a loss of more than 20,000 in killed and wounded. The French out of 180,000 engaged, lost nearly 600 officers and more than 13,000 men.

3. Saales Pass, between Bonan on the German frontier and Nancy on the French frontier, which was used for the passage of the German troops into France and also by the French into Germany at the beginning of hostilities. It is the main artery of travel from Nancy to Strassburg and is a deep cut through the mountains. The boys in the picture are "wurstels" from the university in Strassburg.

4. Ram sur Plaine, the last of the French villages on the frontier and directly under the Donon Hills, which you see heavily-wooded mass fighting. The little old woman, washing her clothes at the town pump, said she never had heard of England or the United States.

5. Schirmeck, in the Donon Hills, west of Strassburg. It is in German territory and was the first village captured from Germany by the French and later recaptured by the Germans.

6. Cirey, just within the French frontier, and where the first engagement was fought on French soil. Village was captured from the French and later recaptured by the French. The photograph was taken from German territory. The Donon Hills in back of the village.

Height of Waves.

Among the most trustworthy scientific measurements of ocean waves are those of Lieutenant Paris of the French navy. The highest waves measured by him were in the Indian ocean between the Cape of Good Hope and the island of St. Paul. Thirty waves measured during a northwest gale there averaged twenty-nine and one-half feet in height, and six of them, following one another with beautiful regularity, were thirty-seven and one-half feet in height. Some still higher waves were seen, but not measured. In a moderate breeze the length of a wave was found to be about twenty-five times its height, but in a gale only eighteen times. — London Globe.

A Kind Wish For Mother.

"Have you a pain, muvver?" he asked sympathetically. When she nodded he thought a minute and then exclaimed:

"I wish a fairy would come and turn your pain into a piece of cake." Then the small boy asserted himself over the angel child, adding, "And I would eat it."—New York Sun.

Poor but Respectable De Maryon—I am a—a distant relative, sir.

"Indeed! How distant?"

"Well, sir, as distant as they can keep me!"

What Rules the World.

When Napoleon caused the names of his dead soldiers to be inscribed on the face of Pompey's pillar some one criticised the act as "a mere bit of imagination." "That is true," replied Napoleon, "but imagination rules the world."

BRAZIL'S FINE CAPITAL.

Rio de Janeiro Is a Beautiful City, With No Poor Quarter.

"There are some cities very beautiful from a distance, but noisome and shabby when once they are entered. Rio de Janeiro, on the contrary, is beautiful when seen from afar and is delightful on intimate acquaintance. The streets are clean. The main thoroughfares are broad, and no other city has so many miles of smooth asphalted streets. Automobiles swarm and trolleys abound. The public buildings are handsome, the private buildings very picturesque and in northern eyes," writes Theodore Roosevelt in the Outlook, "possess a most attractive foreign flavor. The water supply is ample and not only healthful, but delicious. The sanitation is excellent. For over half the year the climate is delightful, and during the remaining months there is close at hand a cool mountain retreat.

"Altogether it is difficult to write of this city of over a million people without expressing astonishment that both its beauty and its greatness are not more widely understood.

"The condition of the poorer people is, I am assured and as I thoroughly believe, far removed from the misery of the slum dwellers in the great cities of the northern hemisphere. There is no especial quarter for the poor, nothing in the nature of a slum district, and there is much effort of one kind and another to provide decent living conditions for the poorest."

MAJORITY TYRANNY.

Its Despotic Sway, For Instance, in the Matter of Dress.

The tyranny of majorities is not confined to politics. It invades all fields, demands obedience from all classes and brooks defiance of none.

Women tolerate a certain style of garment because they imagine a majority of womankind at the moment is demanding it. They obediently follow suit for fear of exciting attention or unfavorable comment.

Men and women are bound too much by others' opinions. Society, of course, is built on conventions. But conventions sometimes become tyrannical. One should know when to follow their dictates and when to ignore them. In the matter of dress, for instance, why should any one endure a style he detests merely because the majority at the moment is wearing it? Why should not a long necked man wear a tall collar, if he prefers it, even though it does cause pain to the chins of all sympathetic observers?

Frankly the question is without an answer. Perhaps people tolerate majority tyranny in such matters merely because they are accustomed to it. A caged animal presumably knows nothing of freedom until he has tasted it.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Just Like the Salad.

A young man named Smith boarded with an emaciated aunty of ample years, who seemed to take the view that most any old thing was good enough to hash up for fodder. One day chicken salad was served, but it was merely another demonstration that there is nothing in a name.

"By the way, Mr. Smith," severely remarked the landlady, as the meal progressed, "how do you like the chicken salad?"

"That reminds me," irrelevantly answered Smith, "I bought a book today and told them to send it around here. Did it come?"

"Yes," replied the landlady, with a puzzled expression, "but why should the chicken salad remind you of it?"

"Coincidence, Mrs. Slymm," was the mean rejoinder of Smith. "The book is half calf, you know."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Ancient Cloisonne Enamels.

The ancient artists who made those exquisite cloisonne enamels which bring such high prices made them by the following laborious method: The outlines of the design to be executed in enamel were cut out in the metal plate in such a manner that between the limits of the colors in the enamel a narrow metal ribbon was left standing. The space within the outlines was worked out with the graving tool, the surfaces left standing being made as rough as possible. In the hollows the mass, made into a thick paste with lavender oil or water, was placed and fused fast in the muffle, this process being frequently repeated. Finally the surface was ground and polished.

Appropriate.

A family of children, after the usual Saturday night romps, gathered in the drawing-room for music and singing. As bedtime was drawing near the mother said:

"Now, children, choose one hymn to finish up with, and then you must all say 'Good night'."

"Let's have 'Ere Again Our Sabbath Close'," suggested a bright little girl of about seven years of age.

"Well, I think that would be more suitable to-morrow evening," replied the mother.

"Oh, but you always air our Sabbath clothes on Saturday, mummy!"—London Tatler.

The Woman and the Serpent.

P. T. Barnum and his wife were very fond of the gifted sisters Alice and Phoebe Cary, who often visited them at Bridgeport. To a friend the famous showman once remarked: "Alice was the more thoughtful, while Phoebe was always bubbling over with good spirits and wit. I never knew a brighter woman. One day I was taking her and some friends through my museum. 'At the head of the stairs was the cage containing 'the happy family,' which included owls, cats, mice, serpents and other creatures generally mortal enemies, but all living in perfect harmony, mainly because we kept them so stuffed with food that they had no temptation to prey on one another. The cage stood directly at the head of the stairs, and just as we reached the top a big serpent stretched its head toward Phoebe. Forgetting the glass that separated them, she was so startled that she uttered a scream and would have fallen backward down the steps had I not caught her. Looking up to me, she said : 'Thank you, Mr. Barnum! But remember that I am not the first woman that the serpent has caused to fall.'"

An Infantile Composite.

"Well, really, I can't say that I think that he looks just like any one in particular," said the mother of Master George Herbert Sandersou Spriggins, four weeks old, to a caller who was having the privilege of seeing George Herbert Sanderson Spriggins for the first time. "I don't think that he has his father's chin, and his nose is just like my father's, and his eyes remind me of my sister-Helen's. The shape of his face is a good deal like his father's brother Joe's, and sometimes when he laughs he reminds me of my brother Ted. Often when he is asleep I think that he resembles my uncle George, and again he has a way of half closing his eyes that makes me think of his grandfather Spriggins. I think he is growing to look more like my side of the house excepting for the upper part of his face, and that reminds me of his father's family. Still, I can't say that he really looks just like any one but himself unless it is my sister Eva's little boy. Strange how family resemblances crop out in mere babies, isn't it?"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Lesson for Sunday, Oct. 11, 1914, The Last Supper. Mark xiv:12-25.

I have had a lot of butter in wrapped prints and packed in wooden boxes in a cool cellar during the summer. This butter now has a flavor of the wood, some of it quite strong. Is there any process by which the woody flavor may be removed, or how can it be made most saleable?—E. Hastings Co., Ont.

Woody butter cannot be improved very much except by a process of renovation and rechurning, but this is contrary to the Dairy Industry Act of 1914. See Section 5, Clause (c), which states that no person shall "melt, clarify, refine, rechurn or otherwise treat butter to produce what is generally known as 'process,' or 'renovated' butter, nor add any milk or cream to butter." This law therefore prohibits any process which we might employ to improve the butter under discussion.—L. A. Zufelt, Supt., Kingston Dairy School.

PRINCE LICHNOWSKY

Late German Ambassador to London and Social Life

Prince Lichnowsky, who was sent to London in 1912 by the Kaiser as Ambassador, is essentially a diplomat of modern method and point of view. The German Embassy at London under his predecessors, Prince Hatzfeld and Count Wolff-Metternich, was almost a hermitage. For years it was socially, unimportant. Many students of the psychology of Anglo-German tension attribute it to the fact that the wire between the German Embassy in London and the great though molding circles of British life and society has long been out of working order. Prince Lichnowsky, finding the wires down, proceeded to put them up. Forthwith he set himself a task of mixing about and of seeing and knowing people.

Public opinion rules in England, and he perceived it his business to keep in touch with those who make it. He accepted invitations to address public dinners of the Royal Society, the Lord Mayor, and the Chambers of Commerce, and embraced the opportunity of the Kaiser's birthday dinner of the German "colony" in London to discuss his mission and the ambitions he cherished for it. Supported by a particularly brilliant consort, the Princess Mechthilde Lichnowsky, née Countess Arco von und zu Zinneberg, he caused it to be known that the all-important social phase of diplomatic life was to him a thoroughly congenial obligation, and that he purposed living up to it.

The Prince is 53 years old, and is the head of a Silesian family of ancient aristocratic lineage, with large estates at Kuchelna and Gratz. His mother was a Princess of Croy. The son of a Russian general of cavalry, he himself began life as a soldier, and was a brother officer of the present Kaiser in the Life Guard Hussars. William has always taken a lively interest in the careers of men who were with him at the university and in the army.

PHOTOGRAPHERS BARRED

Generals Do Not Wish to Have Important Secrets Made Public

Emperor William issued orders that any man caught by his troops in the field with a camera in his possession is to be summarily shot. Similar orders were issued from French headquarters. Still, tactful persistence has worked wonders, and it may do so again in the present instance.

So far as moving pictures are concerned no process has proposed a partnership arrangement with the Kaiser in a series of war movies. The best genuine moving pictures of real war were taken by Capt. Saul, a retired British army officer in the Balkan conflict. Capt. Saul was with the Turks. He got some fine pictures of the Turkish rout at Lule Burgas and also of the fighting around Kirk-Kilisch. He also got some splendid pictures of burning villages, camp scenes, and other details of war.

Since the days of Napoleon, war correspondents, a term later enlarged to include photographers, have been regarded not merely as a burden on the general staff, which has quite enough on its hands without them, but also as a source of the gravest danger to the army. However carefully his despatches may be censored the correspondent is certain to get in something that betrays the strategy of his side to the enemy.

BLOOD AND TREASURE

In the past war has been sufficiently prodigal in its squandering of life and gold. During the past century alone it reaped a harvest of 14,000,000 lives; in one great struggle, that between France and Prussia, the death roll totalled 800,000, and on three battlefields—Borodino, Moskowa, and Leipsig—more than a quarter of a million soldiers were either killed or wounded. The price paid for the Franco-German War in gold was $2,580,000,000 (including France's indemnity); and the American Civil War is said to have cost 600,000 lives at a cost of $10,000,000,000.

Such was the price paid for war in days before the science of death dealing was really out of its cradle and its rapid progress during the last generation has advanced it as far from the day of Sedan as Sedan was removed from Agincourt.

Schoolboy's Prank Recalled

The Prince of Wales has Prince Alexander of Battenberg for a brother officer in the Grenadier Guards. Prince Alexander is the eldest of Princess Henry's three sons, and is a brother of the Queen of Spain. It is of Prince Alexander that the story is told how, when a schoolboy, he wrote to his grandmother, Queen Victoria, asking for "slight pecuniary assistance." The Queen wrote him rebuking him for his extravagance. Shortly afterwards he acknowledged the letter in these terms: "Dear grandmother, I am sure you will be glad to know that I need not trouble you for any money just now, for I sold your last letter to another boy for thirty shillings."

PARTICIPANT TELLS OF FIRST AIR FIGHT

Duel in the Clouds Between Rival Aviators Armed With Automatic Pistols But Without Bombs

The chief factor in the first actual "Battle in the air," Sergeant Werner of the German aviation corps, told an English war correspondent his story. It is a remarkable tale of adventure eclipsing those of fiction writers. Attacked by a powerful British biplane and a 90-mile an hour Bleriot, Werner only escaped through a most fortunate combination of circumstances which led him to pilot his machine inside the German lines.

"The men who hold the reserved seats in the theatre of war, who see the battles as not even the Generals can see them, are the airmen," said Werner.

"I had received orders to locate the enemy's forces and to determine their exact battle lines and those of their French supports. Accompanied by Lieutenant Von Heidsen, who was detailed as expert observer, I went up in my big monoplane and headed directly south from Moss following a broad and plainly marked road. We passed over the edge of a magnificent forest in which more than 40,000 inhabitants of the surrounding country had taken refuge. After flying for more than an hour we passed directly over the English headquarters and I was able to locate the positions of the commander-in-chief and his staff. We accurately mapped this position and then swept across the French position paying especial attention to the locations of their artillery, much of which was masked in pieces of wood and behind buildings and hedges.

Opponent Far up in the Sky

"Lieutenant Von Heidsen made rough sketches of everything while I was intently watching the country when suddenly the lieutenant pressed my arm and pointed upward. At that time we were nearly 6,000 feet in the air. I looked in the direction in which he was pointing and there fully 1,000 feet higher than we were and coming at full speed directly towards us, was a big Bristol biplane.

"It was evident from the start that he was far speedier than we were. I tried to climb upward realizing that when he got over me he would drop a bomb and we would be blown to pieces. But the effort was in vain. The Bristol held me for speed. I could not get on a level with him. Soon the Bristol was directly over our heads. I was not afraid, but this was a moment of suspense that took years out of my life. I was sure the bomb was coming.

"The Bristol had reduced her speed until she was keeping pace with us. She was also slowly coming down. Swooping lower and lower, the Bristol came. At last I knew how a bird feels when an eagle or a hawk is sweeping down upon it. I thought every minute was to be our last. I was certain that what the British were trying to do was to get so close that their bomb could not miss. My nerves were entirely unstrung and it was all that I could do to keep my monoplane on an even keel.

Opened Fire With Pistols

"Suddenly I saw a flash alongside of me. For a moment I thought that the expected bomb had struck. Then I realized that the Lieutenant was shooting with his automatic pistol. The Englishmen had their propeller in front and so they could not shoot from that position. It was now certain they carried no bombs as they veered off some 300 feet to the side at the same time keeping 150 feet above us.

"All this time we were headed northward again toward the German lines. The plunging of the aeroplane made accurate shooting difficult, although one shot struck my plane. It was very evident that the Englishmen were shooting to disable our motor and we were doing the same thing on our part. The noise of the discharge of the automatics was drowned in the whirr of our propeller.

"There was a feeling of utter helplessness so far as we were concerned. Our machine was far slower than theirs. I kept figuring on when the next bullet would strike, as with their greater speed, they seemed certain finally to get us. While this thought was passing through my mind the lieutenant again touched me and pointed thousands of feet higher.

Third Aeroplane in Fight

"There coming at tremendous speed was a small Bleriot monoplane. It looked for all the world like an eagle coming to join the attack. I felt certain now that the end was in sight as nearly all of the French aviators carry bombs and the speed of the newcomer far greater than the Bristol.

"But the Bleriot also failed to have bombs, and was forced to depend on pistols. Swooping up and down, encircling us, and all the time firing at us, the Bleriot kept on. Minutes seemed like hours to me. It was certain there could be only one end to the fight, although the Lieutenant kept firing in return, as calmly as at the rifle range.

"Suddenly, however, German troops appeared below us. They began firing at the enemy, and the Bleriot and the Bristol, finally exhausting their ammunition, sailed off to the south unharmed. We then landed with our reports, which were especially valuable, because of the location of the French artillery. However, I would not want to go through such an experience again."

Werner is an enthusiastic student of aviation, and is a typical German soldier. He entered the army after graduating from a university, and his face and scalp are seared with dueling scars.

"FOR VALOR"

The Victoria Cross and its Equivalent Under Other Flags

All the Great Powers of Europe have some reward for conspicuous valor and bravery on the field of battle, and although the plain bronze Victoria Cross is the youngest of such decorations, only dating back to the Crimean War in 1856, it is the most valued possession in many a Briton's home to-day. The Austrian Cross, on the other hand, is the oldest.

A similar reward in Germany is the Iron Cross, instituted by the Emperor Frederick William III. of Prussia in the year 1813. Russia gives as a decoration to its heroic soldiers the Cross of St. George, which was found ed by the famous Empress Catherine II. in the year 1769, and, while the Victoria Cross is of bronze, and the Iron Cross, as its name implies, of iron (which is edged with silver), the Russian Order is of gold, with a beautiful medallion of St. George killing the dragon. In Austria, again, the cross is of gold, and was instituted in the year 1757 by the Empress Marie Theresa soon after her succession to the throne. It bears the same inscription as the British Victoria Cross, ours having, in English "For Valor," and theirs in Latin the word "Fortitudinf."

The Order of the Legion of Honor which is the reward in France, was instituted by the great Napoleon, and he decreed that every soldier who was decorated with that honor should have the additional distinction of being entitled to receive a military salute from officers, non-commissioned officers, and private soldiers.

NAVAL DICTIONARY

Battleship and Cruiser.—The cruiser is less heavily armored than the battleship and carries fewer guns. It is built primarily for speed and for keeping the sea a longer time than the battleship. Hence it has greater coal capacity.

In a modern naval conflict the cruisers are especially valuable to turn or hold the enemy until the slower battleships can come up.

The dreadnought is the most modern type of battleship. It has been evolved since 1905. It is a battleship more heavily armored than ever, carrying, as a rule, big gun batteries only, with the exception of small guns for repelling torpedo boat attacks, and it is capable of making very high speed. The superstructure is much shorter than on the battleships of fifteen years ago. A distinctive feature of the dreadnought to a layman's eye, is the long, low stern, the entire half of the main deck being clear of everything but gun turrets.

Submarine and Submersible.—The former is the general name for a torpedo boat which is capable of navigating entirely under water. The latter is the name for the particular type of submarine which can travel for distances of several hundred miles on the surface, under steam of gasoline, and then dive below when it is time to go into action, electric motors being used. The submarine proper is usually a smaller craft, with electric motor only, and hence with a small range of action and useful chiefly on the defense. The submersible is equally valuable in offensive action.

KITCHENER'S TREAT

Humorous Story of the War Secretary's Human Side

Since the appointment of Lord Kitchener to the War Office many little personalities are being told of him. One messenger's story follows:

"Well, after I'd handed in my despatches, I goes into a bar and pays a shilling for a bottle of Bass—the first I'd had for weeks, and cheap at the price. The place was full of young officers, and they was all pretty merry, when, looking around, we see a big chap standing in the doorway. It was Kitchener, and before you could say 'Smoke' I was the only chap left—just me and him. 'Who are you?' he says. 'Carrying despatches and waiting for replies,' I says. 'Show me your papers,' he says, and I shows him. He looks at them and hands them back. 'Have another Bass,' he says. That's the sort of man Kitchener is."

Only Eight Field Marshals

A British field marshal never retires from the army. He may be placed on half-pay, but is still borne on the active list.

By the regulations there must not be more than eight field marshals receiving pay as such; that is, exclusive of honorary field marshals such as foreign kings, emperors, and princes. Of the eight regular field marshals two must be selected from the Indian army.

The position of field marshal is a great one. The field marshal commander-in-chief in the Mediterranean gets $25,000 a year. Probably a field marshal actively employed will get at least $15,000 a year.

This is better than the pay of an admiral of the fleet, who may be said to be a naval field marshal, and gets only a little over $10,000 a year, exclusive of allowances.

English Jews Patriotic

"England has been all she could be to Jews; Jews will be all they can be to England. We know but a single cause, a single passionate desire. Our cause is the cause of England; our desire is the triumph of England." In these striking words, the "Jewish Chronicle" expressed the patriotism of English Jews.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY

"My boy Frank seemed weak-chested and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." His treatment is as thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

BOMB DROPPING FROM AIRSHIPS

Clearly Illegal as Applied to Undefended Cities—Britain Favored Its Entire Prohibition

The use of aircraft for the dropping of bombs into unprotected parts of cities, causing the death of non-combatant women and children has created a very great indignation and strong feeling against such fighting from the air.

According to international rule "the bombardment of towns, villages, habitations or buildings which are not defended" is forbidden. As early as the Brussels Conference of 1874 an attempt was made to limit the activities of aircraft by the addition of the words "by any means whatever" to the rule.

During the Franco-Prussian War of 1870 some attempts were made to use balloons for observing the movements of the hostile armies. The status of aeronauts had not been defined at that time, and Bismarck ordered that any who might be captured be considered as spies. As a matter of fact, a number of them were taken prisoners, but were treated as military prisoners and were not executed. It was not until the first Hague convention, in 1899, that the position of balloonists in time of war was defined.

Airmen Are Not Spies

The conference decided that balloonists are not spies if they are sent "to deliver despatches" or to "generally maintain communication between the various parts of an army or territory." The ruling fails to provide for the treatment of aviators who may be captured in the act of gaining information.

As soon as there was some indication that flying machines might be perfected, the international lawmakers were at once struck with the question of their use for the dropping of explosives. The same conference at which the laws concerning the treatment of airmen taken prisoners during the war were passed took an important stand on the explosive question, and one which, it is to be regretted, has not been continued.

In January of 1899 Count Mouravieff, of St. Petersburg, sent a circular to the states to be represented at The Hague in which he urged "the prohibition of the discharge of projectiles or explosives of any kind from balloons or by any similar means."

Prohibited Bomb-dropping

The subject was given a brief consideration and the law suggested by the Russian count was adopted for a period of five years, which expired on September 4, 1905.

Eight years later it appeared that the action of the tribunal was not prompted so much by humanitarian feelings as by the belief that aircraft were not destined to play an important part in any war in the near future. When the second gathering at The Hague took place, in 1907, it was impossible to inspire any of the great European powers with the sentiments to which they had unanimously subscribed in 1899. The progress made in the science of aerial navigation had been so extraordinary that the military powers were deeply interested, and very few of them wished to give up this new method of attack.

Britain Favored Reholition

England and Austria-Hungary were of the party in favor of the limitation of armaments, and accordingly favored restriction of the use of aeroplanes.

After much discussion a vote was taken on a measure providing for the continuance of the prohibition adopted at the 1899 convention until the termination of the Third Peace Conference, scheduled for 1915.

Of the forty-four states represented only twenty-seven adopted the measure, and the only important countries to do so were England and Austria.

The signing of this declaration by these two nations will have no effect in the present war, because it is expressly provided that if either of them has an ally in any war who has not adopted the measure it is not binding on them. So fighting continues on land, on sea, and in the air.

A French decree provides for payment of daily subsidies to foreigners whose breadwinners are serving with the allied forces.

The Mathematical Problem.

Little Marion was busy at her "home work." After a great many perplexed frowns and much nibbling at her pencil she looked up and said:

"The only answer I can get to this example is 'five and three-fourths horses.' Do you s'pose that is right, mamma?"

A long pause; then the small arithmetician's face lit up with a smile.

"Oh, I know," she cried; "I'll reduce the three-fourths horses to colts!"

Part of the Treatment.

After being treated by a specialist for a month the stout personage anxious to reduce his bulk received his bill. He gasped, hastened to the doctor and arrived in great perspiration.

"Doctor, doctor!" he exclaimed breathlessly, "this bill is as big as I am. I haven't lost an ounce."

"Tut, tut," replied the specialist affably; "the bill is part of the treatment. I see it has made you perspire."

New York's Public Schools.

Public education in New York city began with the founding of the Free School society in 1805. The society started in a small way, depending for a time upon public subscription. By an act of the legislature in 1842 the board of education was established. The Free School society continued to conduct its schools until 1853, when by mutual consent, they were all taken over by the board.—New York American.

Seemed All Right.

"Mamma, why don't you want me to play with that Kudger boy?"

"Because, dear, I know the family. He hasn't good blood in him."

"Why, mamma, he's been vaccinated twice, and it wouldn't take either time."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

An Up to Date Medieval Tale

By RUTH GRAHAM

I am a wireless telegraph operator in charge of a station situated on a lonely coast. I have an assistant who takes my place at night for a week; then I take the night and give him the day. There are one or two others connected with the station who are not operators. One of these is a fine chess player, and having him with me enabled me to while away many an hour when I had nothing to do.

Now, what I am going to relate I don't ask any one to believe. I should certainly not believe it myself if any one told it to me as a bona fide experience. I do not say that I didn't dream it; that I did not experience it when unconscious. I make no explanation whatever. That you are at liberty to do for yourself. I only assert that to me it was an actual occurrence.

One night when I was on duty alone I amused myself when not sending or receiving a message working out solitaire problems on the chessboard. Presently I heard a footfall behind me, and a man stepped into the operating room. The moment he did so I heard the sound of distant thunder.

"We're going to have a storm," he said. "I prefer spending the time while it lasts in here than outside if you don't mind."

I assured him that he was welcome, though I confess he was not. I did not like his looks; there was a sinister expression on his face. There was no one within call, and I rather objected to being alone with him.

"I see you play chess," he said. "I'm very fond of it myself. We might have a game while waiting for the storm to be over."

"Are you not afraid to be in an electrical place like this in a thunderstorm?" I asked.

"I afraid? What is there to be afraid of?"

"A bolt."

"A bolt!" sneeringly. "Young man, do you know what electricity is? No? Well, I have always known what it is. Perhaps you think this towering affair of yours something wonderful. It's very clumsy. But I'll admit it's an improvement on the old system of wires. You don't feel the electric waves rolling around the globe, do you? I do. They are dashing against me all the while."

This is a bad go, I thought—alone with a madman; a storm coming on. There only remains to get an "S O S" call to make the situation diabolical.

"Come," said the stranger, taking a seat facing me and pulling the chessboard partly on his knees, "let's have a game."

A vivid flash of lightning and a simultaneous crash sent a thrill of horror through me, but seemed to have no more effect on the stranger than if some one had struck a note on a musical instrument. I feared for the apparatus towering over our heads. My visitor, having placed the men, moved a pawn. I was too bewildered to play. I did not touch a piece.

"Come, come, Mr. Operator" said the stranger. "Don't be rattled by a little thing like that. You'll get something more exciting before long. There's a ship out there only about a hundred miles. She's running at full speed into a mist. But the lookout doesn't see it; he's asleep. If you wish to know who made him doze, I did. I put the steamship company up to trying to get on with a reduced force. That did the business. Check!"

I suppose I had played mechanically and without knowing it, for the word "Check!" woke me up to the fact that my pieces as well as the stranger's had left their original places, and, collecting my rattled faculties, I took in the situation, which was that my king was in check.

I doubt if there is anything except chess that under the circumstances would have kept my faculties absorbed. I have a passion for chess problems, and despite the storm and the disagreeable expression on the man's face I entered into the game with all my mind. I soon got my king out of check, but in another moment he was checked again. I heard the instrument click, but at the moment saw a chance to checkmate my antagonist, and, fearing the combinations would leave me if I delayed, I went on with my moves. But my antagonist eluded me, and I was brought up with another "Check!"

It was evident that I was in a hole that would require all my brain power to get me out of, and, though I was conscious of the rattling of the instrument, I did not know what was being transmitted. I got out of this hole only to be led into another, with an occasional chance to checkmate my antagonist, such opportunities always ending in failure.

Then came a break, and the next thing I knew I was lying on the floor and my assistant at the instrument. The stranger had gone.

"What's the matter?" I asked.

"Matter! Why, there has been an S O S call rattling on the key for more than an hour. The Alula of the Blue Anchor line has struck an iceberg and gone down with all on board. This is her nearest station and the only one she could reach."

I relapsed into an unconsciousness from which I did not emerge for some time. When I did I was told that I had been struck by lightning. Was the stranger a dream or a reality?

SHAVES IN STRANGE PLACE.

Daredevils Who Remove Their Beards Under Difficulties.

Konschel, an Austrian aviator, performed an unprecedented feat a few days ago for a bet, when he shaved himself while circling the Vienna flying ground at an altitude of 3,000 feet. During the operation — after the preliminary and comparatively easy process of lathering was concluded—he had to steer with his feet, as he required the left hand to hold his cheek, while with the right he wielded the razor.

On more than one occasion the celebrated Blondin undertook successfully a similar achievement while standing upon a rope stretched across a giddy gulf. Indeed, he once performed this item of the toilette while carrying a passenger on his back—a passenger who in this case must have been himself a cool-headed gymnast, as after his supporter had finished he in his turn took the razor in hand and removed a day's growth from his chin.

Every now and again some daring Figaro has gained bold advertisement by exercising his calling in the unrestrained presence of the king of beasts. During the stay of Myers' Circus at Huddersfield a local barber wagered $25 that he would enter a cage of lions and shave their trainer within a space of five minutes. He won his bet with two minutes to spare. Even more foolhardy was a Norwich (Eng.) barber, who, in similar circumstances, shaved the trainer at Day's Menagerie, for, on one of the lions approaching somewhat too near, he gave the inquisitive carnivore a taste of the lather-brush.

Guillaume Duprat, Bishop of Clermont and founder of the College of Jesuits, at Paris, narrowly missed being shaved in his own cathedral. Duprat was the possessor of a beard so magnificent and luxurious in its growth as to awaken envy in all clerical hearts—envy even in those of his canons, who, so far from being proud of their chief's hirsute adornment, assembled in full chapter and resolved upon its removal. Preparations were made, and when next the bishop appeared in the choir a procession of ecclesiastical dignitaries, headed by the dean, advanced down the aisle carrying barber's basin, hot water, soap, and razor. The bishop, however, divined their intention, and promptly taking to his heels, managed to reach his castle of Beauregard, where, after a brief illness, he died of chagrin at the indignity which he had so narrowly escaped.

Louis I. of Bavaria issued an ordinance in 1838 forbidding citizens under any pretext whatever to wear moustaches, and directed the police to see that his will was promptly obeyed. Moustaches disappeared with astonishing celerity, the authorities having only on rare occasions to exert their power, which they then did with drastic promptitude, as when, on receipt of information that a wealthy banker, who had not yet complied with the order, was enjoying a bathe in the Isar, they procured a boat and, having supplied themselves with the necessary implements, overtook the swimmer, whose moustache they cut off there and then while he trod water.

When You Want To Laugh—Eat!

And If You Want to Eat Without Food Fears Take a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet After Each Meal.

Laughter, smiles and mirth never go with a "caved-in" stomach. Fancy a-man-afraid-of-his-food laughing! There is always that haunting feeling that a sick stomach is nothing to be mirthful about.

"May-day grouchy days are funny to me now."

Just make up your mind to help nature help herself. Give your body a chance to make good. Heal the raw edges of your stomach and give your blood the tools to make digestive fluids with.

There is only one way to make the body well — give it the chance to make itself well. Harmful and strong medicines handicap the system. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets go into the stomach just like food. They are dissolved and there they strengthen the weakened juices of the digestive apparatus until the digestion is made normal.

There is nothing mysterious or magical about them. Science has proved that certain ingredients make up the digestive juices. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are these concentrated ingredients—that is all there is to it. One grain of a certain ingredient contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of food. This illustrates how you aid nature to restore her worn-out materials. When a stomach which is filled with food receives a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet, it is more able to digest the food than it would be without it. The work is not so hard nor the task so long.

When the meal is finally assimilated the entire system absorbs more nourishment and harmful food effects are eliminated easily, quickly and with the maximum of benefit.

Every drug store carries Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. To anyone wishing a free trial of these tablets please address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich., and a small sample package will be mailed free.

BIG BATTLE AT CRACOW

Second Great Struggle of Eastern Campaign Has Begun—Germans Send More Troops

RUSSIANS IN FORCE

LONDON, Oct. 2. — The expected engagement before Cracow opened yesterday. The forces of the enemy include the Germans and Austrians and Saxon corps, in addition to a considerable number of first line troops transferred from France. The Austrian forces comprise the entire remainder of the army with the exception of that part which is opposing the Servians. Gen. von Hindenburg, variously reported during the last few days as being seriously ill and as being hurt by a fall from his horse, is in command.

The Russian, under command of Gen. Ruzenskampf, number approximately 1,000,000 men at this point, and as many more are available as will be necessary. Gens. Russky and Dimitrieff are co-operating.

Another German army, driven from the Town of Augustowo, is engaged with a force of Russians estimated at 500,000 men in the forest of the same name, which is cut up by many small lakes. The ground is very favorable to defensive operations and the defenders of Cracow expect their army in that vicinity to protect their flank.

A Petrograd despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. says:

"In the Suwalki district from the bank of the Germans the Russians foiled two determined attempts to force a passage of the Niemen river between Olita on the north and Druskieniki on the south. Military critics point out that with the capture of Augustowo and Kopitzovo the Russians have broken the German centre.

"The German line extended from Ossowetz to Simno, and the Russians with great bravery have expelled the Germans from their entrenchments on the lakes, which are divided by only from two to five miles of dry land.

"According to the newspaper the German losses at Druskeniki amounted to 50,000. The rains have rained the roads so that many German guns have been embedded and lost."

The special correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co., who has just returned to Petrograd from a tour of the Galician battlefields, reports that from Lublin southward he found the country devastated and deserted, and the villages burned or razed to the ground.

At Tomaszow depots for Russian trophies of war has been improvised in barns. Among the prizes are rows of howitzers, quick-firers and mortars, many of which have not even been fired, and the majority of which were undamaged. The Russians proposed to establish a special battery of artillery with the guns.

The correspondents found Jaroslaw surrounded with barbed wire, behind which were entrenchments and undamaged earthworks.

"The flight of the Austrians after a short bombardment," he says, "appears to have been a most panicfull monous action."

Kaiser Rushes Troops East.

ROME, Oct. 2. — (Via Paris.)—According to despatches reaching here, all the Bohemian and Moravian railroads are congested with German troops and war material, which are being transported to the Russian frontier. Germany is making a supreme effort to face the Russian advance and all civilian transport has been forbidden.

Despatches from Vienna say that the Austrian staff is entirely dependent upon that of Germany, which has assumed supreme command in the campaign against Russia.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The British War Office has issued a call for 1,000 expert railroad men to assist in the operation of the French railways.

The crew of the steamer Selby, sunk by a mine in the North Sea while on a voyage from Shields to Antwerp, was landed at Lowestoft yesterday.

An official message issued at Budapest, according to a Rome despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co., states that Hungarians have recaptured Uzsok Pass in the Carpathians.

The ratepayers of the Township of Kitley voted down by a large majority a bylaw to bonus the proposed Gananoque, Arnprior & Ottawa Railway to the amount of $25,000.

Prompt measures in procuring and forwarding warm clothing for the French soldiers for the winter is urged by the national committee appointed to take charge of that work.

Henry De Marse and Alton Heath, river guides, residing at Thousand Island Park, were drowned in the river near Grennell Island while making a crossing between these two points.

Starting in a shed at the rear of a building, fire did considerable damage yesterday afternoon to a block on Main street, Galt, owned by M. Brock Wilkins of Toronto. The loss is $10,000.

Lt.-Col. T. G. J. Bouchon is listed as "killed on the field of honor" in the latest French casualty list. He was one of the French leaders in the campaign of the great nations against China in the Boxer rebellion.

The coroner's jury at Montreal yesterday brought in a verdict of murder against J. N. Lapree for shooting Jules Lavergne in the latter's photographic studio Wednesday. Lapree lies dangerously wounded at Notre Dame Hospital.

COMB SAGE TEA INTO GREY HAIR

Darkens Beautifully and Restores Its Thickness and Lustre at Once

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn grey, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant; remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier ay is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, grey, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all grey hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.

Troops From India Land In France

Times' Correspondent Describes the Landing at Marseilles.

LONDON, Oct. 2.—A special correspondent of The Times wiring from Marseilles says:

I have seen the proud Princes of India ride at the head of thousands of troops, princes and men alike fired with all the ardor of the East, determined to help to win the Emperor's battles or die. Of far greater significance than the mere making of history, I saw welded before my eyes what may well prove to be the strongest link in the singularly wonderful chain which binds the British Empire together. The hot day had just begun to lift from the bay when suddenly an interminable line of steamships crept along by the adjacent islands. The awakening port knew that the long-expected ships with Indian troops aboard had arrived.

With precision the expedition of transports swung into the harbor and moored alongside their appointed quays.

Native and British alike stepped ashore, all in magnificent condition. Every road within a mile of the docks was a mass of excited Latins. Every second-storey window and every roof was a coveted vantage seat.

All the troops are in khaki, with only slight differences in design. Some of the British contingent from India wear short pants, identical to those of Boy Scouts. Others wear knickerbockers that cover the knees. The puttees are the same as those of the army at home.

The head-dress in every instance is the turban. This also was khaki, but the different regiments and different castes show slight distinctive markings. The most pronounced is the band of green interwoven with khaki in the Gurkha's turban.

WOUNDED AT COLOGNE.

Sixty Thousand Germans Have Arrived From Alsace.

LONDON, Oct. 2. — The Evening News prints a despatch from Copenhagen saying that 60,000 Germans wounded have arrived in Cologne, most of the men being victims of the artillery duel along the Aisne river.

In a large number of cases the men had their legs blown off by exploding shells.

MOTHER! THE CHILD IS COSTIVE, BILIOUS

No matter what ails your child, a gentle, thorough laxative should always be the first treatment given.

If your little one is out-of-sorts, half-sick, isn't resting, eating and acting naturally—look, Mother! see if tongue is coated. This is a sure sign that its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with waste. When cross, irritable, feverish, stomach sour, breath bad or has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, sore throat, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated poison, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

Mothers can rest easy after giving this harmless "fruit laxative," because it never fails to cleanse the little one's liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach and they dearly love its pleasant taste. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs;" then see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Oct. 1.—Unusual crop estimates and big receipts more than offset in the wheat market today the influence of encouraging cables and of war scares for Tuesday. There was a small close, 1½c to 1¾c under last night. Other leading staples, too, all showed a net decline—corn 1c to 1¼c, oats ½c to 1c, and provisions 7½c to 62½c.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Oct. 1.—The export of grain from this port is practically at a standstill. All enquiries received from abroad for some time have been cut of line, and every day go lower than on the day previous. The decline which has taken place in American and Canadian markets is more than taken care of in the prices offered by foreign buyers. The receipts of wheat were large here again today and the local demand practically nil. It is believed that eventually the demand for foreign account will be much greater and that prices will therefore be higher. In the meantime, however, prices will no doubt reflect the piling up of stocks at all points.

The cheese situation was featureless except for a few transactions between local houses at firm prices.

Butter remained easy, as did the market for eggs.

The provision market was firm but inactive.

WORK FOR FACTORIES.

Canada Gets Contract For 100,000 Shrapnel Shells.

TORONTO, Oct. 2. — Further details of the arrangement announced on Tuesday, by which Canadian manufacturing firms will supply the British War Office with large numbers of shrapnel shells, were given out yesterday by officials of several Toronto concerns. In a nutshell, the contracts mean work for 250 or 300 Toronto men at tip-top wages for an indefinite length of time. The shops contracting will work, some of them, 24 hours a day. Galt, Sherbrooke, Dundas, Welland and Orum in other places are also seen to take some of this contract.

The manufacture of these 15 and 18-pound shrapnel shells is a delicate and exacting piece of work, subject to unit'ing Government inspection. It also requires considerable special machinery and tools, which the Canadian firms are now collecting.

The War Office has placed an initial order in Canada of 100,000 shells. Before doing so a commission was put to work to report if Canadian manufacturers could make shell.

Henry Savage Landor Missing.

LONDON, Oct. 2.—A. Henry Savage Landor, the explorer, is missing from the place in Antwerp where he had been stopping for the last two weeks, says a despatch to The Pall Mall Gazette, from Antwerp. The correspondent adds that it is feared that Mr. Lander ventured beyond the outer line of fortifications and has been unable to return to the city.

THE CRISIS STRUGGLE OF THE BATTLE OF THE AISNE IS NOW IN PROGRESS

Thousands Of Germans Killed In Assault Upon The Belgians At Antwerp

Stupendous Struggle On The Aisne Is Now At Most Critical Stage

Both Lines Have Been Reinforced, Allies Have Big Naval Guns and the Last Throw is Being Made Along a Far-Flung Battle Line.

Surgeons Are Far Too Few for Wounded and Many Are Left to Die on the Field---Paris and London Both Register Cheerful and Confident Feeling.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, OCT. 2.—WITH BOTH THE GERMAN RIGHT AND THE ALLIED LEFT HEAVILY REINFORCED, THE BATTLE ON THE NORTHWEST LINES HAS NOW ECLIPSED IN INTEREST DEVELOPMENTS AT EVERY OTHER POINT OF THE LONG BATTLE LINE. THE GERMANS, ALREADY PARTLY FLANKED, AND WITH THEIR LINES OF COMMUNICATION THREATENED, ARE DECLARED TO BE FIGHTING WITH DESPERATION ENGENDERED BY DESPAIR, TO TURN THE TIDE IN THEIR FAVOUR. THEY ARE ASSAULTING THE ALLIED POSITIONS WITH THE UTMOST VIGOUR, BUT SLOWLY AND INEXORABLY THE IRON RING IS BEING EXTENDED AROUND THEM

The laconic utterances of the General Staff merely emphasize this fact. Thousands of men are being sacrificed in this particular movement. British and French naval brigades are fighting side by side with the infantry. The Indian troops are already engaged, and are declared to be giving a good account of themselves; and every man is being utilised to stave off the final German attempt, which also has the assistance of fresh troops, who have been withdrawn from the Rhine forts and from Alsace-Lorraine for one last attempt to turn the tide of defeat into victory.

NOT ENOUGH SURGEONS

PARIS, Oct. 2.—The Red Cross is simply swamped. There are nowhere near enough surgeons. The wounded are for the most part forced to travel alone because of the great need for the surgeons to remain at the front rendering first aid. Many of the wounded passing through here are Germans. So fierce has been the fighting that the Germans have been unable to gather their wounded or bury their dead, and the territory gained by the allies is littered with dead and wounded foes. Hundreds of both sides who might have been saved had doctors been able to reach them ,have died unattended, suffering untold agonies from wounds, hunger and thirst. Everyone who has returned from the actual battle ground unites in declaring that the horrors surpass belief.

WORST IS OVER AND BEST MAY BE HOPED FOR

LONDON, Oct. 1.—G. H. Perris, the Daily Chronicle's special correspondent in Paris, telegraphs,—"At last! The gleam of to-day's sunshine is nothing to the smile that irradiates the faces of those in the Invalides and elsewhere who know it has been a bitterly long wait for good news. The relief is extraordinary. The public must wait for details, but the censors will hardly deny one the satisfaction of stating that the worst is over and that the best may be hoped for."

JAPANESE HAVE DROPPED BOMBS

TOKIO, October 2.—Bombarded by the land batteries of the British-Japanese expedition and by the great war fleet steaming slowly backward and forward in front of the harbour entrance, the German concession at Kiao-Chou is reported to-day to be on fire at several points. There has been no let up of the shelling of the position by night and day although up to the present there has been no attempt made to carry the main position by storm owing to the constant fire of cruisers interned in the harbour. The fire from the German sqadron and from the German land forts is extremely deadly. German aviators are reported as having done good service to their cause. The Japanese fleet of aviators, however, have rivalled their enemies and dropped bombs at many places.

SHORT CHANGE ARTISTS GIVEN EIGHTY DAYS

William Barr and Charles Rose Sentenced by His Honour Judge Huycke in County Court This Morning

A LIGHT SENTENCE

Charles Rose and William Barr came before His Honour Judge Huycke this morning for sentence, the latter having been found guilty on three charges of theft, and the former on one charge. The case of Rose and Barr, who have come to be known in this city as the two short change artists, has been in progress for over a month now, and has interested a large number of local people. There were quite a number in the Court Room this morning when sentence was passed. Both were given eighty days with hard labour.

In sentencing the two young men, aged 18 and 21, His Honour said that it was not because the crime was not a serious one that the sentence was to be a light one. The offence was mean and grave, but a light sentence was about to be given to give the young men a chance. It was their last chance, and if the young men did not take it they would never get another one. The sentence of eighty days was imposed on condition that full restitution be made of the stolen money, and that the fathers of the young men meet them at the prison door when they were released and take them home. The period of eighty days had been fixed because they could be again with their friends at Christmas time.

"I hope that there is something in you yet that will make you aspire to an honourable life," said Judge Huycke. "The action I am taking may harden you to a life of crime, or it may give you an opportunity to which your manhood may respond to make you useful members of society. If I thought that the former were the case I would impose a sentence as heavy as the law allows, but I am disposed to take the other view of the matter. After thinking over the cases I am still of the opinion that you have been rightly convicted. You have been ably and faithfully defended. It is not a pleasure for me to see two bright, vigourous boys choose a life of crime, but no matter how sympathetic I am, (and I am sympathetic), I can not close my eyes to the enormity of your crime."

Before sentence was imposed Mr. V. J. McElderry for the defendants made an eloquent and effective plea for the young men. He pointed out that this was the first series of offences that these young men had been guilty of. Their crimes had not been vicious ones, but traceable in a large measure to the impulses of youth. A youth of eighteen or twenty-one, unfortunately, could not be expected to have the head of a man on his shoulders.

Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the C.P.R. Railway, calling attention to the fact that the perpetration of these crimes was endangering the life of the victims of these men and other passengers. It was their custom to leave the train while it was still moving, after they had stolen the money, and if they were pursued the occurrence might well lead to the injury and death of their pursuers.

The Crown was represented by Mr. J. Wearing.

Rose and Barr were convicted on charges of stealing money by short change methods from several people, the amounts aggregating nearly one hundred and fifty dollars.

NEWSY FELL FOR WOODEN MONEY GAME

The noisy newsboy was strangely quiet. The sparkle gone from his eye, the leaden movement of his feet, the absence of assertiveness in his progress up the street were all indications of some calamity that had befallen him.

"Look what some old farmer pulled on me," he said to a reporter, as he produced what appeared to be a twenty-five cent piece. Turning it over the sign "one cent" was shown. The copper had been silvered or tinned, and easily passed as a quarter in the hurry of selling newspapers.

"How did you know he was a farmer?"

"He was a seedy old guy and looked like one. There was a bunch around me and I thought he gave me a quarter. The skunk did me for twenty-four cents."

The reporter tried to tell the boy that the species farmer does not remain up after 9 p.m. even though the night is silvery, and besides the farmer has real money these days.

"I get nuthin' for to-night's work," snapped the boy. "The low-life bum, I wish I could get a poke at him."

GERMANS EXPLAIN RETREAT

Say They Have Withdrawn From Unimportant Positions Rather Than Sacrifice Lives Needlessly

SAY OUTLOOK IS BRIGHT

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Oct. 21.— The following official despatch from Berlin contains the first official admission by the German war lords that they have lost ground at any point. It is argued by French-British military critics that when they admit so much the German line must be getting beaten all along the line of battle of the Aisne. Apparently that attack on Antwerp at the present time is to draw attention from the general retirement of the German forces to a position within the German frontier.

BERLIN (via the Hague), Oct. 2.—The War Office in its announcement to-day stated that the troops operating against the German right wing were attempting a general flanking movement, but that steps had been taken to prevent their success. It was stated that fighting on the line west of the Oise and north of Noyon and along the line of the Somme continues with the utmost severity, but at no point in that region have the allies been able to carry any of the German positions. On the centre, the artillery duel continues with the Germans holding their strongly entrenched positions have been abandoned to the French rather than uselessly sacrifice lives in holding them. In general it is stated that the situation continues satisfactory to the general staff and the outlook for ultimate victory is very bright.

TAKE OVER ONLY THE CONTRACTS RECOMMENDED

Business Men Enquiring About Their Position Regarding Light Matters—Consumers Will Not Suffer

ALL MOVED OUT TO-DAY

This morning the final load of Light and Power Company property was removed by the city from the George street office of the company. It consisted of office fittings, desks, stools, partitions, etc., and marks the actual taking over of the operation as well as the ownership of the company's property.

Considerable interest is being shown by local business men who are anxious to know if their five-year or other contracts with the Peterborough Light and Power Company will be taken over and fulfilled by the city. In reference to this it might be stated that not even the authorities know the answer to that question. The city is not bound to do it, and have only to take over the contracts that the Hydro-Electric Commission recommend. If the Commission recommend any of these contracts the city must take them over. Mr. Howse said to The Examiner, however, that in nearly every case these contracts were above the figures that will be charged according to the new rates so that the consumers will not suffer if the contracts are not taken over and new ones with the city are made.

SPEEDED CAR THROUGH LINDSAY

On Monday evening two Peterborough young men journeyed to Lindsay in a grey car, and spent a portion of the night with certain parties. They evidently laboured under the impression that they could run their car at any speed over the thoroughfares without being interfered with, and let out their machine at a forty-five-mile-an-hour clip on Kent and Lindsay Streets. Constable Woods was on the job, however, and chalked down the car number. Chief Short has made out the necessary papers and the speed fiends will be brought back to Lindsay and taught a lesson.—Post.

"Sixty Years a Queen" Greatly Enjoyed at the Grand Opera House Last Evening

The wonderful moving picture "Sixty Years a Queen" at the Grand Opera House, last night, was a most educative film. The prominent incidents in the long and glorious reign of Queen Victoria are cleverly pictured and the interest is kept up throughout. No citizen of the Empire can gaze on such a picture without being thrilled with pride and patriotism, and no citizen of Peterborough should lose the opportunity that is afforded them in the appearance of "Sixty Years a Queen" at the Grand again to-night and to-morrow night, with matinee on both days.

German Dead Counted by Thousands After Assault on the Outer Fortifications at Antwerp---British Will Lay Mines in Certain Areas.

Germans Demand $4,000,000 From Louvain---Germans Retreat in Russian Poland---Japanese Have Dropped Many Bombs.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, October 2.—(Special).—The Germans failed in several attempts to carry the outer fortifications of Antwerp by storm this morning. This was emphasized by the British officials this morning who reported,—"The Germans have repeatedly charged Wavre and St. Catharine forts but in each instance were repulsed with heavy losses. The Belgian artillery and rapid fire guns have wrought fearful execution. The German dead can be counted by the thousands. Entire companies have been decimated."'

So far as the situation in France is concerned the Bureau had nothing to say.

BRITISH WILL LAY MINES

LONDON, Oct. 2.—The Official Information Bureau announced to-day that the British Government had decided to lay mines in certain areas as a counter stroke to German procedure.

GERMANS DEMAND $4,000,000 FROM TOURNAI

LONDON, Oct. 1.—G. F. Steward, the Daily News' correspondent at Rotterdam, telegraphs,—"A message from Flanders states that the Germans fired a part of Tournai, demanded a war fine of 2,000,000f. ($40,000) and have taken notables of the town as hostages."

RUSSIAN CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN LEMBERG

PETROGRAD, via London, October 1.—Despatches received here from Lemberg, Galicia, declare that all the prominent Austrian provincial and civil officials, together with the judges, the archbishops of all the churches, and the rabbis, attended the establishment of Russian civil government over Eastern Galicia, and the assumption of the office of Governor-General by Count Bobrinsky. Mr. Rutovsky, the Mayor of Lemberg, informally surrendering the government, spoke in Polish and said,—

"Not without our co-operation have the Austro-Hungarian troops left Lemberg without firing a shot. There was no struggle here, thanks to our efforts We believe Your Excellency has been informed that your troops found here co-operation and a cordial reception. In proffering the government of this capital allow me to express my gratitude to the former military governor who lessened our hardships."

Count Bobrinsky replied in Russian. After thanking the Mayor for keeping order in the town he said,—"I think it necessary to acquaint you with the leading principles of my policy. I consider Lemberg and East Galicia the real origin of great Russia, since the original population. The reorganisation will be based on Russian ideals. We will immediately introduce the Russian language and Russian customs. These steps will be taken with the necessary care. We shall at first limit this to the appointment of Russian Governors and other officials. Many of the present executive will not be replaced.

"We shall forbid the convocation of your Legislature during the war. All social and political organisations must be discontinued, and may resume their activities only by permission. These precepts obtain only in East Galicia, West Galicia will be treated differently."

THE NEW PREMIER.

The selection of Hon. W. H. Hearst as Premier of Ontario is a compromise and a contradiction. It is the rule for the representatives of the King to call upon the recognized leader of the party in power to form a government. The death of Sir James Whitney left the party worse than leaderless—with several aspirants for the leadership—whose personal conviction, of fitness, or that of the factions supporting them, constitutes their chief qualification. Mr. Hearst cannot be regarded as a representative man in the sense we attach to leadership. He has been only six years in the Legislature, and is chiefly known as the frequent exploiter of a nice little academic essay on the resources of New Ontario. If he is acceptable to the party he can only be so as a product of the machine with Hon. Frank Cochrane at the crank. Unless he has a great reserve of the qualifications of leadership unknown to anybody but himself—unless he springs a surprise in this regard—the compromise he represents, will be a compromise in respect of other interests than that of a political situation—not to speak of the dangers of Federal and Provincial entanglement, overlapping and conflict of interests far more important than mere party interest.

A RIGHTEOUS WAR.

A gentleman, Mr. E. Snogga, has been writing letters to the Examiner. It is betraying no journalistic confidence to say that this is an assumed name, selected by accident or design, that its cacophony harmonize with the bizarrity of the writer's ideas. In one letter he condemns the burning of autumn leaves as offensive to the Snoggian sense of smell; but, like a great many great reformers, he suggests no better way. Mr. Snoggs, however, reaches the peak of absurdity by scarifying Christianity and Christian ministers in respect of ecclesiastical approval of war; and the two ministers who joined the Rifle Club are singled out as terrible examples of perverted Christian teaching; as a discredit to what Mr. Snoggs learned at Sunday School — and has apparently forgotten.

Mr. Snoggs' criticism might be unworthy consideration if he did not represent a type of "kickers," who are never so happy as when they are antagonizing decent public opinion, and scattering litter and rubbish over the floor of the sanctuary. Without taking into account the abstract question of the right or wrong of war, it is well to assert that if there ever was a righteous war or a war for righteousness, it is the present war, and Mr. Snoggs (and his kind) who is, no doubt, able-bodied, has a good excuse for not being in the fighting ranks—he would not be congenial company and might be in a little danger.

This war stands for a struggle for what is the legitimate result of Christianity—human welfare. The feeling of the entire Christian world —of the civilized world—is that this war, in the objects of its waging, is a righteous war. If Mr. Snoggs is right, there are a few million in Great Britain and the world over who are wrong. In that country church and state are vieing with each other in making the war effective to its righteous ends. All sorts of Christian denominations are represented. Among the half million now being prepared in the Kitchener way for Kitchener's new army there are said to be 40,000 Baptists, and there are thousands and tens of thousands each, of Anglican Catholics, Roman Catholics, Congregationalists, Methodists, Presbyterians and Salvation Army and Church Army members enlisted. We are told—

"Indeed the chaplains of the department of the War Office are being compelled to make an unprecedented provision for chaplains of religious bodies hitherto so little represented among soldiers as to be entirely negligible in the list of its own church members serving, now posted up in each church porch. Thus Rev. Dr. R. F. Horton's famous Free Church in Hampsteed, London, has a list of sixty, each of whom is prayed for weekly by name.

Never since the day of Cromwell's Ironsides, with a Bible in each knapsack, has a British war assumed so deeply a religious character with a large part of the British people. Their resolution is greatly strengthened by the overwhelming indictment of Prussian diplomacy and militarism signed by the Protestant British clergy of every denomination, from the Archbishops of Canterbury and York to the leaders of every Free Church denomination. It is also strengthened by the Times' disclosure to-day that the Kaiser's army order especially directed the extermination of the British army, which is now confirmed on indisputable authority. Its text follows:

"It is my royal and imperial command that you concentrate your energies for the immediate present upon the one single purpose. Address all your skill and all the valour of my soldiers to exterminate first the treacherous English, and walk over General French's contemptible little army. Headquarters, Aix-la-Chapelle, August 19th."

Here is full warrant for regarding this war as a righteous war. It is a fight against a force that antagonizes all that Christianity stands for, as represented by the British Empire and the unparalleled Christian civilization Britain stands for. The aim of the German Kaiser and the diabolical forces he is in association with, is to destroy the existence of the British Empire, and with that would go all of the best of the fruits of twenty centuries of Christianity. If Mr. Snoggs (and the smug cyphers of citizenship, who think with him), had his home attacked by a wild beast would he resist or stand aside; or run away and leave his wife to meet the danger? Great Britain is fighting a bestiality, diabolically refined, magnified, and systematized to a point beyond what can be associated with the fiercest beasts that prowl the forest. Is it more Christian to combat and destroy this bestiality than to permit it to prevail? Avaunt, cant!

SIR JOHN FRENCH, REPORTER.

A great reporter is accompanying the English troops in France. He has been present at practically every engagement and he has transmitted reports unqualled for clearness and interest. He received his credentials from no less an authority than the English War Office. What is more remarkable, he is doing this work of reporting in connection with the most exacting labour that can be imposed on mortal man. His main business is commanding an army. When the situation permits he sits down and outlines what has happened with a master hand. The reporter is Sir John French. No one can read his reports to the British War Office without being struck with his weighty lucidity, his calm mastery of the important facts, the total absence of any attempt at "effect," and the remarkably suggestive bits of pertinent description.—Chicago Herald.

PLAIN TALK.

It is neither honest nor bold to evade calling a caucus of the Conservative members and to engineer the choice of a tool, a putty man, who will obey the behests of the Ottawa Government. This is not what the members of the Ontario Legislature were elected for, nor is it what they want. Party discipline may have reduced them to a frame of mind in which they are afraid to say what they think, but we have not the least doubt that we are expressing the opinions of most of them, and that if a caucus were in session they would have courage enough to express them.

With an Ottawa nominee the Conservative party in Ontario would be working in the dark, the members could have no real loyalty to a machine in which they had no interest and over which they had no control. The party would very soon, as in the case of the Liberals in 1904-5, be on the way to disintegration and collapse. It is on that way now if the members be supine enough to permit their prerogatives to be extinguished.

What right has the Federal Government to butt into the situation at all? Are the people, or the members of the Legislature to have a chance of exercising their rights in the matter. Will time be given to thresh it out? Or, are men outside the Whitney tradition to do it, and tell the members and the public: "Here's your chief; we've picked him for you." We have heard a good deal about Kaiserism of late, but this is Kaiserism in principle coming right home to Ontario, and it is just as well to start fighting it where it puts in an appearance, and before it becomes more active."—Toronto World (Conservative).

CHOOSING A PREMIER.

The practical outcome of the working of our institution is that a party in Opposition may choose its own leader, but that no such power of choice is assured to a party in office. For instance, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Robert Borden, Sir James Whitney, Alexander Mackenzie, and Edward Blake were all chosen while in Opposition by the representatives of their parties. Between 1873 and 1878 Sir John Macdonald was retained in the leadership by the free choice of members of the Opposition.

The result was that the Parliamentary representatives of the party virtually nominated the coming Prime Minister, except in the case of Edward Blake, who resigned before the opportunity arose. Sir John Macdonald became Prime Minister by virtue of the selection made by Conservative members of Parliament before 1878 and 1878. Sir Wilfrid Laurier became Prime Minister because of the choice made by the Liberal Opposition in 1887. Sir James Whitney became Prime Minister because he was chosen leader by an Opposition. So with Alexander Mackenzie and Sir Robert Borden. Of course, the selection had to be ratified by the popular vote. But the moment the people voted for a Liberal or a Conservative Government the name of the Prime Minister was at once clearly indicated by the voice of those who elected the leader of the party.

It is altogether different when a Prime Minister dies in office. The successor is then not as clearly indicated as is the leader of the Opposition when a Government is defeated. At present, for instance, no one can say who is the natural, inevitable successor to Sir James Whitney. Nobody is clearly indicated as the leader of the Conservative party in Ontario. Hence a good deal of discretion is left in the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, who is supposed to represent the King. But nobody imagines that he will be allowed to exercise his own judgment without interference. In fact, it would be unreasonable that a man who a week ago was a member of the Whitney Government, with no precedence over his colleagues, should appoint the successor to Sir James Whitney upon his own initiative and judgment. He must consult somebody. Who have a right to be consulted?

There is no good answer to this except that the selection ought to be made by the Conservative members of the Legislature elected three months ago. Technically, of course, they cannot elect a Prime Minister. Technically the choice must be that of the Lieutenant-Governor. But as we know that the Lieutenant-Governor must act not arbitrarily, but upon advice, such advice ought to be that of the representatives of the people. Otherwise the people are at the mercy of any wire-puller who can obtain access to the Lieutenant-Governor and secretly advocate the claims of a favourite.—Toronto Star.

CANADA'S WORD

By CHARLES W. GORDON

Rev. C. W. Gordon, D.D. (Ralph Connor), has written this poem for a British publication. It is to be published here in Canada on ornamental card and autographed copies will be sold for the benefit of the Patriotic Fund.

"O Canada! A voice calls through the mist and spume
"Across the wide, wet, salty leagues of foam
"For aid. Whose voice thus penetrates thy peace?
"Whose? Thy Mother's, Canada, Thy Mother's voice."

"O Canada! A drum beats through the night and day,
"Unresting, eager, strident, summoning
"To arms. Whose drum thus throbs persistent?
"Whose? Old England's, Canada, Old England's drum."

"O Canada! A sword gleams leaping swift to strike
"At foes that press and leap to kill brave men
"On guard. Whose sword thus gleams fierce death?
"Whose? 'Tis Britain's, Canada, Great Britain's sword."

"O Canada! A prayer beats hard at Heaven's gate,
"Tearing the heart wide open to God's eye.
"For righteousness. Whose prayer thus pierces Heaven?
"Whose? 'Tis God's prayer, Canada, Thy Kingdom come!"

"O Canada! What answer make to calling voice and beating drum
"To sword flash and to pleading prayer of God
"For right? What answer makes my soul?
"Mother, to thee! God, to Thy help! Quick! My sword!"

Is There a Sweat Shop?

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—If you will permit I would like to endorse what "One Who Was An Employee" has written regarding the liberal (?) remuneration doled out last week to the employees (women and girls) by a Government contracting firm of this City. I am not conversant with the Factories Act, but I should think there must be a clause safeguarding the employment of girls under sixteen years of age from being called upon, and expected to work, from 7 a.m. to 10 p. m. (less two hours for meals) three times in one week; and, of course, intermediate days from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Then, just think of it, payment of a whole 25 cents for a day of ten hours.

Had the girls been asked to work for charity's sake nothing would, or could, have been said; but I presume the Government is paying a fair price for goods ordered, and I can only conclude that the "patriotic" Firm are fattening on the labour of the needy.

I maintain it is not fair treatment, and that a broader and more noble spirit should be shown, more especially in these depressing and difficult times.

My ideas of Government contracts and their value, may be very vague, but I do not think such treatment of labour is warranted by payments as enumerated.

By inserting this protest your accustomed courtesy, Mr. Editor, will be esteemed by a father of

ANOTHER LETTER.

Editor, Examiner:

Dear Sir,—The article "Is There a Sweat Shop?" in to-night's Examiner ought to be answered. If there are any firms in Peterborough taking advantage of the situation to enrich themselves at the expense of the unfortunate the thing should be known.

A foreman of a large concern in Peterborough said the other day that there was a firm in Peterborough working day and night on Government material, and that they were employing women from 7 at night until 7 in the morning, and paying them at the rate of 75 cents per night, and that they were applying the worst sweat shop methods he had ever known. The women were worked in very crowded spaces, and were not allowed to even speak without being "fired."

This foreman and the writer have seen some bad sweat shops but the above, if true, is worse than any we have ever seen. This rumour is so persistent, taken with the letter signed "One Who Was an Employee," that it should either be proved false or, if true, the guilty parties should be exposed. If true, it may explain many questions that arise from time to time as to why Peterborough is so different from, say, Kingston, as per your editorial of the other night.—Yours, etc.,

"One Opposed to Women Labour in Factories."

Peterboro, Ont., Oct. 1st, 1914.

Connected With Disorderly House; Were Sentenced

In the Police Court this afternoon William Nelson was sentenced to three months in prison with a fine of $100, or in default of the payment of the fine an additional three months in jail, having been convicted of keeping a disorderly house at 221 Brock Street. Mrs. Lewis, who was charged jointly with Nelson, was given a year in the Mercer Reformatory.

Since 1897 the local police have been on the trail of Nelson, and repeated informations were laid, but the law in these cases is so indefinite that not until this year have they succeeded in getting a conviction. The feeling of the police officials was that for his years of perfidy in ruining the lives of innocent girls and himself living in a manner at variance with every moral code, the man is paying a very small price. A technical point brought out at the last moment by Mr. Widdifield limited the Magistrate's action, however, as Nelson had been summarily tried without his consent.

Four girls were charged with being inmates of the house and vagrants, and were sentenced to six months in the Mercer Reformatory.

Two other local people, a man and his wife, charged with keeping a disorderly house on London Street, were allowed to go on suspended sentence.

"SURE OF THE "PEP" IN BRITISH ARMY

A labourer in one of our plantations a few days ago went up to one of the overseers and in a serious manner, which evidently showed that he was really seeking enlightenment, said in his local vernacular, which we cannot attempt to reproduce:—"Massa, is it true that before the war the Kaiser sent a bag of rice to King George and told him, 'King George I got as many soldiers as is in this pepper bottle, but you just bite one and then you'll see if your soldiers like these?"

This occurrence, which is going the rounds of our agricultural people, says the Barbados Standard, is a very apt illustration of their good opinion of the fighting capacity of the British soldier, as he is making things very hot indeed for the German Emperor and his staff.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

A National Theatre For Uncle Sam

Adele Blood, Well Known Actress, Announces She Will Establish One

Adele Blood, the actress, claims she can establish a National American Theatre with $10,000 or less. She also states that she will make an attempt to do so with a year.

This information comes through a statement from her. She is at present at her country house in Great Neck, Long Island, preparing for a starring tour in the new play, "Milady's Boudoir," by . C. Drum, under the management of L. W. Hope. Her contract with Mr. Hope has a season to run and at its conclusion, Miss Blood states, she will take up the National Theatre project. Mr. Hope will be interested with her in the affair. Miss Blood writes:

"Who am I—" she asks, and answers modestly, "I am nobody. But we shall see," she continues, "if the new energies of a nobody cannot accomplish what the stagnant ideas of a group of somebodies failed to realize recently in New York City. In one's personal affairs, I believe in Humility; but where a great idea is to be realized I believe in the ultimate agressiveness. Therefore I am going to speak my mind out, and that without equivocation.

"A National Theatre in America one representative of the whole country, will be born of the soil and not of the dollar mark. If ever a great public institution will develop from the sweat of the brow and not from the lining of the pocket, it will be a national theatre. The main reason for the failure of the gilded New Theatre in New York City recently was too much money. With a brigade of check books and a coterie of half baked theatrical namby-pambies they reminded me of the ancient story of the bankrupt. A friend tried to sympathize with him and he replied, "Thank you for your kind words, but wasn't it a magnificent failure?"

"In New York City they built a stately, classic theatre and after announcing that it was intended for a National Theatre proceeded to fill it with foreign and undomesticated plays. They did not have a single practical, dried-out and seasoned theatrical man within earshot of the machinery.

"What was the result. They produced in months of endeavour only one thorough success,the foreign play 'The Bluebird' and a very mediocre offering of native origin, 'The Nigger'. I doubt if even the latter American play would have been produced had not the author been socially persona grata with the directorship.

"In their swan song, when the attempt was abandoned and admitted to be a failure, the directors pleaded in substance: 'We have read over a thousand plays by new American authors and have found none worthy of production'.

"What a test of one's patience – when deciding the value of plays from a bare reading of the manuscript No wonder a loud laugh arose in the real theatrical section of the community. Charles Frohman has said that the principal member of the cast of a play is the audience. It is an epigrammatic truth which will live after him. There isn't a man living who can foretell the fate of a play from its manuscript, or for that matter any one of its values as a play. It isn't like being a tea tester. Any man who can judge a play from the manuscript and save the big managers the enormous expense of production can become a millionaire in five years. But its not in the dream book.

"Already in New York theatres three plays by unknown authors have scored the biggest successes of years and the season is only a few weeks old. Not one of them aspires to literary merit, but they are written in the blank verse which is measured by the feet of the toiler. They are the plays of the soil, plays of the heart, plays of the people.

"So I am going to open a repertoire theatre just as soon as my other obligations will permit, and I will make a supreme effort to develop it into a national institution. It may take years but I will guarantee a workable natural foundation, one which properly started will build itself into a dignified success. I am going to take $10,000, either my own earnings or money loaned by a friend, and either lay down the ground plot of a national theatre, or make a more reasonable and satisfying failure than the New York millionaires did with three million dollars.

"This is simply the method of procedure I will hire a hall. I'll take a theatre if I get one, but a hall will do. Shakespeare had candles for footlights. The smaller the beginning the more I will like it I will organize a utility repertoire company and produce thirty plays by unknown American authors in thirty weeks. That's all.

"The beginning will be humble. I can get half a million dollars for the venture to-morrow. I don't want it, and will have no need of it. I don't want an endowment. There isn't a single endowed thing in this country to-day, which has any practical value or the people at large. Humanity in a gilded cage—pah—the man who uses his millions always ties a string to them.

"The American stage is in a bad way," concluded Miss Blood, "What the moving picture hasn't done to it, dry rot has. The old fossil is sitting on the exahust and won't let the new fellow with ideas bob his head out."

VODKA BANNED IN RUSSIA EVEN AFTER THE WAR

PETROGRAD, Sept. 30.— Minister of Finance P. Bark to-day received in order to the effect that the prohibition of the sale of vodka shall be continued indefinitely after the end of the war. This order is based principally on the tremendously improved condition of the country since the Emperor issued the edict prohibiting traffic in this liquor.

Visitors arriving from southern Russia say there is such a change in that region that the country is hardly recognizable. Peasants who, before the war, had fallen into hopeless indolence and depravity already have emerged into self-respecting citizens. The effect on character is already visible in neatly brushed clothes instead of the former ragged and slovenly attire. Huts which were formerly dilapidated and allowed to go without repairs are now kept in first-class condition.

The times have become more orderly and the peasants indulge in wholesome amusements. These people now save 55 per cent. of their earnings, which formerly was spent for drink, and they have increased their earning capacity through sobriety. This extra money is now devoted to the necessities and comforts of life.

This startling regeneration of the peasantry is, in the opinion of the Russian authorities, likely to have an important effect on all the social and economic conditions of all Russia.

A change in the large cities also is noticeable. Liquor still is sold in first-class cafes, but these are practically empty. The Nevsky Prospect, once famous for its gay midnight life, is now quiet ,without a sign of revelry.

Going To The Front As a Chaplain

Rev. H. A. Frost, of Pontypool, Has Sailed With Canadian Troops

Rev. H. A. Frost of Pontypool and formerly of South Dunmer and Westwood Methodist circuit, was in Norwood on Wednesday evening of last week, bidding farewell, prior to leaving for Europe with the Canadian troops, having received the appointment of Chaplain.

Since writing the above we have learned that Mr. Frost sailed by the "Athena" on Monday. He has been attached as Chaplain to the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery and First Hospital Corps, with the rank of Captain.—Norwood Register.

Rev. H. A. Frost will be remembered by the congregation of Charlotte Street Methodist Church, having supplied the pulpit there, previous to the arrival of the present Pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson.

You Don't Have To Believe This

LONDON, Sept. 19.—(By Mail to New York)—In every camp where Britain's new armies are being trained, the regular drill instructors are sweating over their company rolls at night, desperately trying to remember the pronunciation of the names of aristocratic recruits who do not recognize Cholmondeley as it is spelt.

A sergeant calling the roll for a company of the new "sportsmen" battalion for the first time had a terrible experience recently. Having dispoled successfully of a few "Herpers," "Mitchells" etc., he came to the name "Montague."

"Private Montaig," shouted the sergeant.

There was no reply, but when the name was repeated a half-hearted "Here, sir," came from the rank.

"Why didn't you answer before?" demanded the sergeant.

"Because my name is Mon-ta-gue," replied the recruit.

"Well," snapped the sergeant, "you'll do seven days' fatigew."

The next name on the list, Majoribank, brought no response, for the sergeant pronounced it "Majorebanks."

"Private Colkew-stount," he called.

The drill instrucor gave up and closing his book, he wearily gave the order "number." When this was completed he said:

"One hundred and twenty-one. That's right. Now, if there are any more of you with fancy names, just come to me after drill and tell me how you would like to be called."

SALVATION SONGS ON BATTLEFIELD

A Salvation Army bandsman and a motor-driver in the R.F.A., who was wounded at the battle of ——, tells a thrilling story of his experiences with the British Expeditionary Force. On his part of the battlefield there were, to his knowledge, at least thirty Salvationists in the firing line.

"We got everything ready (he said) for the enemy, the trenches dug and the guns fixed, and then came the worst job of all—waiting. For thirty-six hours we lay there, watching and listening for the first sign of the Germans. Then for five hours the battle lasted without cessation.

"Now the enemy seemed to be beating us, then, again, they retreated. All the time my comrades were falling round me, and the Germans were falling in hundreds, too. So thick were the enemy's dead that when the advance was given we simply had to force the motor up and over heaps of bodies—there was nothing else for it.

"In following the retreating Germans six of us got lost, and for four days we tramped about without a mouthful of food or drink! By day we lay concealed in the corn or grass fields, and by night we crept along, without any guide, only hoping and praying—I've prayed many times in the past, but never so much as on these nights—that all would come right.

"On the first day we were fairly well, on the second we were very hungry, on the third our tongues were hanging out, and two of my comrades went mad.

"On the fourth night we fell in with a British ambulance section, and were taken into camp. As I was passing an ambulance tent I heard someone singing:

I'm a child of a King.
I'm a child of a King.
With Jesus my Saviour.
I'm a child of a King.

"In the stillness of another night from one of the tents I heard: Then we'll roll the old chariot along. And we won't drag do behind.

"I tell you it was thrilling. Two or three Salvationists were having a 'free and easy,' and after the chorus had been sung once or twice I heard it taken up by other Salvationists in other tents. Presently from many parts of the camp could be heard the old Salvation Army song. It was splendid!"—Manchester Guardian.

EXPEL ARCHITECTS TO AVENGE RHEIMS

Because German artillery shelled the Cathedral of Rheims, the Council of the Central Association of French Architects to-day decided to strike the following names from the list of its foreign corresponding members: William Doerpfield, Berlin; Joseph Stubben, Posen; Otto Wagner, Vienna, and the corresponding associations of architects of Berlin, Vienna and Budapest.

OCTOBER APPLE BLOOM

Mr. John Jayes left with The Examiner, October 1st, a pomological freak in the shape of a sprig of apple tree in full blossom. The tree from which this was taken, a "Wealthy" on the farm of Mr. John McGurn, Hartley street, Smith, near the city, bore at the same time ripened fruit, forming fruit and blossoms. Although this tropical condition prevailed, due to our fine open weather, it is to be remarked that there were no caterpillars in evidence.

OCTOBER RASPBERRIES, TOO.

Apple blosoms in October, is rather rushing the pace set by many, but ripe raspberries in October is an unusual usurpation of the busines of July. Mr. Harry Rightmeyer, of 12 Dufferin Street, left with the Examiner to-day a box of perfectly ripe raspberies, that lusciously invite the appetising cooperation of cream.

Mr. A. C. Northcotte of Toronto, who is visiting here, picked a cup of ripe raspberries yesterday along the old Cobourg track. He brought a branch to The Examiner Office, containing many ripe berries.

Prime Minister and Lieut.-Governor Sworn In On Same Day

TORONTO, Oct. 2.—To-day saw the setting of a precedent in political office taking. Never before in the history of Canada has the Prime Minister and a Lieutenant-Governor been sworn into the ranks of honour upon the same day. Yet that is what happened between ten and twelve o'clock to-day when Hon. Wm. Howard Hearst accepted the office of Premier of Ontario, and Hon. J. S. Hendrie was likewise officially pronounced the new Lieut.-Governor of the province. The actual ceremonies were very brief and the ceremony was private.

METHODIST BOYS' CONFERENCE TO BE HELD HERE

Hundreds of Delegates, It is Expected, Will Represent Methodist Churches of This Conference

A Methodist Boys' Conference for the boys and young men of the Bay of Quinte Conference will be held in George Street Methodist Church here on December 28th, 29th, 30th and 31st. It is expected that every Methodist Church in the Conference will be represented by hundreds of youthful delegates. A local committee has been formed, the convener of which is the Rev. R. G. Peever, to arrange for all local preparations in connection with the conference, which will include the programme of entertainment for the delegates while in the City. A programme committee has also been formed and everything would seem to indicate that the conference will be a large and successful one.

"THE SWEET LITTLE MAN"

Dedicated to the Stay-at-Home Brigade

(OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES)

"All the brave boys under canvas are sleeping,
All of them pressing to march with the van,
Far from the home where their sweethearts are weeping;
What are you waiting for, sweet little man?

"You with the terrible warlike moustaches,
Fit for a colonel or chief of a clan,
You with the waist made for sword-belts and sashes;
Where are your shoulder-straps, sweet little man?

"Bring him the buttonless garment of woman!
Cover his face lest it freckle and tan;
Muster the Apron-String Guards on the Common—
That is the corps for the sweet little man!

"All the fair maidens about him shall cluster,
Pluck the white feathers from bonnet and fan,
Make him a plume like a turkey-wing duster—
That is the crest for the sweet little man!"

—British Weekly, Sept. 17.

Young Men of Wealth Prove Their Bravery

At the Battle Front, Oct. 1 (via Paris).—The Generals in command of the Allies are full of praise for the corps of despatch riders who since the beginning of the great battle of the Aisne have kept up communication between the various corps along the line.

The corps of despatch riders is composed mostly of volunteers from British universities, many of them very wealthy youths, who have made dashes through the country invested with German cavalry, carrying messages which have kept the brigades and army corps in close touch, and enabled commanders to send reinforcements to points where they were most needed.

On many occasions these despatch riders, mounted on motorcycles, through sheer audacity have scattered German reconnoitering parties.

THE LIFE OF A WATCH

It should be cleaned and oiled once a year. Many good watches are allowed to go without cleaning and oiling and the result is the oil is entirely dried up, the pivots become cut and rusted so badly that it costs nearly as much as a new movement to put it in proper condition again. CELEBRATE MODERN MIRACLE IN THE ANNUAL HARVEST FESTIVAL

Splendid Sermon by Rev. W. J. Southam at All Saints' Church Last Night—The Church Appropriately Decorated.

BRITAIN ON SIDE OF HONOUR

Exceedingly impressive and unusually appropriate was the Marvest Thanksgiving service at the All Saints' Church last night. A goodly number of people, including some from outside congregations were present and the service was an earnest expression of gratitude to the Almighty for His generous dealings with humanity.

The Rev. R. B. Grobb was in charge of the service and was assisted by the Rev. F. J. Sawers and the Rev. Jas. Price. The Rev. W. J. Southam, M.A., of All Saints' Church, Toronto, was present and delivered an inspiring sermon.

The church was attractively decorated for the occasion with visible reminders of what there was in the world to give thanks for. Wheat, other grain and vegetables were neatly arranged in the church, and the effect was artistic in the extreme. An arch of products of the soil had been erected over the main aisle and added considerably to the effect of the general decorative scheme.

The Rev. Mr. Southam took for the text the 28th verse of the 6th Chapter of St. John, which reads: "I am the bread of life." In opening the speaker said that he congratulated and rejoiced with the congregation that God's blessing had rested so richly upon them. Then reverting to his text he remarked that every man is born with a physical, mental and spiritual hunger. In the ideally developed man the hunger manifested itself in proportion to the relative importance of these three sides of his existence, but in the degenerate man the physical hungr of times dominated the mental and spiritual phases of his nature. But man was essentially a spiritual being and the spiritual should dominate in his life. The body was the locomotive driven by physical power. The mind was the engineer, and the engineer in turn guided the locomotive by inspiration from the higher forces of the spiritual. The fundamental characteristic of man was hunger. So the fundamental need was food. And Christ had said: 'I am the bread of life."

The personality of Jesus Christ was inseparable from what he gave to the world. This was not true of any other religion. Take Confucius from Confucionism, Mohammet from Mohammedanism, or Buddha from Buddism, and there was still left the best in any of those religions. But take away Christ and the whole structure of Christianity tumbles to the ground.

Skeptics refused to believe in the miracles recorded in the Bible. Yet was it any more of a miracle that 5,000 should be fed from a few loaves and fishes than it was to be enabled to plant one seed in the ground and have it produce fifty or sixty. Were they not in reality celebrating a modern miracle?

"But the intensest joy is solemnized by the gigantic war then in progress—a war damnable, devilish and devastating—a war, traceable to insatiable ambition, ruthless militarism and selfish indifference to signed treaties. Yet though as a nation we are in mourning let us thank God that our object is righteous and our aim pure—that Britain is fighting on the side of right, honour, liberty and Charity. Let us thank God that our army and navy were ready. That the heart of the Empire was sound. Let us thank God for the heroism of our soldiers and for the heroism of the Belgians and our allies; for the splendid self-sacrifice manifested by the Empire all over the world. Rest assured that God would use this war—hatched in Hell—as an introduction of a new era of divine progress in human history."

In conclusion the speaker dealt with Christ as the bread of life, mentally and spiritually. The supreme thought he said was that spiritually Christ was the bread of life. The appropriating of Christ by an individual would mean that he would receive new life, that his deepest needs would be satisfied, that his soul would be nourished and invigorated, that he would develop and grow towards Christ and that finally he would assimilate Christ into his being and unconsciously become like Him and in a measure live His life.

Former Hockey Player Passed Away

Woodie Breass for Two Years a Peterborough Player is Dead

Word was received here yesterday of the death of Woodie Breass, in the Sanitorium at Gravenhurst, on Wednesday.

Deceased came to this city in the fall of 1911 and played for the local Intermediates in 1911-12. A year and a half ago he married Miss V. Smith of this City and went west. They returned to his former home at Ingersoll last fall and lived there till a few months ago, when Mr. Bearss' health failed him and he went to Gravenhurst.

His wife and infant child survive. The funeral will take place to-morrow at Ingersoll.

RETURN OF THE FAVOURITES

Next Wednesday evening, Oct. 7, the attraction booked for the Grand Opera House is the famous Guy Brothers Greater Minstrels. This season Geo. Guy has gathered together the best company that he has ever engaged, and assures the theatregoers of Peterborough a good evening's pleasure. The show is entirely different from former years and well worthy of your patronage, as every member is first-class in his work and each act was carefully selected for this season's tour.

At the rise of the curtain you see a beautiful stage setting, with all new scenery and handsome costumes, all of which blend and help to make a very pretty scene. Frank Blake, interlocutor, will present the eight end-men, who are the best white coloured comedians that could be secured, and they know how to entertain you. Their songs, dances and jokes are right up-to-the-minute. The soloists, who were engaged some months previous to the opening of the season, are trained vocalists, and will be heard for the first time in this city. The olio consists of twelve big vaudeville acts that will please every one. It is seldom that any company carries as large a number of performers as do the Guy Brothers this season, among whom are Toledo, known as the Human Alligator, a European novelty, the paraphernalia for this wonderful act alone weighing over fifteen hundred pounds. Berlin and Urban, a very clever dancing team, will also appear; these men have more different stage dances than any team on the stage to-day. The Imperial Quartette will be heard here for the first time. Their selections are the best ever heard and worth going miles to hear. The Davis Brothers have a magnificent stage setting for their grand musical act; they play nearly every kind of musical instrument to perfection, making it one of the best acts on the road. Happy Benway, a real comedian, will also make his first appearance here with this company; he is a first-class entertainer. It is hard to say enough for this attraction this year, and it is sure to be greeted by a full house as usual. Don't miss the grand street parade at noon and hear the celebrated Silver Band. The reserved seat sale opens Monday. 1d-78-908

GERMANS RETREAT IN RUSSIAN POLAND

PETROGRAD, October 2.—That the Germans are in full retreat in the province of Suwalki, Russian Poland, was the announcement of the war office to-day. It is stated that the German centre was broken when the attack on Ossowetz failed, and that the combined Russian assault which followed greatly demoralized the Germans. Particularly violent fighting is reported to-dayto be in progress in the region west of Simno. The main body of the German army is now stated to be concentrated in the west of the districts of Petrokowc and Kielce where it is reprted to be strongly entrenched.

BIG NAVAL GUNS NOW USED BY THE ALLIES

PARIS, October 2.—"We continue to progress on the right and left," was the laconic utterance of military headquarters here this morning. No details were given. It is known, however, that heavy reinforcements were rushed to the front yesterday, and are now making themselves felt, especially on the left, where the task of breaking the power of resistance of the combined armies of General Von Boehm and Von Kluck is being pushed to the utmost. It was learned to-day that the French and British artillery now in action has been augmented by big naval guns of the type that proved so effective with the British in South Africa.

Two Prisoners Are Brothers

Charles Rose and William Barr, the short change artists, are brothers. Their father is an eminently respectable resident of St. Louis, U.S.A., and of course their real names are not Rose or Barr.

In his address to the prisoners this morning His Honour Judge Huycke created t little interest among those present by repeatedly saying to the two prisoners, "Your father," as though there was but one male parent for the two lads. The reason is evident as the boys are really brothers, one of them having not yet finished his course at school.

SENTENCE WAS SUSPENDED

Herbert Landry, charged with perjury, came before His Honour Judge Huycke this morning. He was allowed to go on suspended sentence.

The case arose out of the fact that Landry, who is a blacklister, was arrested for being drunk and swore in the witness box that he got his liquor in Lindsay. It later came out that it was supplied by a local man, and a charge of perjury was laid against Landry. He was committed for trial and later found guilty by Judge Huycke and remanded until this morning.

He was defended by Mr. Widdifield of Gordon and Widdifield, and the Crown was represented by Mr. J. Wearing.

The circumstances were that Landry had not entirely recovered from the effects of his spree when giving evidence in the Police Court and taking that into consideration as well as the prisoner's youth, His Honour thought the ends of justice would be served by suspended sentence.

RUSSIAN ARMY IN FIELD 3,500,000

ROME, Oct. 1—Over 3,500,000 Russian troops are now actively engaged in the campaign against Austria and Germany, according to despatches received here.

There are 1,000,000 Russians along the Niemen river region, 1,500,000 operating in Galicia against the Austrians and over 1,000,000 advancing from the direction of Warsaw across Russian Poland towards the Silesian frontier.

Collection Boxes For War Fund

A meeting of those in charge of Peterborough's Patriotic Fund was held last evening in the City Council Chamber. There were present Mr. D. O'Connell (chairman), Judge Huycke, G. A. Gillespie, R. Mulligan, J. W. Worth, E. F. Mason, W. H Dunsford, John Riddell, F. W. Miller, W. Stocker, Geo. Ball, H. W. Morphet, H. Rush, B. D. Hall, G. O. Cameron, J. H. Burnham, F. D. Kerr, V. Eastwood, H. A. Fife, Wm. Buller, Alderman Anderson, A. Mowat.

It was decided that the question of affiliation with the Dominion Patriotic Fund be referred to a committee consisting of Messrs. D. O'Connell, Judge Huycke, F. D. Kerr and S. R. Armstrong.

It was moved by Mr. Worth and seconded by Mr. Dunsford that the executive take into consideration the advisability of procuring collection boxes and placing them in public places to receive contributions. Carried.

Dr. T. W. H. Young resigned from the committee. His resignation was accepted.

HAVE BEEN REINFORCED

PARIS, Oct. 2.—That the Germans have again been reinforced on their right and are still striving desperately to prevent the turning movement now in progress from being completely successful, was admitted by the War Office today. It was insisted, however, that the gains of the Allied columns continue in this section. In addition, the official communique issued at Bordeaux, at 3 o'clock, and made public at military headquarters, here, directly contradicts the German official statement regarding developments along the Meuse. The French state that the Germans tried to lay pontoon bridges across the Meuse in the neighbourhood of St. Mihiel, only to have them blown to pieces by the French three-inch guns which have been of inestimable service in the present war. The statement begins with the declaration that on the left, in the region of Roye, the Germans have concentrated heavily and a battle is raging violently, the action extending northward to the region of Arras. Along the centre the situation is unchanged, with a heavy artillery duel in progress. In the Woevre district the French gains heretofore reported, are declared to be continuing while in line along the Meuse the Germans have been unable to advance their pontoons which have been destroyed. In consequence they are still on the east side of the Meuse river.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

How Connie Mack Creates And Develops Championship Teams

NEW YORK, Oct 1—He develops, makes and creates champions, this Connie Mack. He won the first American League pennant in 1902; he won the flag in 1905; again in 1910. 1911 and 1913; he won the 1910 world's championship, also in 1911 and 1913. Now's he won the 1914 American League title, and probably will repeat in the 1914 world's series. That isn't all—look out for Connie Mack and the Athletics in 1915, 1916 and all years thereafter.

Near Perfection.

The Athletics of to-day are claimed the nearest step to perfection in baseball. It's a machine of brains and ability from top to bottom, and a machine which has reached the top through the Connie Mack system—not the purchase of a high-priced star, but the development of some youngster from the minor leagues.

If you win to-day, why can't you win to-morrow? That isn't Mack's policy.

Strong Substitutes.

A line in the box score of one of the Athletics' victories the other day exposed the Mack scheme, why he won the pennant in 1902 and why he landed it again in 1914. Here it is:

Three-base hits — McAvoy, Davies, and Kopf.

The Athletics won that game, 16 to 3. They bombarded the Naps' pitchers for 16 hits. Baker, Eddie Collins, Barry, Schang, McInnis and other stars were in the game. And with a big lead Mack introduced Davies, McAvoy and Kopf. They delivered with triples.

It is asked, who are Davies, Kopf and McAvoy. They are rookies fresh from some place, no one knows where but in a couple of years from now they will have passed through the Mack training and they will be prepared to continue winning pennants for Connie and the Athletcis.

On the Lookout.

Mack is surrounded with the stars of the diamond at present. He has the world's champions—two years in succession; it probably will be three straight years, still he is not sitting on the bench waiting for the crash of his present champions; he is viewing the future with the same look that allowed his 1902 champs to crack another pennant winner in 1905; that team to drop out of sight and then another set of winners in 1910.

His Own Developer.

One never hears of Connie Mack breaking into the baseball market with the highest bid for a star in the minors. He has allowed other magnates and managers to lift O'Toole for $22,500; Blackburne for $12,500; Chappell, $18,000; Felch, $12,000; Schalk, $15,000, and a score of others. Why?

Only once has Mack brushed through the opposition to snatch these touted phenoms. That isn't his system. He picks up a youngster, hauls him inside Shibe Park, mixes him with the major league ways for a season or two and then the kid is a full-fledged star.

Mack doesn't crave the seasoned minor leaguer. He prefers the rookie, who needs polishing of the Mack style. He gets it, and he plays it. That's why the Athletics are winning pennant after pennant in the American League.

How Boston Won.

George Stallings, manager of the Boston champions, lets a sidelight in on the methods of his team. He says:

I never play two games the same. A winning pitcher needs regular work.

Confidence comes first. I tell my players they're the best team in the league.

Walter Maranville is the greatest player to enter baseball since Ty Cobb arrived.

I can't say that I favour the hit and run over the sacrifice. Mix 'em up—that's my policy.

Stealing bases alone will not always win—that's why I don't pay so much attention to the steal, for my club.

Why do they consider my pitching staff weak? Davis, Crutcher and Hess equal any "second-string" pitchers in the league.

FORMER CANADIAN LEAGUER WITH THE WORLD'S CHAMPS

The majority of local fans are perhaps not aware of the fact that a former Canadian League player will get his share of the world's series as a member of the Athletics. This is Jimmy McEvoy, the youngster with the cannon whip who caught for Jack White's Berlin Bees in 1913. Manager White touted McEvoy so strongly to Connie Mack that the Athletic leader grabbed the kid a year ago this fall. He was used in a number of games before the end of the season, and this year he accompanied the Mackmen on their training trip. After the season opened he was sent to Baltimore for more seasoning and went so well with with Jack Dunn that the Athletics had to pay $3,000 to get him back. He is now with the White Elephants, and while it is not likely that he will get a chance in the world's series, he'll get his share of the spoils just the same.

BOXER KILLED IN RING; SEVERAL ARRESTS MADE

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 1.— "Bill" Huddie, a young pugilist fighting at 142 pounds, died to-day from injuries he received here last night in a six-round bout with Arthur (Knock-out) Carroll.

Huddie was floored in the first round with a right to the jaw and struck the canvas hard. He rose before the count of ten, however, and lasted out the round. He was not noticeably in distress again, although in the last round he was knocked down a second time. Carroll was given the decision.

While dressing Huddie collapsed and never regained consciusness. Concussion of the brain was given as the cause of death.

The first arrests made were those of Bert McCullough, the referee; Carroll, the surviving principal, and Gregory Mitchell, the matchmaker. All were charged with manslaughter.

UGLY STORIES IN OTTAWA CIRCLES

Boucher Jumps to New Club—Some Shady Doing Alleged.

OTTAWA, Oct. 1.—The anticipated strife between the Ottawa Football Club and the newly-organized Rough Riders broke out this afternoon when George Boucher, who starred in the backfield for Ottawa last season, jumped to the Ontario Union club. Boucher was with Ottawa Monday, but has not been out since. He is a cousin to Martin Kih of the Rough Riders and has promised to play with the new team.

One of the Ottawa executive officers said that he had been informed Boucher was offered $300 to desert the "Big Four" team in favour of the new organization. He also alleged that other players had been approached and threatened to make matters warm for the Rebels. On the other hand, Jack Williams stated that Boucher had gone over to the Rough Rider camp unexpectedly. Williams scoffed at the rumours that money had been offered any players. "We haven't got it to offer," he explained.

THE DEPARTURE OF THE CANADIANS

By "Cornelia" in the Toronto Telegram

QUEBEC, Sept. (—).—It has begun, Canada's boys are now on the long, long way to Tipperary. And with firm hearts and joyous spirits did they begin that march.

Would that every Canadian could have seen them take the road! But it was not to be. The nation was allowed to cheer them on their way when they left their home towns to seek the road. The nation was allowed to see them at Valcartier, where they prepared to take the road. But when the road at last appeared before them it was veiled from the nation's view.

True, for a week before the road appeared, those who were in the midst of that wonderful camp felt its coming. Rifle ranges were deserted, manoeuvres were put off; we saw long lines of khaki men in full marching array; we saw long lines of men swearing loyalty to their King; we saw long lines of men bending over kit bags preparing them for the road.

We saw more than that. We saw Canada's Premier and three of his cabinet go through that entire camp. Officers of each battalion formed in a hollow square to await their approach.

Then when they appeared, Sir Robert Borden in the name of all Canadians bade them Godspeed and grasped the hand of each officer as they filed by in single file.

The air was filled with rumours. No man knew when his orders would come. Nightly the camp's telegraph offices were filled with long lines of men who sent off their hundredth final "good-byes." Horses, wagons, guns, and men were constantly on the move, yet none seemed to know where they were going, or if they had really gone. Journalists' lips were sealed, but oh, how our fingers ached to tell of sights we saw. For so weird was the feeling that one was standing in the very presence of great History herself, and no record was being put down. For there at Valcartier were we not watching the magnificent dawn of a glorious new era for Canada, and we could not tell its wonders to the world. And the pity of it was that before we could picture it all its magic would slip from our grasp.

In those lost days at Valcartier we saw many a scene that made us sigh for a magician's wand to flash them all before you. Rosa Bonheur never gave to the world such beauty as these long lines of thousands of black and chestnut steeds that we saw pass along that twenty-mile road to Quebec. Magnificent animals were many of them and they seemed to feel as martial as the men. And your heart went out to the noble animals for their fate seemed so much harder than that of the men who were going forth. For even if you felt that among those boys were some who would not come again, you knew that the splendid spirits within them would give them as immortality which the poor dumb brutes could not have.

Splendid were the infantry brigades of that camp, but even the picturesque Highlanders failed to stir the imagination as did the cavalry and awesome artillery on the move. To the R. C. H. A. came the delight of first orders. Before them had gone the pemounts and some advance parties. But to them went the honour of a real march to Quebec. It was a real march, a march through rain and cold, a march through mud to the knees. It started at sunset and lasted until dawn next morning. And when the men reached Quebec's docks there! All day long they worked at loading their guns and equipment aboard. Towards evening each man climbed into his bunk, where in five minutes he fell in a dead sleep. Not a man had faltered, not even the officer, whose horse had slipped in a bog and whose scalp was almost severed, when a horse trampled upon him. But a bandage was quickly applied and he insisted on accompanying his fellows to the boat, though he had to finish the trip in a transport.

Canada's boys will strike many a bob on the road to Tipperary, but few worse ones will they see than that boggy road to Quebec. But the splendid spirit with which they conquered to sustain them on their way.

For two days did the heavens deluge the road from Valcartier to Quebec, and so slow would have been the progress of troops that the infantry were moved to Quebec by special train. Battalion after battalion marched off to special sidings two miles from camp and from there were taken straight to the Quebec docks. There boat after boat, until about thirty had been filled, they dropped down the river, until all were assembled. There such a mighty fleet of convoys awaited them that you felt all of Canada's 31,500 men, 7,500 horses and countless guns were safe.

Before they finally moved off, the Minister of Militia, accompanied by Japanese Consul-General Yada, and Mrs. Yada, visited the men on board. Through the lines of transports they passed in the yacht Ungava and after wishing the men godspeed, orders were given for the first ship to move on her eastward way.

It had taken nearly a week for the embarkation. Throughout that time how the heart of grim Quebec throbbed! But though, hundreds had lined the streets of America's Gibraltar there were no public farewells. Quaint habitants who rose at dawn had murmured prayers to many a saint as the artillery boys had passed, weeping French women had told their beads along the way and on Quebec streets. Up at the Chateau many a maid and matron peered eagerly down from the ramparts at the grey vessels that were bearing Canada's youth out to sea.

But armed sentries closely guarded the docks, only those with precious passes got past them. And those passes were exceedingly few. Even influential senators pleaded for them in vain. Only those who had work to do for that embarkation received the magic squares.

Col. Price, of Quebec, one of the Harbour Commissioners, was in charge. Beds had been placed in his offices near the dock and here night and day the work went on. Military and naval officers were in every corner of the building and trusty Boy Scouts had replaced office boys. Just how minutely Col. Price carried out his positive orders that NO ONE was to be allowed on the docks we can bear testimony. No sooner had we seen the artillery on the march from Valcartier than we sped to Quebec with a precious bit of cardboard! Not all John Rockefeller's millions could have purchased that card from us. For on it were the precious words that directed Col. Price to show US over a troopship.

Along Quebec's crowded streets we went to the docks. Then when a haughty sentry poked his Ross rifle at us with what flourish did we show him the magic card. We knew it was all a dream and that we would wake up any minute, but we would until we were in the very presence of Col. Price himself.

Then our hopes were ruthlessly dashed to the ground.

"No," said the colonel, "I cannot let you go over a ship, not even with that order."

Then how we pleaded with the Colonel! We knew mere newspaper men were going on those trips with the soldiers. We felt that it was little enough for a woman who wanted to tell boys' mothers about their taking to the road to be allowed to see a ship.

So after we had convinced the Colonel that we could keep a secret, we were handed over to a soldier who in turn handed us over to a naval officer. But as we passed over the gang-plank we felt sure it was all a dream. For was it not all a tiny peep of the Road to Tipperary itself?

Gay had been the air at Valcartier, but to pick one's way over planks lined with heavy guns, to come face to face with huge liner painted battle grey, to hear the swish of the waters that were to bear the boys to the centre of it all made you feel as if you had reached the very battle itself.

"Are they going to be very cramped for room?" we asked the navy man as he led us down, down into the very hold itself. Here bale after bale of hay for the horses was being stowed away while men were hard at work finishing the narrow stalls which were replacing much of the steerage quarters.

"Why no!" said he, "the soldiers in many instances will have more commodious quarters than ordinary travellers. Some of the best ocean liners are being used, and on this boat, for instance, forty officers will occupy the first-class quarters which usually hold 200 passengers. Then the non-coms and some of the privates will be in the second-class, and as for the others you can see for yourself."

And as here we reached the men's dining room we declared that they would feel as if it was a palatial hotel after dining on the turf out of a mess tin that you'd scrubbed ourself.

Over the entire ship we went, then a shouting burst upon the air we rushed to the boat's stern and there saw a transport, crowded with khaki lads waving a last adieu to old Quebec. Strains of the "Tipperary" song and of "The Maple Leaf" and "O, Canada" came over the water. What a brave sight they were. What a magnificent spirit was theirs. No need for them to be told "England expects every man to do his duty." These were men who had answered duty's call, and who are happier? At last they were off, and no one save they could know the joy of that moment. Crowded was the upper deck, even the ship's ropes were thick with boys in khaki. And on the dock was here and there a tiny Boy Scout who was just sick that he was not two feet higher.

What splendid faces flashed forth above that ship's rail. There were dark-eyed, dark-haired French lads; there were sunny-haired, blue-eyed Saxons. Earnest faces, full of that stern resolve that keeps flanks from rolling back. How could they take their parting look at their native land with such joyous faces. They had felt man's supremest call.

Back to the land of Drake and Frobisher, sons of British sires, were going to march with the sons of France. The land of the lilies had sent her most interpid sons nearly five hundred years ago to make civilization from a wilderness. Now Britons and Gauls were going to a continent that was deep in the wilderness of hate and envy.

Only an epic could plaint such a scene as we saw from that transport. Long have we heard that Canada has no pens that can truly picture her. May the noble men who are now on the Way loosen the tongues of her sons and daughters, even as the heroic deeds of the men of Elizabeth's time when hers became the Golden Age.

BASEBALL

For three consecutive seasons Manager Joe Killian has piloted the Oshkosh team to the championship of the Wisconsin-Illinois league.

The management of the Chicago Cubs has refused to give Captain Tommy Leach a three-year contract Tom now threatens to jump to the Federals.

By defeating the New London Eastern Association champions in four games out of six, the champion Lawrence team of the New England League won the minor league championship of New England.

In pitching and winning a 'double-header against Detroit the other day Ray Collins, the Red Sox flinger, cut in with a stunt seldom seen in major league circles nowadays.

FINAL GAME WILL BE AT BRAMPTON OR NEWMARKET

There remains but one O.A.L.A. championship to be decided—the intermediate. Bracebridge, by their defeat of Meaford in their home-and-home semi-final games, qualify for the finals, and their opponent will be either London or Weston. These latter teams meet to-morrow at Weston in their second of home-and-home games, and it looks like Weston to be the team to meet Bracebridge. In the first game at London last Saturday Weston won by two goals, and thus have a two-goal lead, which, with the advantage of playing to-morrow's game on their own grounds, should asure them of winning the round. If Weston wins, the final game will be played at Newmarket a week from to-morrow. If London wins, the final game will be played at Brampton on the same day.

BRAVES ARE GIVEN CHANCE TO WIN FROM CHAMPION ATHLETICS

The triumph of the Boston Braves has made interest in the world's series much depeer and more widespread than would have been the case had the New York Giants won the National League pennant. The Giants have several times tackled the job of winning the world's championship, but failed dismally on each occasion. The Braves must be conceded a chance.

The National League champions will have a big betteing following in the series, but the Athletics will be favourites. On form the Bostonians seem to be outclassed by the slugging Mackmen, but the Braves have upset every phase of baseball form by smashing their way from bottom to top of the Tener circuit. Light hitters, slow afoot, if the figures count for anything, but carrying a formidable pitching defence, those Braves have done everything that the dope argues they should not be able to do. So when they align their forces against the fighting front of the lean Jesuit of baseball next week many will follow them with no little hope of success, believing that they are favourites of Fortune and cannot lose.

DARLING—GRAHAM.

Tuesday evening at five o'clock a pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. Thos. H. Graham, of Smith, of his eldest daughter Edith, to Mr. Russell Darling, son of Mr. Robt. Darling, of Smith. The bride who wore a wedding dress of grey aeolienne with a hat to match, entered the parlour on her father's arm to the strains of the wedding march, played by her sister, Mary. After the congratulations a sumptious supper was partaken of, the guests numbering about twenty-five, and after a pleasant evening the happy couple left for their home amid showers of rice and congetti.

Mrs. Darling wore a going-away suit of Copenhagen blue.

Mr. and Mrs. Darling will be at home to their friends after November 1st.

The bride's mother, Mrs. John Krager, received the guests in a gown of mauve Liberty satin with cream trimmings. After congratulations, a very dainty supper was served to all, the guests numbering close to one hundred. During the signing of the register Mrs. M. The Flying Boat "America" Sent to England

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—Secretly shipped on board the Mauretania, of the Cunard line, because of the possibilities of having it seized by this government, the flying boat America, that was to have attempted a trans-Atlantic flight, started for England last night, and the news of the shipment was not made public until the steamship was many miles to sea. The America was packed in great crates that were lashed to the main deck of the Mauretania under tarpaulins and no one was allowed to get near the hydro-aeroplane when the big steamship was making ready for steaming at one o'clock this morning.

When war was declared Lieutenant Porte was making his final arrangements for the flight that was to have started from Canada and the whole scheme was interrupted when he had to return to answer the call to colours. He joined the aviation corps, and it has been reported that six machines similar to the America are being made in this country, later to be sent to England consigned to private individuals, but really to be made into a special flying corps, at the head of which will be Lieutenant Porte.

The America, according to her design, is capable of flying for more than one thousand miles without landing, and she has a lifting weight of more than five thousand pounds. She is much larger than any of the aeroplanes that have so far seen service in the war, and, it is said, would be invaluable for attacking the German naval vase at Heligoland.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

Some of the Filed Works That Are Not on the Main Shelves—List of Recent Pamphlets Added to This Department.

In starting these bi-monthly articles for the fall and winter months, no more useful beginning can be made than by showing a few of the ways in which a library can be of service to the public. Many people who have never been inside a library (and there are a few even in Peterborough who could plead guilty to the soft impeachment) are under the impression that it is a place where men are enabled to loaf and read the newspapers and women to satisfy their cravings for sensational fiction. It is easy enough to form such an impression; it is a vastly different matter to eradicate it.

Let it be understood, first, that the bookshelves do not by any means represent the full resources of the library. Packed away in 60 pamphlet cases are many items of the greatest interest to the student. They deal with all manner of subjects and as every one of them is catalogued it is an easy matter to get access to them, provided one knows how to go about it. By looking at the pamphlet case cards in the catalogue cabinet one can easily find out whether the information of which he is in search is to be obtained therein.

The library is in possession of as complete a set of Patent Office Records as it is possible to get. There is no necessity for anyone to write write to Ottawa for information concerning patents, for it can be obtained here at a minimum of trouble and a total absence of cost.

Other valuable publications that are regularly received are those sent out by the Washington Bureau of Education. A list of these is appended to this article as a help to any teachers resident in the city who may be anxious to obtain one of them for perusal.

The Canada Gazette is received every week, and can be always obtained on inquiry at the receiving desk.

The library is also in possession of publications having a direct bearing on the topics of the day. It does not matter whether these are of ephemeral or permanent interest, if a reference to them is made in the British or American magazines the inquirer can be brought into touch with them.

The same holds good of the current literature of the day, for the library subscribes for publications dealing with criticisms of the latest fiction and other literature.

FINANCIAL STRESS IN TURKEY MAY HOLD DRIED FRUITS IN ASIA

Canadian Grocer Discusses Market Conditions During the Past Week—City Demand is Dull—Western Supply of Butter Lowers the Price—Sugar Shows an Upward Tendency.

Publication Office, Toronto.
Oct. 1, 1914.

Business is generally quiet in the cities and towns but fair at country points. This is the natural reaction after the overwhelming war demand of a few weeks ago. The amount of goods which went to the trade and to the consumer indicates to the wholesalers that close buying on the part of the retailer is now the wise policy and they are generally encouraging the hand-to-mouth policy. However, the fact that there is still a demand for sugar above the output of the refiners is an indication that there is yet considerable buying of staple lines.

Higher prices for sugar appear to be almost a certainty of the near future. The situation has strengthened to some extent in New York where there have been offers made at one-sixteenth above the market without bringing takers from cover. In Canada demand is still above output and refiners are paying high prices for raw—so high that they are not materially under the quotations for refined and this cannot continue. The clearing of the war situation would undoubtedly cause a reaction, but this cannot be looked for.

The situation as regards foreign goods, particularly Turkish goods, such as figs and Sultana raisins, has become very complicated during the week and no one can much more than guess as to the developments. The high exchange, the war risks, the increased freight rates and the difficulty of securing transportation were bad enough in themselves, but the financing problem now takes first rank. Advices from Smyrna indicate that the money difficulties are becoming more far-reaching all the time. Turkey, still in a neutral state, has declared a moratorium, and is financially in a state of demoralization. Packers report that they cannot even get money with which to get the goods on board ship, and when this is done it is only after importers have placed credits on call at London. The same conditions to less extent apply to Spain and other countries from which Canada imports. Under these conditions it may be that higher prices will be charged for what goods do come out of the country in an endeavour to counteract the loss for what may go to waste.

Tea has reacted during the week, good grades being up about a penny at London. Nothing is coming forward from Calcutta, and if this condition continues, the embargo is almost certain to be imposed again. Coffees are higher with the exception of Brazils.

The flour situation is dull. Domestic demand has fallen off and prices for winter wheat product have receded somewhat, quotations being much in the hands of individual millers. Strength for Manitoba is maintained on account of the foreign situation and mills are working to capacity. However, there is a chance that Canadian millers may have to reduce prices to compete with American offers when they have completed the Government order and have to give their attention to the export market. Rolled oats have declined under the influence of the lower prices of the October option, and rolled wheat also easier.

The shipment of three carloads of butter from the Western prairies to Montreal, which marks an evolution in the Canadian produce trade, is only one of the unsettling factors in this market. The influence of this shipment at a time when export business was tied up on account of difficulty with boats had the temporary effect of knocking two cents off the top of the market. Outside influences indicate an easier market for eggs, but there has been a shortage of fresh stock which had effect of raising the high figures a cent and other departments firmed in sympathy. Fall packing will be general next week.

Despite interruptions to cheese exports, price has advanced again and is in the highest position for some years. Domestic demand for meats is weak and hogs have declined. Lard is somewhat cheaper. Foreign demand is holding the market together.

TERM FRENCH GUNS THE BLACK BUTCHER

Illustration of Dreadful Effect of Big French Artillery Pieces

LONDON, October 2.—Dilating on the splendid accuracy of the artillery fire and the extent to which the artillery has been used in the present war, the Daily Mail correspondent in France says:

"The infantry has counted for little in these protracted operations. On the allies' left wing the men say they have nothing to do, and several have complained of spending eight days in a trench without seeing a German. Both armies are tired.

"There was one appalling incident. Three days ago 500 Germans were caught in some flat fields with slopes on every side. The French artillery took up positions secretly, and when the moment came to open fire, the officer in command said: 'Make me a cemetery down there.'

"His orders were obeyed, the guns accounting for the greater part of the 500, and the rifle fire for the rest. Those who were there say that not a single German escaped.

"It is no wonder that the Germans have nicknamed the big French guns in the field artillery, 'The Black Butcher.' Their effect is terrible. The shells they throw explode only ten feet above the ground, and spread their missles over an area measuring 100 yards by 30 yards. The shock of their explosion alone often kills at once a whole row of entrenched men."

HAD TOO MUCH HELP.

Reinforcements Loaded on Von Kluk Proved His Ruin.

LONDON, Oct. 3. — A correspondent of the Central News at Calais, who has returned to that city from a tour in the vicinity of the allies' left, says:

"Without disclosing military secrets, I can say that I have seen many things to remove any misgivings as to the outcome of the battle. The moment is near when the curtain will be lifted on the greatest drama ever seen in war.

"The position of the German right wing on Wednesday was such that a portion lying between Lassigny and Chaulnes was in extreme danger. Above Chaulnes the German lines, which a few days ago faced westward, are now facing northwest, and have been bent back on the line of Chaulnes, Cambrai and Valenciennes. On Sunday a German patrol was captured near Chaulnes. The fate of the Germans was due to a shortage of horses. The men said that they had had nothing to eat for some days. They belonged to Gen. Von Kluk's command.

"It has been apparent throughout that Gen. Von Kluk's right was made more precarious by the crowding on him of reinforcements from the centre and left by the German General Staff. His commissariat failed. This might have been avoided if the Germans had been prepared to sacrifice their carefully selected position in the Noyon region, but they staked everything, holding that the peril of an envelopment was becoming more imminent daily."

OTTAWA, Oct. 3. — Col. Sam Hughes, it is reported, has made arrangements for going to England for a few weeks' rest and to see the Canadian troops begin their training over there. He will sail from New York next Wednesday.

Col. Victor Williams, who was commandant of the Valcartier camp and is going to England, will, it is said, in all probability be attached to Gen. French's staff.

THE ENEMY LOSES VIGOR

British Official Statement Says Attacks Are Weakening

EVERY ASSAULT REPULSED

LONDON, Oct. 3.—The official bureau issued a statement at midnight from the headquarters of the British expeditionary force, under date of Sept. 28, concerning the movements of the British force and the French armies in immediate touch with it. The statement is in part as follows:

"The general situation as viewed on the map remains practically the same as that described in the last letter, and the task of the army has not changed. It is to maintain itself until there is a general resumption of the offensive.

"No ground has been lost. Some has been gained, and every counter-attack has been repulsed—in certain instances with very severe losses to the enemy.

"Nevertheless the question of position is only a part of the battle, and there has been considerable improvement in the situation in another important respect. Recent offensive efforts of the enemy have been made without cohesion, his assaults being delivered by comparatively small bodies acting without co-operation with those on either side. Some of them, indeed, evince clear signs of inferior leadership, this bearing out statements made by prisoners as to great losses in officers suffered by the enemy.

"Further, the hostile artillery fire has decreased in volume and deteriorated both in control and direction. The first is probably due to the transfer of metal to other quarters, but the latter facts may be the direct result of the activity of our air craft and their interference with the enemy's air reconnaissance and observation of his fire.

"The Germans recently have been relying to some extent on observations from captive balloons sent up at some distance in the rear of their first line, which method, whatever its cause, is a poor substitute for the direct overhead reconnaissance obtained from aeroplanes.

"As a consequence the damage being done to us is wholly disproportionate to the amount of ammunition expended by the enemy. For the last few days it has amounted to pitting certain areas with large craters and in rendering some villages unhealthy, as the soldiers put it.

"Of recent events an actual narrative will be carried on from the 25th to the 29th inclusive. During the whole of this period the weather has remained good. On Friday, the 25th, comparative quiet reigned in our sphere of action.

"That night a general attack was made against the greater part of the allies' position and it was renewed in the early morning of the 26th. The Germans were everywhere repulsed with loss. Indeed, opposite one portion of our lines, where they were caught en masse by our machine guns and howitzers firing at different ranges, it is estimated that they left one thousand killed or wounded."

"On Sunday, the 27th, while the German heavy guns were in action, their brass bands could be heard playing hymn tunes, presumably at divine service.

"The enemy made an important advance on a part of our line at six p.m., and renewed it in strength at one point, with, however, no better success than on the previous night. Sniping continued all day along the whole front.

"On Monday, the 28th, there was nothing more severe than a bombardment and intermittent sniping, and this inactivity continued during Tuesday, the 29th, except for a night attack against our extreme right."

KAISER'S TRAIN REPAINTED.

Palatial Outfit Is Now In Danger of Being Blown Up.

ROME, Oct. 3. — (Via Paris.)—Emperor William, says a telegram from Berlin, is going from one front to another. He travels in a special train of ten Pullman cars, which formerly were painted white and blue, but which now have been repainted like the ordinary cars, in order to protect the train from the bombs of French aviators.

When the Emperor goes to places out of the reach of the railway he travels by automobile. Besides his aides and bodyguard he is also watched by secret field police.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

He touched a large and closely-wrapped bundle lying in the little crypt, dimly seen by the flicker of the oily wick.

"Yea. Raise it out that I may show you!" answered the patriarch. His hands trembled with eagerness; in his blind eyes a sudden fever seemed to burn. For here was his dearest, most sacred treasure, all that remained to him of the long-worshipped outer world—the world of vague past and of his distant ancestors—the world that Stern and Beatrice had really known and seen, yet which to him was only "all a wonder and a wild desire."

"Lay the book upon the bench," he ordered. "I will unwrap it!"

Complex the knots were, but his warped and palsied fingers deftly undid them as though long familiar with each turn and twist. Then off came many a layer of the rough brown seaweed fabric and afterward certain coverings of tough shark-skin neatly sewn.

"The book!" cried the patriarch. "Now behold it!"

"That?" exclaimed Beatrice. "I never saw a book of that shape!"

"Each page is separately preserved, wherefore it is so very thick," explained the old man. "See here?"

He turned the leaves reverently. Stern, peering closely by the dim light, saw that they were loosely hung together by loops of heavy gold wire. Each page was held between two large plates of mica, and these plates were securely sealed around the edges by some black substance, like varnish or bitumen.

"Only this," explained the patriarch, "could we hope to save this precious thing. It was done many hundreds of years ago, and even then the book was almost lost by age and use."

"I should say so!" ejaculated Stern. Even sealed in its air-tight covering, he saw that every leaf was yellow, broken, rotten, till the merest breath would have disintegrated it to powder. A sense of the infinitudes of time bridged by this volume overwhelmed him; he drew a deep breath, reached out his hand and touched the wondrous relic of the world that was.

"Long ago," continued the old man, "when the book began to crumble, one of my ancestors copied it on gold plates, word by word, letter by letter, every point and line. And our family used only that book of gold and put away the other. But in my grandfather's time the Lanskraan raided our village and the gold plates went for loot to make them trinkets, so they were lost.

"My father meant to begin the task again, but was killed in a raid. I, too, in my fighting youth, had plans for the work; but blindness struck me before I could find peace to labor in. So now all that remains of the mother tongue here is my own knowledge and these tattered scraps. And, if you save us not, soon all, all will be lost for ever!"

Much moved, the engineer made no reply, yet thoughts came crowding to his brain. Here visibly before him he beheld the final link that tied these lost Folk to the other time, the last and breaking thread. What history could this book have told? What vast catastrophies, famines, pestilences, wars, horrors had it passed through? In what unwritten cataclysms, in what anguish and despair and long degeneration had the human mind still clung to it and cherished it;

No one could tell; yet Stern felt the essence of its unknown story. An infinite pathos haloed the ancient volume. And reverently he touched its pages once again; he bent and by the guttering light tried to make out a few words here or there upon the crackled, all but perished, leaves.

He came upon a crude old woodcut, vague and dim; then a line of text caught his eye.

"By Gad! 'Pilgrim's Progress'!" he exclaimed. "Look, Beatrice—'Pilgrim's Progress,' of all books! No wonder he says 'Verily' and talks archaic stuff and doesn't catch more than half we say. Well, I'll be—"

"Is this then not the English of your time?" asked the patriarch.

"Hardly! It was centuries old, at the epoch of the catastrophe. Say, father, the quicker you forget this and take a few lessons in the up-to-date language of the real world that perished, the better! I see now why you don't get on to the idea of steamships and railroads, telephones, and wireless and all the rest of it. God! but you've got a lot to learn!"

The old man closed up the precious volume and once more began wrapping it in its many coverings.

"Not for me, all this, I fear," he answered with a deep melancholy. "It is too late, too late—I cannot understand."

"Oh, yes you can, and will!" the engineer assured him. "Buck up, father! Once I get my biplane to humming again you'll learn a few things, never fear!"

He stepped to the door of the hut and peered out.

"Rain's letting up a bit," he announced. "How about it? Do the signs say it's ready to quit for keeps? If so—all aboard for the dredging expedition!"

CHAPTER XXXIV.
THE COMING OF KAMROU.

The storm, in fact, was now almost at an end, and when the engineer awoke next morning he found the rain had wholly ceased. Though the sea was still giving forth white vapours, yet these had not yet reached their usual density. From the fortifications he could see, by the reflected lights of the village and of the great flame, a considerable distance out across the dim, mysterious sea. He knew the time was come to try for the recovery of the machine, if ever.

"If I don't make a go of it to-day," said he, "I might as well quit for good. There'll never be a better opportunity. And if it's left down there very much longer, Heaven only knows what kind of shape it'll be in. I make good to-day or it's all off."

Beatrice eagerly seconded his plans. The old man, too, was impatient as a child to learn more of this wonder of the upper world. And, translating to the Folk the directions that Stern gave him, he soon had a great throng on the beach where lay not only the Folk's canoes, but also many left by the slaughtered and dispersed Lanskaarn.

Two hours after a crude meal that must be called breakfast for want of a better name, the expedition was ready to start.

AILING WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Mrs. Doucette Tells of her Distressing Symptoms During Change of Life and How She Found Relief.

Belleville, Nova Scotia, Can.—"Three years ago I was suffering badly with what the doctors called Change of Life. I was so bad that I had to stay in bed. Some friends told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it helped me from the first. It is the only medicine I took that did help me and I recommend it. You don't know how thankful and grateful I am. I give you permission to publish what your good medicine has done for me."—Mrs. SIMON DOUCETTE, Belleville, Yarmouth Co., Nova Scotia, Canada.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness, are promptly headed by intelligent women who are approaching the period in life when woman's great change may be expected.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound invigorates and strengthens the female organism and builds up the weakened nervous system. It has carried many women safely through this crisis.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Twenty-five of the largest boats, some holding twelve men, set out, to the accompaniment of shouting and singing much like that when the captives had been brought in. Stern, Beatrice and the patriarch all sat in one canoe with eight paddlers. In the bottom lay Stern's heavy grapple with the ten long ropes, now twisted into a single cable, securely knotted to its ring.

To Stern it seemed impossible that any means existed for locating, even approximately, the spot where the machine had fallen. As the shore faded away and the village lights disappeared in the gloom and mist, all landmarks vanished. Everywhere about them the dim, oily sea stretched black and gloomy, with here and there the torches of the little fleet casting strange blue-gren lights that wavered like ghostly will-o'-the-wisps over the water.

The boatman's song wailed high, sank low, trembled and ceased; and for a while came silence, save for the dipping of the paddles, the purling of the waters at the bow of the canoe. The engineer, despite his hard-headed practicality, shuddered a little and drew his mantle closer round him.

Beatrice, too, felt the eerie mystery of the scene. Stern put an arm about her; she slid her hand into his, and thus in silence they sat thinking, while the boats drew on and on.

"They really know where they're going, father?" the engineer asked at length. "It all looks alike to me. How can they tell?"

"Verily, I cannot explain that to you," the old man made answer. "We know, that is all."

"But—"

"Had I been always blind you could not expound sight to me. A deaf man cannot understand sound."

"You mean you've developed some new sense, some knowledge of direction and location that we haven't got?"

"Yea, it must be so. In all these many centuries among the dark mists we have to know. And this gloom, this night, are the same to us as you have told me a lake on the surface would be to you in the brightness of that sun which none of us have ever yet beheld."

"Is that so? Well, hanged if I get it! However, no matter about that just so they locate the place. Can they find the exact spot, father?"

"Perhaps not so. But they will come near to it, my son. Only have patience; you shall see!"

Stern and the girl relapsed into silence again, and for perhaps a quarter-hour the boats moved steadily forward through the vapours in a kind of crescent, the tips of which were hiden by the mist.

Then all at once a sharp cry rang from a boat off to the right, a cry taken up and echoed all along the line. The paddles ceased to ply; the canoes now drifted idly forward, their wakes trailing out behind in long "slicks" of greasy blackness flecked with sparkles from the reflected light of all those many torches.

"Drop the iron here, son, and drag the bottom," said the patriarch.

He pitched the dredge into the jetty sea. It sank silently as he payed out the cable. At a depth he estimated—from the amount of cable still left in the boat—as about thirty fathoms, it struck bottom.

He let out another five fathoms.

"All right, father!" he exclaimed, sharply. "Tell our boatmen to give way!"

The old man translated the order: "Ghaa vroudad, m'yaun!" (Go forward, men.) The paddles dipped again and Stern's canoe moved silently over the inky surface.

Every sense alert, the engineer at the gunwale held the cable. For a few seconds he felt nothing as the slack was taken up; then he perceived a tug and knew the grapple was dragging.

Now intense silence reigned, broken only by the sputter of the smoking torches. The canoes, spaced over the foggy sea, seemed floating in a void of nothingness; each reflected light quivered and danced with weird and tremulous patterns.

Stern played the cable as though it were a fish-line. All his senses centred on interpreting the message it conveyed. Now he felt that it was dragging over sand; now came rocks—and once it caught; held, then jerked free. His heart leaped wildly. Oh, had it only been the aeroplane!

The tension grew. Out, far out from the drifting line of boats the canoe went forward; it turned at a word from the patriarch and dragged along the front of the line. It crisscrossed on its path; Stern had to admire the skill and thoroughness with which the boatmen covered the area where their mysterious sixth sense of location told them the machine must lie.

All at once a tug, different from all others, yielding, yet firm, set his pulses hammering again.

"Got it!" he shouted, for he knew the truth. "Hold fast, there—she's hooked!"

"You've got it, Allan? Really got it?" cried the girl, starting up. "Oh—"

"Feel this!" he answered. "Grab hold and pull!"

She obeyed, trembling with eagerness.

"It's caught through one of the sailirons, or some yielding part, I think," he said. "Here, help me to hold it tight, now; we mustn't let the hook slip out again!" To the patriarch he added: "Tell 'em to back up, there—easy—easy!"

The canoe backed, while Stern took up the slack again. When the pull from below was vertical he ordered the boat stopped.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

MOTHER.

"All that I am or hope to be," said Lincoln after he had become President, "I owe to my aged mother."

"My mother was the making of me' said Thomas Edison, recently. "She was so true, so sure of me and I felt that I had someone to live for, someone I must not disappoint."

"All that I have ever accomplished in life," declared Dwight L. Moody, the great evangelist, "I owe to my mother."

"To the man who has had a good mother, all women are sacred for her sake," said Jean Paul Richter.

The testimony of great men in acknowledgment of the boundless debt they owe to their mothers would make a record stretching from the dawn of history to to-day. Few men, indeed, become great who do not owe their greatness to a mother's love and inspiration.

How often we hear people in every walk of life say "I never could have done this thing but for my mother She believed in me, encouraged me when others saw nothing in me."

"A kiss from my mother made me a painter," said Benjamin West.

A distinguished man of to-day says "I never could have reached my present position had I not known that my mother expected me to reach it. From a child she made me feel that this was the position she expected me to fill, and her faith spurred me on and gave me a power to attain it."

Many a man is enjoying a fame which is really due to a self-effacing, sacrificing mother. People hurrah for the governor or mayor or congressman, but the real secret of his success is often tucked away in that little unknown, unappreciated, un-heralded mother. His education and his chance to rise may have been due to her sacrifice.

It is a strange fact that our mothers, the moulders of the world, should get so little credit and should be so seldom mentioned among the world's achievers. The world sees only the successful son, the mother is but a round in the ladder upon which he has climbed. Her fame or face is seldom seen in the papers, only her son is lauded and held up to our admiration. Yet it was that sweet, pathetic figure in the background that made his success possible.

There is no one in the average family, the value of whose services begins to compare with those of the mother, and yet there is no one who is more generally neglected or taken adavantage of. She must remain at home evenings and look after the children when the others are out having a good time. Her cares never cease. She is responsible for the housework, for the preparation of meals; she has the children's clothes to make or mend, there is company to be entertained, darning to be done and a score of little duties which must often be attended to at odd moments, snatched from her busy days and she is often up working at night long after everyone else in the home is asleep.

We are defeated in our attempts to make home cheerful and happy because we pay too much and work too hard. We tack and weary ourselves so much in the attempt to collect the materials for enjoyment that they give us but little pleasre when collected. Neatness and order are excellent virtues in a fmily, but they can be carried to excess so as to be a daily torment to everybody in the house. The best clock has the fewest wheels and makes the least noise, and the more simple the order of our domestic life, the better and happier it will be. Live within your means. Make your dress, your house, your furniture, your style of living, such as will not subject you to struggle and anxiety to keep up appearances. Be content to set a poorer table than your rich neighbour, who has a French cook; and be not ashamed of your faded carpet if you cannot afford a new one. Do not mind what the outside world says; this is your business and not theirs. Outside friends and guests must be drawn to our house, not so much by costly dinner services and lavish entertainments, as by the kind and gracious manners of those who give the invitations.

It isn't the amount of religion a man has that makes him good and fits him for heaven; it is the amount he uses. Long prayers and loud professions do not count; but the man who loves his fellowmen and fellowwomen, who ministers to the afflicted and wears a smile for all, including his wife and children, who never smiles on Sunday or kicks the dog when he ought to kick himself, who speaks well of people when their backs are turned, and under all circumstances keeps an even mind—that man doesn't have to die to go to heaven. He gets to feeling happy all the time as a matter of habit, and he takes all the dispensations of life with philosophical satisfaction.

PICKLED APPLES

One peck sweet apples; three pounds sugar; two quarts vinegar; half dozen cinnamon; half ounce cloves. Pare apples, leaving them whole. Boil them in part of vinegar and sugar until you can put a fork through them. Take out, heat the remainder of vinegar and sugar and pour over them. Be careful not to boil too long or apples will break. Add cinnamon and cloves when done.

FRENCH PICKLE

Slice in an earthen jar one peck green tomatoes, six large onions, and pour over them one cup salt. Let stand 24 hours and drain. Add a quart of vinegar, three pounds sugar, quarter pound white mustard seed, one teaspoon ground cloves, one of ginger, one of cayenne pepper and two teaspoons mustard. Cook slowly for 15 minutes.

Fruit Soups.—As an appetizer, try a little cup of cold soup, made from cherry or currant puice, thickened with a little sago or arrowroot, and seasoned with a little salt, white pepper, and sugar to taste.

The fruit is washed and one pint of juice and pulp is used to one pint of water. Sometimes it is not thickened and in that case a lemon with its juice and grated yellow rind, a little cinnamon, and sugar are added. This is served in cups and garnished with a little of the whole fruit.

Spinach Souffle.—Cook four pounds of spinach in the usual way, and after draining all the moisture from it, pass through a wire sieve. Take a tablespoonful of any cooked turnip, carrot or onion which may be in the cooler, and pass through a sieve. Add them to the spinach with two tablespoonfuls of thick white sauce and two ounces of warm butter. Season the mixture with salt, sugar, pepper and grated nutmeg. Add the yolks of two raw eggs and then the whites of three eggs which have ben whisked to a very stiff froth. Pour at once into a well buttered pudding dish, smooth the top, and after pouring a little warm butter over it, scatter some breadcrumbs lightly over the surface and bake at once in a quick oven for about twenty minutes.

Iced Cream Cheese and Tomatoes.—Mix half a pint of aspic jelly which is cold but not set with four ounces of grated cheese and two tablespoonfuls of sieved tomato thickened with flour and milk. Season with celery salt, cayenne, and a dust of curry powder, and stir in half a pint of whipped cream. Beat the mixture for a few minutes, pour into a china dish and place on ice long enough for the souffle to become very cold. Just before it is served, cover the top of each with strips of red pepper arranged to form a lattice-work pattern, and in the spaces between place alternately a little powdered parsley and grated cheese.

Jelly Salad.—A tempting salad course is made from jellied stock, well seasoned and tinted green. Harden it in a fancy mould and surround when served with lettuce and sliced tomatoes, or with lettuce and sections of grape fruit. Serve with mayonnaise dressing. Tomato jelly, bordered by small green string beans, boiled until tender in salted water, is another fine salad for a hot day.

USE EVERYTHING TO ADVANTAGE UNDER THE PRESENT CONDITIONS

The greatest score the housekeeper can make when practicing household efficiency, so necessary now when all food products threaten to become still higher, is to stop small leaks and learn to use everything to the best advantage. A few pounds of apples if carelessly pared and cooked offer but poor value considering their cost at this season; but if the parings are used as well many dishes gain not only in bulk but in taste and appearance. Too much cannot be said about saving small remnants of food, especially milk and cream; crackers that have lost their first crispness may be used even to the last crumb, and once you have mastered the right proportions in using gelatin, all kinds of heretofore despised remnants can be made into delicious desserts and meat, fruit or vegetable jellies.

Remember all measurements are level, use a graded half-pint measuring cup an sift flour before measuring.

Strained Apple Sauce.

Method— Wash, quarter and core tart green apples, removing any blemish they may have, but do not pare them. Place in covered kettle and pour on just enough water to cook tender without burning. As soon as soft run through a fruit press or collander. Season to taste with sugar and a little cinnamon or nutmeg. This is economical as well as labour saving.

Oven Steamed Apples.

Method—Wash and core evenly sized tart apples and fill the cavities with soft brown sugar. Set in a pudding dish, add enough water to just cover bottom of pan, cover over tightly and steam until tender. According to kind of apples this may take from half an hour upward. This conserves the bulk of the apples better than baking. Excellent if placed in fireless for one to two hours.

Bread and Apple Pudding.

Method— Wash and core apples, then run through food chopper. Spread thin slices of stale bread with butter and sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon over. Place a thick layer of the apples in a shallow pan, sprinkle sugar over, then place the prepared bread on top. Bake in moderate heat until apples are tender and bread nicely toasted. Serve with little lemon hard sauce.

Method—Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter until soft, add one tablespoonful of lemon juice and a little nutmeg, then beat in enouh sifted confection sugar to make a light, fluffy mass. Let harden a little before serving.

Hot Cracker Sandwiches.

—(With cheese filling.)

Method—Spread plain soda crackers with grated American or Roquewort cheese, dust well with paprika and place another cracker on top. Toast in hot oven until crisp and cheese is melted. Serve hot.

—(With fruit filling.)

Method—Spread stiff preserves or jelly between small milk or soda crackers and toast until crisp. Dust with confectioners' sugar and serve with tea or coffee.

Tomato Aspic.

Ingredients—
Two cupfuls of strained tomatoes.
One tablespoonful of sugar.
One-half teaspoonful of salt.
One-half teaspoonful of paprika.
Three tablespoonfuls of granulated gelatin.
One-quarter cupful of cold water.

Method—Use canned or fresh tomatoes, cook until done and run through a sieve or fruit press. Dissolve the gelatin in the cold water and when ready to mix add seasoning to the hot tomato. Stir in the gelatin and stir well. Pour into moulds dipped in cold water and set away to harden. Best made a day in advance and kept in ice box.

If desired, minced onion or peppers can be added. This is nice if it is served in small moulds on lettuce leaves with a boiled dressing, or it can be made in a square tin, then cut into blocks and used for a meat or salad garnish.

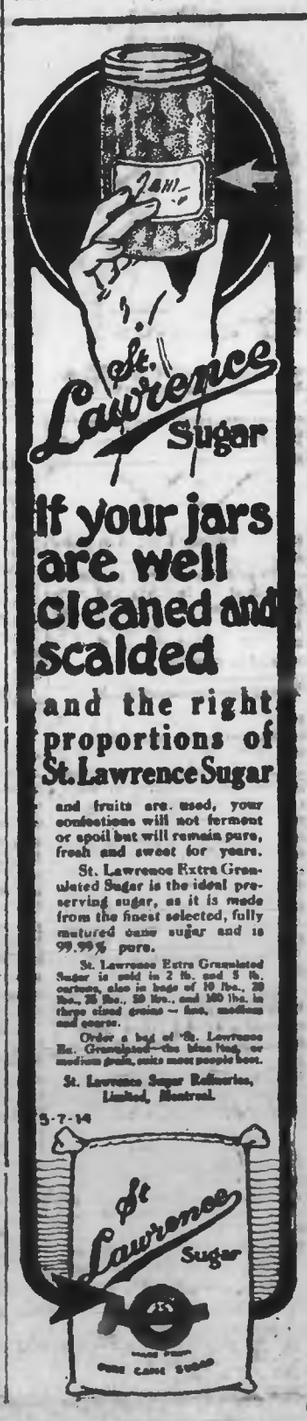
Remnant Jelly.

Method— For this a few plums, apples that were rejected as not quite ripe enough for other uses, and perhaps a lemon or orange which is on hand. Also a few spoonfuls of blackberries or perhaps a peach left from the breakfast. All can be rounded up once a week, and a few good glasses of jelly made. Core or stone the fruit but do not remove peeling. Wash and place in kettle with enough water to cover. Let cook slowly until tender, then drain in jelly bag or piece of cheesecloth. Measure the juice and simmer for twenty minutes, removing any scum that arises. Have ready an equal amount of sugar. Now add half of the sugar and cook ten minutes. Add rest of sugar and as soon as it jellies if dropped on a cold plate it is ready to pour into glasses. In this way you have a little early jelly for immediate use, or it can be sealed and kept for winter.

Peach Gelatin.

Ingredients—
Two cupfuls of peach pulp.
One-quarter cupful of sugar.
Three tablespoonfuls of gelatin.
One-quarter cupful of cold water.

Method—Skin and stone soft peaches, those that are not quite sightly enough to serve whole may do. Add the sugar and a very little water, then bring to the boiling point. Dissolve the gelatin in the cold water, stir into the hot peaches, mix well, then pour into a mould dipped in cold water. Let harden and chill, then unmould and serve with thick or whipped cream.



MEAT INJURIOUS TO THE KIDNEYS

Take a Tablespoonful of Salts If Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with urio acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog, and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach, or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEDER

Written for the Christian Science Monitor

A Fall Cold: As cold weather approaches it is the general custom of people who are not in perfect health to "catch a severe cold," which is hard to overcome. It seems to keep getting a firmer hold and the winter comes on with the cold still troubling and a deep seated catarrhal discharge or a troublesome cough. Why?

If we know the reason for certain things or conditions we can, if we will, guard against their evils. A few years ago, at one of the agricultural experiment stations, a test of conditions and health was made upon a certain number of cattle, by dividing them into three lots as nearly equal in health and condition as possible. The first lot was comfortably housed in a well ventilated barn and all properly cared for, fed and watered and the barn cleaned every morning.

The second lot were left in an open lot which had sheds that would keep off the snow and rain as well as the wind from the north and west. They were fed the same as the first lot. The third lot was left in an open field, where the hills and the bare branches of the trees was the only protection. They also were fed the same rations as the first lot in the barn.

The first lot suffered severely with colds and required the attention of the veterinarian from time to time, while the second lot was troubled but little with colds, yet they required some attention. The third lot, left in the open field, appeared in perfect health throughout the entire winter, and in the spring were in much better condition than either of the others. Do you see the answer to fall colds?

In large cities it has been found necessary to establish outdoor schools for weak, sickly children, for children that take cold easily or have weak lungs and a tendency toward consumption. The strong, robust, healthy children can stand the perils of artificially heated schoolroom. Quite a number of them will take cold when the windows are shut and the heat turned on. Some of them will contract tuberculosis and other diseases, but the sick children that go to school out doors get strong and well, they seldom are troubled with the many children's diseases.

Can you now answer the question of fall colds? You do not catch cold as long as the doors and windows are all left open both night and day. It's only when the fresh pure air and sunshine are shut out that the colds and coughs and catarrh and consumption get in.

I am one of the trustees of The Children's National Tuberculosis Society. A man who loves children has given to the society about 15 acres of beautiful grounds covered with fruit trees and having a fine lot of splendid big buildings at Alamagordo, New Mexico, and one of the first things we did when we opened it for tubercular children was to build splendid porches so it would not at any time be necessary to sit indoors. The place is now open and any poor child is free to go there where he will be kept in God's pure air and sunshine, fed, clothed and taught just the same as though he was the possessor of unlimited wealth. Those who are able to pay will pay, of course, but to the poor tubercular child it is as free as the air and the sunshine.

Don't be in a hurry about shutting up the house in the fall. If it's cold and raining, build up the fire and put on more clothing, but don't shut out the pure air. Be sure to clean the stove and the furnace and the radiators thoroughly before the heat is turned on and let the furnace run a few days with the windows and doors wide open and then you can gradually accustom yourself to the poor heated air of indoors without so much risk, but don't forget that there is life and health in the pure fresh air and sunshine and there is sickness, catarrh, colds, consumption and death in superheated, unventilated houses, schools, churches, etc.

Imitating Mamma.

While playing with a pair of shears little Laura severed one of the prettiest of her golden curls.

"My dear child, why did you do that?" asked Aunt Mary, who came to call soon afterward.

"I wanted 'em so I could take 'em off and hang 'em on the fence," explained the little girl, "just like mamma does."—New York Globe.

FRENCHMEN AT THE FRONT

AUSTERLITZ AND THE FIGHTING QUALITIES OF THE SOLDIERS OF FRANCE

Marshal Lannes, Duke of Montebello.

The Battle of Austerlitz.

Napoleon.

By Richard Conover.

SHOULD you ask the fighting possibilities of the soldier of France, look toward the great domed tomb of the Invalides in Paris and find the answer there—Napoleon Bonaparte.

To the loftiest heights of military achievement the great Corsican led his Gallic hosts during two and twenty world stirring years. To the loftiest height and then beyond, the Man of Destiny led them. Up into the very clouds, nearer to the suncentre of glory and renown than man had ever mounted before, the fighting French soldier followed. Patriotically consecrated, with a sneer for death and a delirious dash ever ready for the desperate occasion, he flung himself into the hell of battle, passionately happy because of the chance to distinguish himself under the eye of his demigod leader.

Nobody had ever made a French soldier do as much before. Nobody, certainly, has made him do as much since. But the doing is in him, ever ready to be brought out. History warns, however, that the fighter of France to insure victory must first partake of the sacrament of true dedication. A lazy nibble of the bread of devotion or a trifling sip of the froth of rant from the chalice of sacrifice is insufficient stimulus. Analysis of many a French defeat proves it. Properly stirred, the fighter of France is invincible.

Napoleon Met Allies.

From 1793 to 1815 the French soldier met the fighting man of every other nation and was Napoleon-led to victory. During all that period he was seldom, if ever, confronted by the troops of one country. Forever it was allies, allies, and more allies. He did all his fighting away from his own soil, carrying the battle to the enemy, never waiting for him. Bonaparte didn't know how to fight that way. In the Peninsular campaigns the French marshals of the absent Emperor suffered defeat at the hands of Wellington's English, Spanish and Portuguese troops. But they fought terrifically and had their share of victory.

And are these twenty-two years of glory all the praiseworthy fighting of which the French soldier can boast? Far from it. He has a fighting history that for scope of field and range of operations over the world is second only to that of England. And not even second in the matter of fighting. Second merely in fighting that does not result in the fruits of battle, which, after all, is more of a diplomatist's job and not the province of a soldier.

During the eight celebrated Crusades of history undertaken to rescue the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem from the anti-Christian, the French soldier did his full share of fighting and then some to spare. In the First Crusade, 1095, Hugh, the brother of King Philip I. of France, led a large army of his countrymen into Constantinople, from which rallying point they advanced on Nice and Antioch, and finally took Jerusalem in company with their allies. It was French soldiers who erected and guarded the little kingdom encircling the holy tomb. In 1147 Louis VII. of France led 150,000 soldiers across Europe and laid siege to Damascus. Philip Augustus, King of France, in company with Richard the Lion Hearted of England, captured Acre in the Third Crusade, 1189. The Count of Flanders led another French army in the Fourth Crusade, 1202, during which Constantinople was captured as a feat incidental to the main purpose and without Crusade value whatever.

French valor has a very decided dating point from the battle of Bouvines, fought August 27, 1214. Philip Augustus, the French King, attacked an immensely superior force of 150,000 English, Flemish and German troops and won a complete victory. The Counts of Flanders and Boulogne were delivered to the French cruelly, and a five year truce was bought of Germany by the payment of 60,000 marks. Louis IX. of France, or Saint Louis, led the Seventh and Eighth Crusades with enthusiastic French soldiers in the years 1249 and 1270 by way of Egypt and Tunis. He died in the latter country, the last champion of the attempt to gain and guard the Holy Sepulchre.

Flemings Vanquished.

During the reign of Charles VI. of France a great victory was gained over the Flemings at the battle of Rosebecque, 1382. This was a knights' victory, the Flemings being trampled under hoof by thousands.

To this day the praises of the devoted French maiden Jeanne d'Arc are sung. She donned armor and led the French soldiers of her day to the successful siege of Orleans, May, 1429, and the capture of Troyes, beating the English conclusively at both places. In 1453 the French soldier won another victory over the English on the field of Castillon, leaving Calais the only English possession in France.

In the reign of Francis I. of France another brilliant fighting epoch of the French soldier was reached. It was the day of the immortal Chevalier Bayard, the beau ideal of the courtly battler of the time, whose every action was without fear and above reproach. At the battle of Marignano, 1515, the French army, after having been led over the Alps through narrow, chamois hunters' paths, clashed with an army of Swiss in the pay of Italy. The Swiss were compelled to retreat with a loss of 15,000. Bayard was knighted by Francis on the battlefield for bravery. A French army gained a decisive victory over the German imperialists at Cerisolles, April 14, 1544. The battle of Ivry, January 11, 1590, between Henry of Navarre and his League enemies made Henry King of France. The fight was all between Frenchmen, but it was a notable example of valiant battling around the white plume that has been so often sung.

Two great French war captains made their country famous during the minority of Louis XIV. One was the young Duke d'Enghien, afterward famous as the Prince of Condé. He defeated a force of Austrians and Spaniards at Rocroi, May 19, 1643; a Bavarian army at Nordlingen, 1645, and in 1646, aided by a Dutch fleet, captured Dunkirk. Another one of his noteworthy victories was gained over the Archduke Leopold at Lens August 20, 1648. Marshal Turenne, the other great French commander of the period, was equally successful, winning several minor victories in Flanders during 1645 and after capturing Treves inflicting a severe defeat upon the German imperialists near Augsburg, 1646. It was Condé who hurled his marshal's baton into the enemy's trenches so that he might recover it sword in hand.

During the reign of Louis XIV. the French soldier also achieved brilliant victories under Marshal Luxemburg and took Alsace-Lorraine. At Fleurus, June 30, 1690, he defeated an English, Dutch and German army under the Prince of Waldeck. Another victory was gained over the same allies headed by King William of England in person at Steinkirk, in Hainault, July 24, 1692. Luxemburg defeated William again at the battle of Neerwinden, July 29, 1693, and there did the French soldier fight harder for his victory. During the War of the Spanish Succession, beginning in the latter part of the seventeenth century and lasting until 1714, the French soldier fought and fought and fought against the great Marlborough, always returning for another try for victory after each stinging defeat at the hands of the famous English commander. Remember, it required French valor to make British victory noteworthy.

The War of the Austrian Succession brought additional lustre to the arms of France through the leadership of the celebrated Maurice, Count of Saxony, afterward Marshal Saxe. May 11, 1745, he defeated an English and Hanoverian army under the Duke of Cumberland at Fontenoy, and as fruits of the victory Tournay, Ghent, Bruges, Oudenarde and other cities of Flanders were surrendered to him. Saxe then captured after siege Brussels, Antwerp and Namur, and, defeating the Austrians at Raucoux, near Liege, made himself the master of all of Belgium—then under the dominion of Austria. France then declared war on Holland, and Saxe led his French soldiers over the Dutch frontier and captured the whole line of fortresses on the Scheldt, from Antwerp to the sea, in less than a month. Then he turned on the English and Hanoverian forces under Cumberland, and at the battle of Lawfeld drove them behind the Meuse. In 1748 he captured Maestricht. During the famous Seven Years War the French soldier faced Frederick the Great at Rossbach, November 3, 1757, and, although fighting hard, went down to a defeat that caused his victor to be acclaimed the greatest captain of his age.

Napoleon's Finished Fighters.

For two years before Napoleon became the dominating military figure the fighting man of France had been serving a war apprenticeship. He came to the great conqueror a finished workman in the new battling art. All he needed was the leader. On September 20, 1792, saw troops of France cannonaded a seasoned army of Prussians and Austrians at Valmy into ignominious retreat. Dumouriez won another victory over the Austrians at Jemappes, November 6, 1792. This was the same Dumouriez and the same army concerning which the general said that "they marched out like madmen and returned like gods" in earlier encounters.

From September, 1793, four French generals led the French soldier to hard fighting and victory during the remainder of the year. Houchard drove the English from Dunkirk; Jourdan crushed the Austrians at Wattignies; Hoche and Pichegru defeated the allies under Brunswick and Wurmser at Worth and Weissenberg. In 1794 Moreau defeated the Duke of York at Tourcoing and Ypres. Jourdan made himself famous by his great victory at Fleurus, causing the Duke of York to retreat into Brabant; Pichegru seized Antwerp, made a forced march over the ice and captured the Dutch fleet in the Texel. Thus boldly facing a foreign army at each of her frontiers, and beating them one after the other, France came to the year 1795, the year of the wonderful Italian campaign and the rise of the star of Bonaparte.

Years of Achievement.

Henceforth every French soldier felt that he "carried a marshal's baton in his knapsack." Napoleon insisted that he did, and promotions from the ranks to generalship solely on merit in action seemed to prove it. Five, ten and fifteen years of marvellous achievement followed. The fighter of France proved that his great leader and emperor was right when he said: "Impossible is the adjective of fools." The list of accomplishment is too long to detail. Success in one remarkable battle was repeated in another quickly following. The French soldier performed prodigies of valor in them all.

Four principal battles of Napoleon's career illustrate in an epochal way what his armies did for him. These battles are Marengo, June 14, 1800, by which he gained the indisputable first place of power in France; Austerlitz, December 2, 1805, by which he compelled Europe to acknowledge this ascendency; Leipzig, October 16-19, 1813, by which Russia, Prussia and Austria were able to dash Napoleon from his European pedestal, and Waterloo, June 18, 1815, by which the great Emperor lost the confidence of France and consequently his control. Marengo is the antithesis of the battle of Waterloo and Austerlitz that of Leipzig. At Marengo the soldier of France whipped Austria. At Austerlitz he whipped Austria and Russia combined. At Leipzig he was whipped by Russia, Prussia and Austria allied. At Waterloo he was whipped by a combined army of English, German, Prussian, Hanoverian and Belgian troops. When beaten, he was always outnumbered. These battles are aside from his unparalleled sufferings during the awful retreat from Moscow in 1812.

The battle of Austerlitz has been termed the most complete victory on land during the whole of the Revolutionary or Napoleonic wars. So what the French soldier did there may be properly considered the apex of his effectiveness as a fighter. It caused the death of the great English statesman, William Pitt, who said when he heard the news:—"Roll up the map of Europe; it will not be wanted these ten years." In this one battle Russia and Austria were reduced to the condition of humble suppliants. Thereafter whenever the mighty Emperor led his soldiers to battle and wished to instill enthusiasm he would say:—"See, the sun of Austerlitz shines on us. We cannot fail." This because on the morning of the battle the sun broke through the clouds and mists, and Bonaparte prophesied that it was an augury of victory for the French.

Napoleon's Strategy Won.

At Austerlitz the French soldier demonstrated that he had advanced to a military proficiency never before equalled. The battle was one in which the superior strategy of Napoleon won, but his operations were so delicately timed that the slightest delay or failure in the sudden advance and seizure of the plateau of Pratzen would have been fatal. The Emperor's troops of this period of French fighting history were a consummate blend of enthusiasm, comprehension, patience, endurance and dash.

Forgetting the importance of the plateau, the allies deliberately planned to use their forces to cut Napoleon off from Vienna by turning his right. The rest of the Emperor's army was in quarters near the capital. They attempted this move in the full sight of the Emperor, who gloated over their fatal foolishness as he watched their columns marching across his front to take up position. Napoleon had one small cavalry corps retire purposely as though intimidated at the approach of the enemy's armies. The humblest French soldier was soon aware of the mistake being made by the Russians, and when Napoleon visited the bivouacs that night he was everywhere huzzaed. One grizzled grenadier is reported to have stepped forward from his fire to Bonaparte's horse and said:—"I promise thee that to-morrow we will bring thee the colors and the cannon of the Russian army to fete the anniversary of thy coronation." The story is vouched for as indicating the survival of the Revolutionary republican spirit in the army despite the trappings of empire. For that matter Napoleon's soldiers considered his titles and honors as secondary, matter of course appendages to his ability and renown as a war captain.

In the morning when the fog lifted Napoleon gave the signal to his impatient commanders and army. Soult's division rushed up the heights of Pratzen, driving the manoeuvering Russians down the slopes. That settled the battle. Incidentally there was a terrific hand to hand encounter right between cavalry in which the Russian horse guards were cut to pieces. Then masses of Russians fled over the pond of Telnitz. Napoleon ordered his artillery to play on the ice, which broke beneath the soldiers. This detail of the victory was a massacre. The Russians and Austrians lost 27,000 dead and wounded and the French 8,500. The triumph placed Napoleon and the French soldier at the zenith of their glory.

France's Fighting Men.

Several characteristics of the fighting man of France stand out during these wonderful two and twenty years. The chief of these may be called the almost fanatical consecration to the task of beating in battle every king or commander of a king or soldier of a king that came before him. No Mohammedan was ever more reckless of life or willing to sacrifice that life to principle. The guillotine period of Revolutionary France was responsible for a callousness to death. Childhood had witnessed beheadings and gore until boys and girls asked to be taken to executions as an amusement similar to going to a circus. Boys who became Napoleonic soldiers later became accustomed to the sight of fathers and mothers and relatives seized at supper and executed within forty-eight hours. Death had snatched some one in every household. So certain was it to come that children heard it joked about. The pall of death imminence hung over them. They were taught that the kings and armies menacing France were responsible for the guillotine. They became the most redoubtable soldiers of Europe, for they fought for years to force an acquiescence in their views.

It is related that Frederick William of Prussia, in an engagement near Frankfort in 1791, saw a young French grenadier holding a slope alone against a score of enemies. He had him taken alive, and when he was brought before him said:—

"You are a brave lad, and it is a pity you fight for a bad cause."

"Citizen William," replied the young soldier, "we should never agree on that point. We'd better change the subject."

Thus the strong anti-king belief made the French soldier invincible. He believed he was ordained to uplift the world. This belief had the force of a religion with him, the same as Christianity overcame Rome and Mohammedanism subdued great peoples of Asia and Africa. Because of this a levy of 750,000 men was raised quickly to face the nations battering at the frontiers of France. All were inoculated with the revolutionary principle and felt themselves apostles ready for sacrifice of self. They had a hardihood and heroism that could never be shaken and which never failed them in the direst misfortune.

Their leaders helped to make the French soldier irresistible. All were young men, and men who achieved their rank by deeds on the field and not through influence. Napoleon was but twenty-seven when he began his memorable Italian campaign. Hoche, a corporal in 1788, was a general of division and commander of an army at twenty-five. The extreme youth of these leaders naturally brought with it the accompaniment of youth, a dash, an impetuosity and an unusual way of fighting which bewildered the older generals of the allies.

Mass Formation.

Many of the victories of the French soldier of the period were gained through an attack comparable in its elements to the French temperament. The column or mass system was in vogue. The troops were formed in battalions in column and hurled at the enemy's line. Nine times out of ten the enemy had to give way. But much was risked on the one charge. The French enthusiasm was at the boiling point when the attack was ordered. It was like his nature to leap en masse, shouting his human battering ram on to victory. When the mighty catapult of the French soldier landed on the enemy's van experience showed that something had to give way. The young French generals altered the fighting system of formation, and until Wellington had schooled European troops not to be frightened beforehand at the advance of great masses of glistening bayonets they won their battle by it. Between 1792 and 1809 nearly 700,000 troops out of 2,500,000 sent to battle perished on the field. Nothing daunted, the French soldier fought terrifically fifteen years longer.

Another striking characteristic of the French soldier was his idolatrous loyalty to Napoleon. This devotion was incomprehensible even to the great Emperor, who made use of it so often. Men were proud to be cut to pieces under his eye. His marshals shared in the worship, although they had fought with him when he did not seem anything but ordinary clay like themselves.

On the retreat from Moscow it is related in a large number of memoirs and accounts that the thousands dying along the snowy road roused up to give a dying "Vive l'Empereur!" Young soldiers especially thought him a god. His marshal, Desaix, at Marengo insisted that a final trial be made because "I am ready to die for you." And so he did die. When Napoleon waxed impatient at a critical point in a battle because his plans halted he had only to say something sarcastic about "wavering devotion" and his soldiers cried with shame and mortification and begged to be ordered to their death.

No French Decadence.

While the French soldier attained the crowning point of his glory in the Napoleonic era, the years since then have found him valiantly fighting when his country called him to arms. In the Crimean War, forty years after Waterloo, he acquitted himself admirably. In the attack on Sebastopol, September 8, 1855, he seized Malakoff, his part of the battle programme, while the British soldier was forced to retire before he could perform his share by taking the Redan. In Algiers the French soldier has battled often and well in the conflict covering nearly half a century necessary to the establishment of French dominion in Africa. He fought hard in India before England was able to clinch her hold beyond all rivalry in the Far East.

These acknowledged to be most conversant with the fighting spirit of France and the fighting ability of the French soldier have always denied that the German triumph of 1870 and 1871 was conclusive proof of German superiority or French decadence. They maintain that the French soldier was impregnated with republican principles and put up only a half-hearted fight. He did not rise to battling his hardest for an emperor who was not a soldier and for a cause that had its origin in the differences of diplomats rather than abridgments of elemental rights or liberties.

Even in the humiliating defeat and without competent leaders the French soldier in the Franco-Prussian War fought better than is generally credited. The chronological details address this fact.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Rivals

They Were an Old Bachelor and a Young Sailor

By F. A. MITCHEL

When John Gorman died he left his daughter Helen an orphan with no income. Richard Hunter, a bachelor friend of Gorman's, had lent him $3,000, taking a mortgage on his farm for security. Hunter did not ask for the security; Gorman insisted on giving it.

Helen Gorman was but seventeen years old when her father died and knew nothing about his affairs, but Gorman had talked with his friend about her.

"Dick," he said, "Helen at my death will have nothing but the farm, and you hold a mortgage on that for pretty near all it is worth. There's only one thing that would give me any comfort at leaving her, and that's out of the question."

"What is it?" asked Hunter.

"If I could see you and Helen married before I die I wouldn't feel worried about her."

A faint flush came over Hunter's face and a light of pleasure in his eye, but it was transient.

"That can't be," he replied sadly, "on account of the difference in our ages. Helen is but sixteen, and I'm thirty-eight."

"That's not an impassable barrier. But there is another reason why I can't see my little girl provided for as I would like. She's given her heart to a young sailor."

Hunter looked grave at this and asked if the lover would not be able to take care of Helen. Whereupon Gorman told him that the youngster was wild, without ambition and would not be likely even to take care of any one, not even himself.

Gorman died without again referring to the matter. Helen had the good sense to send for Hunter and ask him to take charge of her affairs. There being no funds, he provided for her immediate wants out of his own pocket, concealing the fact from her. After her father's funeral she consulted Hunter as to what she should do. He told her that there was no income for her, but said nothing about the mortgage he held. That was at a time when the fields for self support for women were not open to them as they are now. Helen looked very much troubled.

"It seems to me," said Hunter, "that you had better be married. Isn't there some one you would like to marry?"

"Yes," was the reply, "there is. But he couldn't support a wife just yet. Besides, he is at sea all the while, and I should be left alone."

"It is a pity that I am so much older than you. I would be only too glad to provide for you as my wife."

Helen made no reply to this, and Hunter left her. At the end of every month he gave her $50. She asked him if the property had produced that amount, and he told her that it might produce the total during the year, but the income was not regular. This was saved from being a falsehood only by the word "might."

Since Brackett, the sailor, did not return—and there was nothing to be expected from him when he did—Helen made up her mind to marry Richard Hunter. He was kind to her—she did not know how kind—and she took comfort in having him for a protector. She also felt companionable with him. But she had built up an imaginary idol out of the sailor boy, and it would not crumble. Her decision to give herself to Hunter was therefore made reluctantly and after a copious flow of tears.

Hunter flushed with pleasure when she told him that she would marry him. She had made a resolution to banish young Brackett from her mind and acted a lover's part toward Hunter so well that he was deceived into thinking that she was quite content, if not possibly happy, in her decision. But he did not hurry her, preferring that she should have plenty of time to be off with the old love before taking on a new one.

As time wore on Helen seemed to grow more and more satisfied with her decision, and at times Hunter thought he could perceive a glimmer of true love in her treatment of him. Indeed, so encouraged was he that he asked her to name the day. She did so quite willingly.

Hunter, though not sheering off so far from the truth as to leave it entirely, convinced her that she was living on her own income and when the wedding day was fixed contrived to make her believe that a windfall had come to her property, which would pay for a trousseau. This was especially pleasing to her, for nature has not yet produced a woman who would be indifferent to this accessory to her marriage. Helen made her purchases and went to work with a will in the construction of a wardrobe.

Suddenly there came a thunderclap from a clear sky. Rob Brackett returned from his voyage with a fine sum of prize money, his share of the salvage of a disabled ship that his vessel had towed into port. He burst in upon Helen, not knowing of the change that had come over her, with the news, finishing with the words, "Now, sweetheart, let us be married at once."

When Hunter heard of his rival's return he went to Helen and said to her:

"I wish you to consider yourself released and to feel perfectly free to marry the man who has returned to you."

"I have given you my promise," was the reply, "and I will keep it."

But Hunter saw that her heart was not in her words. He asked her to tell him truthfully whether he or the sailor possessed it. She tried to evade the question, but Hunter would not be put off. At last he forced her to tell the truth. Her heart had been given to Brackett, and she was unable, if she would, to take it back again.

Hunter at once withdrew in favor of his rival. With an effort he succeeded in concealing from Helen what a crushing blow had fallen upon him in his loss. One matter puzzled him. Now that another was to be her husband the fact that Hunter had been supplying her with the wherewithall to live, that he had deceived her in the matter of the windfall for the trousseau, that he held a mortgage on her farm for all it was worth, must come out. How should he break the fact to her?

Hunter was a very sensitive man. He was much broken by his disappointment, and, though he had been resolute in giving up his bride expectant, he was vacillating in the matter of how to let her know that instead of possessing property she was a pauper. Worry made him ill, and he was confined to his bed.

Helen, who, importuned by the sailor, had accepted her release and agreed to marry Brackett before he sailed again, went on with the preparations for a wedding in which there was to be a change of grooms. She seemed to regret the disappointment she had occasioned Hunter, and Brackett in order that her break with his rival should be complete proposed that a transfer of the care of her property should be made to him. Helen reluctantly consented.

Brackett went to see Hunter, whom he found in bed, and asked for an accounting of Helen's estate. Hunter was too ill to invent any more subterfuges and was obliged to make a clean breast of the matter. Brackett returned to Helen with the information that she had nothing and that all she had received had been given her by Hunter.

"I believe," added Brackett, "that the fellow has contrived to get your property into his own possession."

Helen looked at him like one dazed. Then suddenly, without a word, she went out and strode rapidly in the direction of Hunter's house. Brackett, who did not know what action she would take, watched her till she had passed out of sight, then went into the house to await developments.

Hunter was lying alone in his misery when suddenly the girl he loved hurried into his room, sank on her knees by his bed, put her arms around him and moaned:

"Forgive me."

Renewed vigor ran through the sick man's weakened body. He sat up, took the girl in his arms, and there were caresses such as had never passed between them before.

"Send some one," she said presently, "to tell him to go away."

An hour later Richard Hunter, walking with a tread that had received a powerful stimulus, appeared at Helen Gorman's home. Brackett, who was awaiting Helen's return, saw him coming. Having left Hunter a short time before ill in bed, he wondered. A dread took possession of him. Hunter came up to him and said:

"I am commissioned by Miss Gorman to tell you that she has come to a final decision between you and me and in my favor."

Brackett was thunderstruck. He made no reply for some time, then said:

"If Miss Gorman will say that to me or write it I will accept it as the truth."

Hunter drew a bit of paper from his pocket and handed it to the sailor. He read it, tore it into bits, turned on his heel and left the house.

On the evening that Hunter married Helen the returned sailor spent the prize money he had brought home in an orgy and the next day went on another voyage.

USE STRONG ELECTRO-MAGNETS TO REMOVE GERMAN BULLETS

Some of the Details of Sanitary Precautions in the Hospitals--Conditions Are Nearly Perfect

PARIS, September 30.—During the course of an official mission which he has fulfilled since the beginning of the war on the battle fields, in ambulances and hospitals, Professor Edmond Delorme, a member of the Academy of Medicine and Medical Inspector General of the Army, has made observations which he has just submitted for the consideration of the Academy of Science.

He showed that in the armies the sanitary condition is perfect. The wounded Frenchman is a healthy man. Illness is exceptional. The number of cases of illness is less than the number of cases in time of peace, and Professor Delorme has met no ill persons, only the wounded.

There is complaint of certain delays on the battlefields, the extent of 150 to 200 kilometres (94 to 125 miles) makes the immediate removal of all of the wounded impossible. On the other hand, removal having been made, the transportation is necessarily long.

In aid of the first measures to be taken, Professor Delorme has constructed waterproof containing apparatus (gutters) for all fractures of the upper and lower limbs, which he presented to the Academy, experimenting with a soldier before the Academicians.

Apparatus used for Complicated Cases

In one day, the professor said, he was able to use twenty-five of these apparatus for the most complicated fractures of the thigh and fifteen for the most complicated fractures of the leg.

In the present war, complications of wounds appear with a relative frequency and gravity which are surprising. The efforts of all the surgeons are directed to combatting them. Thes complications are:

1. A gaseous gangrene.
2. Tetanus.

Against gaseous gangrene injections of oxygenated water are found to be preferable to amputations and large incisions, but this first treatment must be thorough.

Against dangers of tetanus oxygenated water is also recommended, but when tetanus has declared itself or is imminent injections of anti-tetanic serum are necessary. On the other hand, sulphate of magnesia in intra-arachnidian injections cause contractions to stop and relieves the wounded man.

Electro-Magnet used to Extract Bullets

Dr. Dastre indicated several operations that had been performed by Dr. Rollet with the aid of a gigantic electro-magnet. This electro-magnet which can lift more than 1,250 kilogrammes (2,530 pounds) is very successful in extracting the balls of the German rifle, which have a ferro-nickel envelope, and also splinters of steel. It attracts the balls at a distance of eleven centimetres (4.2 in.) and the splinters at a distance of 15 centimetres (6 inches). An incision completes the operation. Thus extractions have been possible with or without anaesthesia.

Dr. Gaston Darboux, the permanent secretary, called attention to the use of paper garments by the troops as a protection against the cold. Dr. Carpentier vouched for the excellence of such garments. Dr. Laveran recalled the fact that in 1870 in the army of the Loire during a period of terrible cold many of the officers protected themselves by the use of ordinary newspapers. Things are better to-day, and the Japanese have already made use of a paper shirt.

By common consent this addition to clothing was approved.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightful to women because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

Famous French Watering Places Utterly Destroyed

Lid is Clamped Tight on Deauville and Trouville—Big Gambling Halls Are Equipped as Hospitals—Grand Villas Empty and Silent

(By Herbert E. Corey.)

PARIS—We were standing before the great gambling pavilion of Trouville.

"Last year," said my companion, nodding at the silent structure, "I stood in there and watched a Russian grand duke play roulette. He never bet less than 2000 francs. Half the night his bet was 10,000 francs. His women, six of them, the most ravishing beauties I have ever seen, stood behind his chair, dressed in the most chic of Parisian toilettes. Now and then the favourite of the night bent to whisper in his ear, or pour him a glass of champagne, or light his cigarettes between her fresh lips."

This year the great pavilion has been seized by the government for hospital purposes. Ranked in orderly rows upon the gambling floor are little white beds, waiting their freight of wounded men. Over the grand entrance flutters the flag of the Red Cross. The street in front is silent and deserted, except for a passing infantryman or a hospital attendant wearing the white band with the red cross upon his arm.

The whole Norman coast is to become one vast hospital. In the season—this should be the height of the season—these resorts are filled with the most fashionable and extravagant patrons in the world. There is a Deauville hotel in which a single room cannot be obtained for less than $20 a day. In Trouville is a street hardly a city block long—its ends are chained against vehicles — in which each woman of elegance in Europe feels she must appear half a dozen times during the season. The great Parisian modistes and milliners have tiny ateliers there. Later in the year they follow their flitting customers to Monte Carlo. Prices pass the pinacle of folly and become sublime. This year there is but one clerk in the street—a little Parisian in the shop in which "American drinks" are sold.

"Do not buy of me, M'sieur," she begged. "I have spent two days here"—with a sweep of the arm—"without a customer. M'sieur will understand that I wish to establish a record unique!"

Great Resorts Deserted.

Deauville and Trouville are separated by an arm of the sea so narrow that it is bridged. Taken together, they become a gambling resort that is second only to Monte Carlo. Their hotels are among the most luxurious and costly in the world. The whole Norman coast is lined with fashionable villas and great hotels and residential resorts. In Le Havre the Hotel Frascati is one of the largest—perhaps it is the largest—in France. Every great hotel has been requisitioned by the government for hospital purposes. At Deauville is perhaps the most beautiful of the world's gambling houses. It is a gem, set in flowers upon a velvet lawn. Before it sparkles a sea that seems always sunny.

"In the casino I saw one of the younger millionaires of New York lost $30,000 in 10 bets," said my companion. "It happened so rapidly that the room was not aware of it. Not half a dozen people saw him lose that fortune."

It has been taken over for a hospital. Wounded privates from the armies of France will lie in that room from which they would have been contemptuously ejected by liveried flunkies two months ago. Their weary eyes will rest upon a ceiling painted by one of the great artists of France. More money has been won and lost in five minutes in the space occupied by a single bed than the occupant of that bed could earn in France in all his life. It is difficult to comprehend the utter poverty of some of these poor devils.

"The greatest need," said the lady who organized the volunteer hospital force at Houlegate, 20 miles down the coast, "it semes to me, will be for shirts."

That did not occure to me as the greatest need, and I said so.

"Consider," said she. "Some of these men have no shirts—not anything—between their uniform coats and the bare skin. They have never worn shirts, even in winter. The rough seams of the heavy coats cut through their skins until their bodies are raw."

These coast resorts are utterly deserted. Here and there a little shop remains open to sell the necessities of life to those who cannot go away. The great villas, owned by the richest and most fashionable men and women of France and Europe, are silent and empty. Their doors and windows are boarded. Only a caretaker remains, who spends his time in pottering about the blowing beds of brilliant flowers. Many of these villas have been requisitioned by the government for use as hospital quarters for officers. All will be, if needed.

Residents are requested to notify the government of the number of convalescent officers who can be cared for in their homes is somewhat after the fashion of recent notice. Owners have not the power to refuse. If they were anything less than obliging they might be punished. The government is ruling with the strong hand in these days. Nine business men out of ten in these coast resorts will be absolutely destroyed financially. That fact is not being considered.

IMPROVED RIFLES AND BULLETS

It must be a marvellously deadly infantry rifle which had so far reduced the masses engaged for a given mile. Its range is a mile and a quarter, on the average, and its bullet whistles through the air at the rate of about 2500 feet a second when it leaves the muzzle. The German rifle propels its projectile at the muzzle velocity of 2952 feet a second, and is in that respect superior to any military rifle in the world. On the other hand the French rifle has a longer range by about quarter of a mile.

By France the "D" bullet is used, by Germany the "S" bullet. The difference between the two is largely one of shape. Both are pointed at the forward end; but the "D" bullet is longer and tapers off slightly toward the rear, whereas the German "S" terminates abruptly. Of the two the French bullet is the better because it churns up the air less. The German bullet's greater speed is obtained because it is lighter than the French and because it is propelled from the rifle by a heavier charge of explosive.

The energy of each type of bullet at all ranges has been mathematically studied by French and German ballistic experts, so that its possibilities are known to a nicety. Any French officer can tell you, for example, that the German "S" bullet, weighing ten grammes (154 grains) must have a speed of 300 to 400 feet per second to disable a man, and 625 to 650 feet per second in order to disable a horse at a range of about a mile and a quarter. Need it be said that the powder charges have been carefully calculated to give the bullet that energy?

Consider what this energy means. Drop a ten-grammne weight in a vacuum from a height of twenty-four and a half miles and it will have about the same striking force as a bullet discharged by a German infantry rifle. That amount of energy must therefore be developed in a steel barrel thirty-one inches long. Were it not for modern smokeless powder that miracle could not be performed. As it is the German "S" and the French "D" bullet can kill a man at a mile and a quarter, or penetrate more than one-half an inch of pine wood.—From "The War as Affected by New Inventions," by Waldermar Kaempffert, in the American Review of Reviews for October.

LAXATIVE FOR OLD PEOPLE—"CASCARETS"

Salts, Calomel, Pills, Act on Bowels Like Pepper Acts in Nostrils

Get a 10-cent box now.

Most old people must give to the bowels some regular help, else they suffer from constipation. The condition is perfectly natural. It is just as natural as it is for old people to walk slowly. For age is never so active as youth. The muscles are less elastic. And the bowels are muscles.

So all old people need Cacarets. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect this gentle aid to weak bowels. The bowels must be kept active. This is important at all ages, but never so much as at fifty.

Age is not a time for harsh physics. Youth may occasionally whip the bowels into activity. But a lash ain't be used every day. What the bowels of the old need is a gentle and natural tonic. One that can be constantly used witsout harm. The only such tonic is Cascarets, and they cost only 10 cents per box at any drug store. They work while you sleep.

ATTACKS REPULSED.

Germans at Antwerp Driven Back With Great Loss.

LONDON, Oct. 3. — The Antwerp correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co. has sent the following despatch:

"The German attack on the fort and approaches of Koningshoyck (one of the new forts on the outer line) Thursday night was repulsed.

"A violent attack on Termonde was repulsed at two o'clock yesterday morning, the Belgians blowing up the bridge (over the Scheldt).

"The Belgians undertook a counter-attack from Antwerp Friday morning on the front of the easterly position. This still continues.

"The Germans have suffered heavily everywhere under the well-directed machine gun fire of the Belgians," according to a statement cabled from Antwerp by the correspondent of the Central News. "At the Wavre and St. Catharine forts alone (outside of Antwerp) the German dead may be counted by thousands. At several points the corpses lie in heaps. Entire companies have been exterminated, while the other troops were driven back at the point of the bayonet."

POSITION TOO STRONG.

Servian General Temporarily Abandons Attack on Sarajivo.

LONDON, Oct. 3—A despatch from Nish, Servia, according to a telegram from the Rome correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co., asserts that Gen. Jankovitch, the Servian commander-in-chief, has ordered that the attempt to capture Sarayovo be abandoned temporarily, as it was found that the Austrians defending the city occupy positions that could only be taken by great sacrifices. The Servian general staff considers such action unjustifiable at the present moment.

WHAT CAUSES COLDS?

This question and "How to Prevent Colds" is asked a thousand times every day. A cold is really a fever, not always caused by the weather but due to a disordered condition of the blood or lack of important food-elements. In changing seasons fat-foods are essential because they distribute heat by enriching the blood and so render the body better able to withstand the varying elements.

This is the underlying reason why the medicinal fats in Scott's Emulsion quickly overcome colds and build strength to prevent more serious sickness. It contains nature's medicinal fats, so skillfully prepared that the blood profits from every drop, and it is totally free from harmful drugs.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Hon. J. D. Reid, Minister of Customs, has been appointed honorary lieutenant-colonel of the 56th Grenville Regiment.

Application for extension of time will be made to the Dominion Parliament next session by the Brantford & Hamilton Electric Railway Co.

Guglielmo Marconi, inventor of wireless telegraphy, has completed an inspection of the wireless stations throughout Italy and reports finding them efficient.

Samuel Atkins came up before Judge Roger at Cobourg yesterday and was sentenced to one year in jail on a charge of assault on a young girl under fifteen.

The death occurred in Brockville of V. H. Marshall for many years prominent in the commercial and municipal life of Brockville. He served eight terms in the City Council.

The corner-stone of a Carnegie public library at Sterling, Ont., was laid with Masonic ceremony in the presence of 1,500 people. The village provided the site and received a gift of $5,000 from the Carnegie Trust.

AN EASY WAY TO GET FAT AND BE STRONG

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on dragging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

Thanks to the remarkable new scientific discovery, it is now possible to combine into simple form the very elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This master-stroke of modern chemistry is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh-builders. Sargol aims through its re-generative, reconstructive powers to coax the stomach and intestines to literally soak up the fattening elements of your food and pass them into the blood, where they are carried to every starved, broken-down cell and tissue of your body. You can readily picture the result when this amazing transformation has taken place and you notice how your cheeks fill out, hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappear and you take on from 10 to 25 pounds of solid, healthy flesh. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. Your druggist has it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied, as per the guarantee found in every package.

Caution:—While Sargol has given excellent results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles it should not be taken by those who do not wish to gain ten pounds or more.

Undecided, Says Berlin.

BERLIN, Oct. 3.—(By wireless to Sayville, L.I.) — According to announcement made in Berlin yesterday the great battle in France is still undecided. The Germans are described as hammering the French positions at numerous points by their heavy artillery. The attempts of the allies to break through the German lines have been repulsed. The heaviest losses have been in the Argonne region.

School Teachers Warned.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 3. — Advices from Maestricht, close to the Belgian border, say that the schools in Liege and other towns and villages now in German hands are reopening and that the teachers are warned that they must instruct their pupils to be good in their behavior toward the Germans.

Good Sleep Good Health

Exhausted Nerves Were Fully Restored by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

When the nerve force expended in the day's work and in the act of living is not replenished by restful sleep at night you have cause to be alarmed, as physical bankruptcy stares you in the face. This letter directs you to the most satisfactory cure for sleeplessness.

Mr. Dennis Mackin, Maxton, Sask., writes:—"I have just finished using the sixth box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and I must say that when I commenced using it my nerves were so bad that I could scarcely get any sleep. I would lie in bed nearly all night without sleep, and anyone who has this trouble knows the misery of sleepless nights. The Nerve Food helped me from the start, and has built up my nervous system wonderfully. I now enjoy good, sound sleep, and instead of feeling tired in the morning I am strong and healthy, and well fitted for my daily work."

WILL PREVENT EXPORTS.

Holland's Decision Prevents Anglo-American Friction.

LONDON, Oct. 3. — Holland has given assurance that it will prevent the exportation of foodstuffs from Holland to Germany or to other countries now at war.

This action by the Dutch Government greatly simplifies the differences which have arisen concerning cargoes of food destined for the Netherlands, and makes it possible for the British Government to cease the seizure and investigation of cargoes of foodstuffs consigned to Dutch dealers.

The decision will eliminate also the friction caused by the seizure of foodstuffs bound from the United States to Rotterdam, and is described as gratifying both to the British Foreign Secretary, Sir Edward Grey, and the American Ambassador, who have been conferring daily as to what shipments may be properly considered contraband. A great percentage of the American exports to Holland is wheat and other foodstuffs, the status of which is now thoroughly defined.

LAWYERS HARD HIT.

Many of Frances' Legal Lights Have Fallen on Field.

PARIS, Oct. 3.—The French Bar has suffered the fortunes of war. In opening the sessions of the courts yesterday the public prosecutor, Jules Herbaux, announced that three judges of the Paris bench had been killed, while a list of dead issued by the War Office contained the names of many lawyers, among them being a large number of young men who had already entered on brilliant careers and whose futures seemed full of promise.

Justice Blondel, the public prosecutor said, fell in the fighting at the Meuse, Justice Matillon was killed at the Aisne and Justice Perlange was mortally wounded in a recent engagement.

Greece In Pacific.

ATHENS, Oct. 3.—(Via London)—Premier Venizelos of Greece has announced in the chamber that Greece is striving to avert war in the Balkans. He declared that Greece is willing to make concessions to Turkey, even going to the extent of restoring the Aegean Islands, taken during the latest war, on condition that Greek administration of the islands be continued.

Japanese Warships Wreck Fortress.

TOKIO, Oct. 3.—A flotilla of Japanese destroyers has wrecked the German barracks at Tsingtau and fire is reported to be raging within the fortifications. The Japanese fleet continues to bombard the fortress, which is also being shelled by British and Japanese batteries from the land side.

KAISER BILL'S LAMENT

A subscriber has handed the following verses in for publication:

Oh! woe to the morn I started this battle,
Though my soldiers were men, they turned out just cattle:
They wilt, they retreat, they fly and they squeal
When the British come at them with bayonets of steel.

I planned to be Kaiser of all the whole earth,
From north to south pole, to the land of my birth;
But by signs of the times, I'm beginning to think
If my country's not ruined she's just on the brink.

Those pig-headed Belgians were servants of mine,
Thought I'd sneak through their towns easy and fine:
But the French butted in, and to war they were goaded,
And Me and Mein Gott didn't know it was loaded.

On the Austrian soldiers I depended for help,
All destroyed by the Russian bear and his whelps,
It seems I've no allies by land or by sea—
They all turn their backs on Gott and on me.

Gott in Himmel! Oh, where shall I be
When the boys from Valcartier come over the sea?
They'll chase my big army from Belgium's fair sod,
I'll be wringing my hands, crying "Me and mine Gott."

Out in the North Sea my fleets bottled up,
Notwithstanding she's armed with guns made by Krupp.
They are anchored out there just waiting their fate,
My officers frightened, my men can't shoot straight.

And now I am beaten in the Valley of Seine,
The French have recaptured Alsace and Lorraine;
The Belgians are asking for a billion or more,
The allies are knocking at back and front doors.

I weep for my soldiers, so mild, though so bold,
Who have murdered the women and babies untold;
"Go back and sit down." You'll never have rest,
For vengeance is coming from north, south, east and west

Next the allies will say, "Kaiser William get out,"—
So I'll sail off to Canada and make my own kraut;
I shall not be happy, and I very much fear,
I'll be short of sausage, and of good German beer.

D. D. D. Opens New Era In Cure of Skin Diseases

Mr. Corns' case of eczema was known to almost every hospital and physician of reputation throughout the city of Toronto. His letter is another interesting demonstration of what is being accomplished by the famous specific D.D.D. Prescription.

"I will consider it a favor if you will allow me to add my testimonials to the many hundreds you no doubt have in praise of the great cures effected by the D.D.D. Prescription. I was a sufferer for two years with eczema on the legs and ankles. I tried three or four different doctors and none of them did me any good. I got tired of trying their remedies, I then went to a skin specialist, but he was no better than they.

"I secured a trial bottle of D.D.D. and it did me so much good that I sent for a dollar bottle, also a cake of soap. That is all I used, and I am perfectly well. You are at liberty to use my name, for I consider D.D.D. the best remedy in use.—I. W. CORNS, 21 Givens St., Toronto, Canada."

Ask any druggist to-day for D.D.D. Prescription. He'll tell you it allays the itch instantly—and soon there are signs of cure.

We have handled the remedy for years and regard it as the specific for skin troubles of all kinds. Come in or ask us about D.D.D. soap especially for tender skins.

We offer the first full size bottle on the guarantee that unless it stops the itch at once, it costs you not a cent.

ALLIES REPULSE GERMAN NIGHT ATTACK

German Defeat at Cracow Will Be a Crushing Blow

BRAVEST OF THE BRAVE

King of the Belgians Calms Citizens of Antwerp When Bombardment Was Feared

FOE CANNOT CRUSH THEM

ANTWERP, Oct. 2. — When the great German siege guns, "Beautiful Berthas," the Kaiser's artillerists call them, began the bombardment of Antwerp on Monday and the shells began to burst over the city there was a panic among th women, children and other non-combatants, which was speedily dissipated when Albert, Belgium's soldier King, appeared on the balcony of his palace and appealed to Belgians to be worthy of the traditions of their glorious little army.

"Be calm, said the King. "I hope to set an example to my wonderful people. The foe may ruin our land, but his greatest guns will never destroy the Belgian spirit or nationality. Our cause is just. We suffer for the right, but our grief will be assuaged, our wounds, healed, our outrages redressed, when in the hour of triumph justice comes to us, as it will come when the invincible armies of rance, England and Russia, supplemented by the support of our own brave soldiers, conquer.

"Thousands of Belgium's brave sons have died that freedom may live, and it will live. Long live Belgium! Long live our glorious Allies."

A great crowd wildly cheered the inspiring words of the heroic young King, and as his subjects sang the national anthem he left for the battle front along the first line of defences. He is in the trenches night and day.

VEGETABLES WERE CHEAP

Tomatoes and Cauliflower Are Now at Zero Prices—To-day's Markets

The benefit of the recent favourable weather is still being felt among marketers. Tomatoes are ripening with such rapidity that the market is glutted and in consequence large baskets may be obtained for 15c. each. It is expected, however, that the price will soon ascend. Cauliflowers, too, for the same reason, are selling at 5c. each, while only three weeks ago such a vegetable could not be purchased under 30c. Corn is cheap but small, selling at 5c. a dozen. Potatoes are 20c. a peck or $1 a bag, while apples may also be obtained for 20c. a peck. Pears are very scarce this year and those who are fortunate enough to get a supply have to pay 35c. and 40c. a peck for them. The same may be said of peaches, which have risen a further 5c this morning, selling now at 30c. a basket. Grapes are still 20c. and 25c. a basket.

In the inside market prices kept fairly firm. Eggs were 30c., butter 30c., chickens $1 and $1.10 per pair, and ducks 75c. each.

Purpose of The Patriotic Fund

Enquiries have frequently been made as to the Canada Patriotic Fund, and who will be benefitted thereby. Paragraph 7 of the Act Incorporating that Fund for the wives, children and dependents of the officers and men, residents of Canada who are rendering their services during the war reads thus:

The Corporation shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, apply or distribute to the best of its judgment, in such manner, among the persons entitled to share therein, and in such amounts, as in the absolute and uncontrolled discretion of the Corporation seems proper or advisable, and the Corporation shall take such means as it thinks necessary or advisable to ascertain who are entitled to share in the said fund, and to what extent and in what manner the persons entitled will be relieved by the Corporation.

Battle of Cracow May Decide The Duration of War

Russia's Army Will Be Put Through Real Acid Test--Germans Are Concentrating Their Strength in the Path of the Tzar's Thousands, Realizing That They Must Win to Save Morale of Nation.

RUSSIANS HAVE NOT YET BEEN STOPPED

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, Oct. 3.—The battle of Cracow as it will probably be called, is still in the initial stages. Russian outposts have engaged the Austro-German line along the Donajec River, just west of Tarnow which forms a natural barrier flowing almost directly north and south 34 miles east of Cracow. The battle line extends to the foothills of the Carpathian Mountains and flows over into Russian Poland north of the Vistula River where the Austrian and German lines are in contact.

The entire line is strongly held, it being estimated that the German forces alone number at least 750,000, while additional troops are constantly arriving. Precautions are being taken to prevent a flanking movement by the Germans against the Russians now in Galicia. The chief difficulty so far as the Russians are concerned has been the heavy rains. In this respect, however, the Russian equipment is far superior to the German. The enormously broad tires on all field equipment has made it possible to move the Russian transports, although slowly. The air scouts report, however, that wherever the Germans got off the main roads their auto transports have immediately been mired and in the fighting of last week they lost a great many guns.

Outcome Will Be Momentous

LONDON, October 3.—Special Cable.—The outcome of the European war will depend, to a great extent, on the battle now beginning in the near east. This battle, already referred to as the Battle of Cracow, will find the acid test applied to the Russian army. It will be demonstrated whether Russia is the active, potent, fighting force that her admirers claim that she is, or whether she is to be more hindrance than help in the attempt to crush Germany.

It is a new and untried Russian army that is in the field. The forces far outnumber all others, but whether the troops are to have the energetic direction of competent officers or are to be handled by blunderers, as was the case in the Russo-Japanese war, this battle, now commencing, must decide.

To Britain, therefore, the battle of Cracow will be considered of far greater importance than the long-drawn-out conflict now in progress in France. If the Russians can overwhelm the combined Austro-German army, the way will be open for an overwhelming advance on Berlin.

Germany is making a final desperate stand. She has massed the flower of her southern armies here. Everyone from the active line in France that could be spared has been sent to the east. The Kaiser himself is in full command of the movements, aided by the Chief of Staff, Von Moltke, and the council of Field Marshal Von der Goltz, who originated the secret defences along the Russian frontier, has been sought.

Every bit of information received here shows that Germany has staked everything on this battle. She hopes to decisively defat Russia, and to show that Russia is no more a factor in this war than she was in Manchuria. A decisive defeat of the Czar's forces, it is believed in Berlin, might result in at least a partial patching up of the differences between Russia and Germany, as the Czar would certainly face a revolution at home if his army were to be overwhelmingly defeated at this stage of the present war.

GERMAN LOSSSES ARE VERY HEAVY

LONDON, Oct. 3., 3 p.m.—The London official bureau says the German losses are so great that whole units are without officers.

SOME OF THE CANADIANS DISEMBARK

TORONTO, October 3. — Although there has been no official announcement of the landing of any Canadian troops in the Old Country, cables to-day contain references to greetings made by the Lord Mayor of London, Sir William Osler, Lord Rosebery and others, to Canadian troops, and it is thought that some of the contingent have already appeared in the Old Country.

HOME FROM GERMANY

Miss Killmaster, of Conservatory of Music Was in Dresden When European War Broke Out

HAD LITTLE TROUBLE

Miss Killmaster of the Conservatory of Music staff, returned to the city yesterday from Dresden, Berlin, where for several weeks previous to the outbreak of war, she was engaged in studying vocal and instrumental music with her former teacher, Mr. Field.

To the Examiner this afternoon, when interviewed, Miss Killmaster said that in spite of being a British subject she had little difficulty in leaving the Kaiser's dominion and getting passage to Canada.

Of course the whole of Germany, including Dresden, was in a turmoil and when hostilities first broke out foreigners were very closely watched. Miss Killmaster told of one young Englishman who near the residence of the King of Saxony in Dresden, was teaching his companion to whistle by means of his fingers when he was spied by some German officials. Suspected of being a spy and of attempting to signal, the young man spent the following week in jail. He was finally able to satisfy the authorities that he was not a spy or foreign agent and was released.

Three weeks ago the day before yesterday, Miss Killmaster attempted to leave Dresden with a young lady friend. They were not allowed to leave, however, as they had not reported to the police. They were detained for a day, and during that time attempted to secure passports, but failed, as no one in the city would take the responsibility of giving them. But finally Miss Killmaster, on the advice of some friends, telegraphed the German authorities at the Dutch border and received permission to leave the country. In doing so both she and her companion took their lives in their hands, but very fortunately no one interfered with them.

The chief difficulty in leaving Dresden was on account of nearly all the trains carrying troops. Miss Killmaster and her friend made their way to Holland on locals which travelled very slowly, the result being that the journey took more than twice the time it would ordinarily have occupied.

After they reached Queen Wilhelmina's territory, however, they had no difficulty whatever in getting passage in either trains or boats, and soon after their arrival in Holland sailed for England.

Spending four days in England, Miss Killmaster sailed from Glasgow, arriving safely in Canada without mishap. Very few British subjects have had the privilege of seeing Germany in a state of war, and in enjoying the privilege they at the same time take the risk of serious trouble to themselves. But such was the opportunity of Miss Killmaster, and while her statement to the Examiner to-day that she had very little trouble in leaving Germany is somewhat of a surprise after stories that others have circulated regarding conditions there, she has no doubt had an experience that will be a life-long memory. After the outbreak of hostilities she spoke only German in public so that she did not suffer the danger of being treated as a British subject by the mob.

Official Summary Of War Situation From Paris Office

German Night Attack Repulsed Near Roye---Crown Prince's Troops Foiled in Effort to Break Through--Bombardment of Antwerp Continues Heavy But No Serious Damage Done Yet.

RUSSIANS FORCE GERMAN ARMY BACK

Examiner Special:

PARIS, October 3.—The official review of the battle of the Aisne, which was issued at 3.05 this afternoon, confirms the report that the Germans failed in their night attacks last night when they tried to break through the French left in the vicinity of Roye, and between there and Lasigny.

It is stated that the Germans were heavily reinforced but that they have been unable to penetrate the French lines, and that they have again been repulsed with loss. The official communique also declares that an attempt on the part of the army of the Crown Prince to slip through the French line in the vicinity of the forest of Grurie, failed. The French attacked and drove the enemy back at this point. Generally speaking the situation in the centre is described as unchanged while constant progress is being made by the French in the Woevre district.

The Complete Official Statement

PARIS, October 3.—The complete text of the communique is as follows,—

"On our left wing a violent engagement, raging since yesterday, continues, particularly near Roye, where we have repulsed all attacks, although on part of the front the enemy has been reinforced by new troops, on the centre of the line.

"At the centre of the line there is nothing to report from Rheims to Argonne. In Argonne the 10th army corps of the Crown Prince's army tried to slip by the forest of Grurie but was repulsed at the north of the road of Varennes-La-Harazace-Vienne-La-Ville. The corps lost heavily.

"In the Woevre region and on the heighths of the Meuse our advance is slight but it has been steady.

"In Belgium the Germans are bombarding the south east front of the fortress of Antwerp without having suceeded in making any considerable effect on the works. Several infantry attacks made by them have been repulsed.

"In Russia one German army, having the strength of four corps, established between the Niemen River and the Prussian frontier, has been thrown back on its left wing upon Suwalki. At its centre the city of Augustowo has been reoccupied by the Russians and on the right wing the battle continues between Lyck and Blaystock.

"In Galicia the rear guards of Austrians are falling back in disorder beyond the Vistula. In Bosnia, the Montenegrin-Servian column continues its advance."

ANOTHER ITALIAN WARSHIP DOWN

ROME, Italy, Oct. 3.—Another Italian warship has been blown up by the Austrian mines, with a loss of 80 men.

FOUR MARSHALS OF FRANCE

LONDON, October 3.—The French Government will create four marshals of France. The men selected are Generals Joseph Joffre, the Commander-in-Chief of the French army, J. S. Gallieni, the military governor of Paris, Gerald Pau, and C. Decastelnau, who are now fighting on the line.

PRUSSIANS SUFFERED HEAVY LOSSES

LONDON, October 3.—A despatch from Copenhagen states that the first thirty-five Prussian casualty lists showed a total of 90,000 men killed, wounded and missing. This list includes about 1,000 officers who have been killed and 2,000 who have been wounded.

BRITISH M.P. WAS KILLED

Lieut. Harold Pearson Tried to Escape From Prison Enclosure After Capture by Germans

HIS ORDERLY ESCAPED

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Oct. 3.—Lieut. Harold Pearson, M.P., in the British Commons, son of Lord Cowdray, the noted oil financier, and head of S. Pearson and Son, Ltd., who was taken prisoner at the battle of the Marne, was later shot and killed by a German sentry while trying to escape. He and his orderly, a private named MacKay bolted from the prison enclosure; the sentry fired killing Pearson instantly. MacKay escaped and securing peasant's clothing, drove a calf through the German lines and reached the British forces.

Next Saturday Is Tag Day

Annual Appeal of Children's Aid Society Next Week

Next Saturday is Tag Day. While there are many appealing needs at the present time, the request of the Children's Aid Society is a very pressing one, and should call forth the hearty response of all citizens. Eighteen children are now being cared for at the Shelter, some of them belonging to soldiers gone to the front and whose mothers are lying ill in the hospital. It takes money to look after so many, and it is hoped that the "taggers" who will be on duty next Saturday, will be generously rewarded.

City To Have A Monopoly

On Sale of Electricity in Peterborough—Otonabee Co. Must Remove Distribution System

No power company has any legal right to distribute electricity for light or power in the City of Peterborough. The City is not only in the business, but it is in the business without opposition.

The Otonabee Light and Power Company are little less than trespassers on the City streets. Their ten-year franchise allowing them the use of the City's streets for their poles and wires expired last January and at the time the City Council not only refused to renew the franchise but ordered the Company to remove their poles from the streets. This has not yet been done, but undoubtedly some action will be taken in the near future to force the Company to remove their distribution system. This means that they cannot sell electricity in the City and as they are the only company at present doing so, it will be an easy matter for the City to establish its monopoly in the interest of the people.

Charlotte Street Not To Be Paved This Season

Charlotte Street will not be paved this year owing to the inability of the contractors to get vitrified brick. Meantime the other paving will be proceeded with. The cement has already been laid on Charlotte Street to Water, up Water to Hunter, and on Brock Street to Water Street, and on Water to Blewitt and Middleton's livery stable. This leaves only the short distance from the livery to Hunter Street to be completed. Aylmer Street is being got ready for the laying of the concrete base and it is expected that Simcoe Street, from George to Aylmer Street, will also be done this fall. That means that this year Charlotte Street, from George to Water, Water Street from Charlotte to Brock, Brock Street, from George to Water, Aylmer Street, from Charlotte to Brock, and Simcoe street from Water to Aylmer, will be paved this fall.

A RESEMBLANCE.

History has a way of repeating itself. Will it do so in the case of the present Ontario government? It has had a shaking up; will it have a shaking down as happened to the Conservative governments that followed the death of Sir John Macdonald? There was almost continuous deterioration till the grand debacle in 1896. Sir John Thompson might have held things together and creditably succeeded in succession even to as strong a leader as Sir John. But death intervened and from that time it was facilis decensus. It would perhaps be more polite than sincere to regard Mr. Hearst as being in the class of Sir John Thompson; and it may be more sincere than polite to suggest that the materials of a certain "nest of traitors"—the beginning of the end—may exist in the vicinity of Queen's Park. The opportunity given, history may repeat itself. There seems to be a suggestive resemblance between the conditions succeeding Sir John Macdonald's death and those following the death of Sir James Whitney.

"WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH HANNA?"

This bit of interrogatory slang seems to fit the situation. Why was not the "strong man" of the cabinet made premier and leader? As far as preferment goes, Hanna's head goes into the guillotine basket with Beck. Not long ago Hon. W. J. Hanna was offered the chairmanship of the Railway Commission. Though the position yielded a much larger salary than that of a cabinet minister, the offer was refused. It was well understood that he was to be the successor of Sir James Whitney, then well stricken in years and liable to retire. The question of Sir James' successor was not discussed two years ago, so general was the feeling that Hanna would be the man. Things have happened since then that dimmed the lustre of Mr. Hanna's administration. But that should not have been a bar. The standard of official virtue is not higher for a prime minister than a minister. If he is good enough for a minister he is good enough for a head. There must have been some friction in the domestic machine when the Ottawa machine was substituted. When the best brains of the cabinet are either cuckooed out of it or forced to subordinate rank, things are not as good as they should be. Both Mr. Hanna and Sir Adam Beck have been publicly humiliated, made puppets by the man who introduced Mr. Bourassa into Ontario in 1911, an action indicating how far Hon. Frank Cochrane is prepared to sacrifice decency and public considerations to the success of the party game.

NO DANGER AND DANGER.

If tight boots cause corns there seems to be little danger of the new Premier of Ontario suffering from such cuticular induration from wearing Premier Whitney's shoes. Hon. Mr. Hearst is a product of modern methods — machine made. If he makes a success of his office, if he should come to consider himself the trustee of the people, to consult their interests, he will have to break pretty sharply away from the influences that have been responsible for his appointment. To say that he is the product of a clique, even though that clique is the members of the Cabinet, is to simply state an acknowledged fact. He is not the choice of the people, even the large section of the people composed of the Conservative party, and while he inherits the "Whitney traditions," whatever they are, his occupancy of the position and the way he gained it, do not involve the traditions of the principles of popular government. It is said that Mr. Hearst is personally favourable to concentrated power as represented by corporations, and it would be natural if he would continue in this mind from the concentrated power to which he owes the responsibility he bears. Technically, he will meet this responsibility by being amenable to the wishes of the power that created him, which is not the people in any sense. He will have to do a good deal of breaking away if he means to meet the demands of the democratic institutions upon which our Government is supposed to be based.

MONEY AND TIME WASTED.

The city is to be credited with providing a good deal of useful employment, but the School Board is doing more. It is, or has been providing a good deal of employment that lacks the useful character of that now being given by the city corporation.

Reference is made to the arboreal abortion represented by the tree-planting enterprise of the School Board around the grounds of St. Mary's School, Monaghan Road. Last season—in 1913—the School Board had a considerable number of trees planted on the boundary of the grounds. Of course they didn't grow for several reasons. The trees, taken evidently from among other growth in the woods, were not suitable for transplanting in the open. They were badly planted and not properly pruned. With perhaps more than half the root system destroyed by violent uprooting, too much top growth was left—far more than the diminished roots could sustain, and the consequence was that when the season ended there was not one healthy living tree out of a twenty-five or thirty planted. The season was exceedingly dry, but the trees were not artificially watered. Trees carelessly uprooted, badly pruned and doubtless, perfunctorily planted, were left unwatered and, of course, died. A row of trees that with proper selection, pruning, planting and treatment, would have resulted in a line of beauty became about as ornamental as a range of hop poles in winter.

Thus were both time and money wasted—a year's growth was lost. This experience, however, taught no lesson. This year the bungle was repeated on a somewhat larger scale. The money expended on what was called tree planting, is to-day represented by thirty or forty leafless poles. A very few trees have survived—with a sickly existence which will probably cease next summer.

Why does the Board do these things? The grounds of St. Mary's School have been graded and a beautiful "catch" of grass secured; but the grounds apart from this are no more ornamental than a cow pasture. Not a shrub has been planted to relieve the monotony.

One is forced to ask who looks after these things? The answer comes without waiting—judged by results nobody with any interest, taste, or even surface solicitude, looks after these things. Beauty has been destroyed instead of being created. In clearing the grounds a little act of vandalism was committed by cutting down a thorn tree (Crataegus Canadensis) of long growth—a tree with an uniquely beautiful stratified habit of growth, a long-lived tree. The tree mentioned was of great age, and being hardy would have been a thing of beauty for generations. This is mentioned to show that nobody that cares, nobody that knows, is in charge of things that mean so much in the matter of city beautification.

Because we are under the war cloud, we must not forget that the cloud will roll by and we have to maintain our interest in things. There seems to be no good effected by calling attention to the blunders—the overt blunders referred to. The only remedy seems to be the creation of a Park Commission composed of men who know and care about creating civic beauty. We should expect the School Board to set an example, in demonstration of culture. It is or should be taught in our schools, and the lesson made practical by attention to school surroundings.

We learn from pupils that are attending the St. Mary's School that the principal is insistent in urging upon pupils respect for created beauty of public places, and abstention from trespassing upon boulevards and open lawns in way to destroy them. But such injunctions lose force when pupils see that the members of the School Board are indifferent to the principle and practice of the cult of the beautiful. This indifference is exemplified in the waste of money in planting trees that won't grow; while time is wasted by abortive and ineffectual and unskilful attempts to grow trees. Every year lost is a year wasted in securing a stand of trees.

PRUSSIANS AND BRITISHERS NOT OF THE SAME SAXON FAMILY

A Comforting Philological Explanation—British Not Ethnically Related to the Huns and Tartars

The statement is frequently heard that "the Germans will fight to the last ditch, that they are of the same race as we are, and consequently do not quit under fire." That is not true, the Germans west of the Elbe, or the Low-German people, are related to us, but the Prussians who constitute the largest proportion of the German Empire, are not related to us. As a matter of fact, they are no nearer related to us than are the Turks with whom, according to some late ethnologists, the Prussians have blood connections.

The British people are a blending of Teuton and Celt, with the Celtic strain predominating. The Prussians, on the other hand, are neither Teutons nor Celts, but are the offspring of the Slavs, an expatriated gang driven out because of their violence and stupidity. There, on the shores of the Baltic they settled, mingling with a remnant of Huns who had been driven from Central Europe by the Romans and Goths. As a result the Prussians are half Slav and half Mongol. The authority for these statements is Professor Schwill, a German, who writes as follows:

"In the ninth century another branch of the Slavs, called the Letts, came into history. We first meet them on the shores of the Baltic, from the Vistula to some distance beyond the Nieman. They were divided into Lithuanians and Prussians. It is curious to note that the name of this non-German people (the Prussians), has in the process of time come to be applied to the German leading States."

Canon Taylor tells us that the Prussians are the Po-Rusi, the men near the Russians. In the names of Pomerania and Prussia we have the Sclavonic preposition "po" (by).

It is a notable fact that the Prussians, apart from having given the world Emmanuel Kent, have never produced a really great man. The great musicians, scientists, authors, and inventors of Germany did not come from Prussian, but from the Low-German stock. The only mark the Prussians left upon the world is that of blood. During one half of their history, they were savages, and for the other half slaves, and from all accounts are carrying out their innate tendencies at the present time. History shows that one of the earliest achievements of the Prussians was the martyrdom in 997 A.D., of Bishop Adalbert, of Prague, who tried to convert them. A quarter of a century later, Boleaus, Duke of Poland, forced Christianity upon them at the point of the sword, but for the next three hundred years the Prussians did nothing but engage in Pagan raids against their Christian neighbours. They remained pagan savages until the middle of the 13th century, when the order of Teutonic Knights subdued them on condition that they be allowed to retain possession of whatever lands they conquered. The war lasted until 1283, when the Knights finally subdued and Christianized Pagan Prussia, founding, among other cities, the present strongholds, Konigsberg and Thorn. In 1454, Prussia aided by Poland, overthrew the power of the Knights, and twelve years later Prussia became a dependency of Poland, and remained so until 1701, when the father of Frederick the Great converted the Duchy into a Kingdom.

The treacherous nature of her rulers, and the brutality of her people has left Prussia minus friends among the powers of Europe. Her whole history down to the present time is a disreputable one. Her mean war with Denmark, followed by that with Austria in 1866, and then her action in provoking war with France in 1870, are but on a par with the early history of this barbaric race. The present German Emperor is King of Prussia, and his injunction to his soldiers to emulate Atilla and the Huns is what might be expected from a people with a history such as that possessed by Prussia. It is a base slander to say that the Prussians are kinmen of the British. They are not in any way related to us, and do not have even the excellent fighting qualities possessed by the British. Prussians are the result of a union of the off-scouring of the Slavic races and of the Huns who originally were Mongols. — Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

THE WONDER OF THE SOLIDARITY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE

Indissolubly Knit Together in Sentiment and Action Without Any Tangible Bond

We take the British Empire as a matter of course, and while we are proud of it we have not often taken the time or thought to analyize the marvel of it. As onlookers often see most of the game, so sympathetic outsiders sometimes see more marvel in the British Empire than we to the manner born. The St. Louis Republican, a type journal of our "Yankee" cousins, who know a good thing when they see it, pays a tribute to the undefinable spirit of the empire and the greatness of its soul, in these words:

This fearful and wonderful fabric has no central body. There is no "Bundesrath" or Imperial Council. No collective action of its units is possible. The relation to them of the mother country is illogical, ill-defined. To the foreigner accustomed to the federation of the American States or of the units of the German Empire the Government looks planless and ineffective.

All of which is preliminary to the observation that there is not at the present moment any more effective institution in the whole world of political fabrics than the British Empire. Whatever its machinery lacks appears to be supplied by its spirit. The defects of its body are made up for by the unity of its soul.

The fact cannot be gainsaid that England, who does not begin to be as logical as Germany or as systematic as France in matters of government, has nevertheless the knack of making men step out of their own free will to die in her defence. She has the gift of keeping alive, across tumbling seas, round half a world, the undying bond that unites the heart to home. She has shown herself indifferent to the possession of the taxing power over her colonies—but what matter it? Those colonies willingly tax themselves to send her warships and their sons seize their rifles in time of strife to go to her aid. She has the wisdom so to train and guide the swarthy children of alien races, and even the foes of yesteryear, that they put their living bodies between England and England's enemies. She has a fearfully muddled theory of government, but her practice of government lays hold on the deepest things in the soul of man.

As we contemplate this wonder of an empire which is an empire of the spirit, an empire whose philosophy of politics is all wrong, but for which the colstliest things within the gift of man are poured out without stint, we are moved to wonder whether this is a prophesy of the future. Will the States of the coming days make more of the spirit and less of the machine? Will they reckless of constitutions and bills of rights and fabrics or government and more of the invisible things which touch the soul?

We do not want to seem to degrade a high theme, but English plum pudding holds the key to the mystery.

English plum pudding never saw the day when it was worth the eating. It is soggy; it is greasy; it is flavourless; it tastes like the roller composition, compact of glue and molasses, which every country printer knows. It is unworthy of the good fruit spoiled in its making and the good spirit burned beneath it when it is brought to the Christmas board. It will not compare with the dark suet pudding of Missouri. Yet English plum pudding is eaten on Christmas not only from Land's End to John o' Groat's House but in Manitoba, in Khartum in the sides of the Himalayas, under the orange groves of New Zealand, where December is June, and in the blistering humidity of the Straits Settlements. Why? We cannot tell. But eaten it is. And English hearts, from London to Melbourne and back again, answer to the strains of "God rest you, merry gentlemen," and English eyes grow dim with happy tears.

The British Empire is unscientific. It is unreasonable. But it is mighty with the greatness of the soul.

AUSTRALIA'S FLEET

Australians will be more proud than ever of their practical patriotism, in view of the praise they have received for the activities of their fleet in the present crisis. The home fleet which the land of the kangaroo maintains has been in the thick of active service almost since the commencement of hostilities. Its cruisers have been protecting the shores and shipping of Australia and searching for prowling German men-o'-war. It has put a number of the enemy's wireless stations out of action, and has convoyed the New Zealand expeditionary force to Samoa and the Australian expedition to the Bismarck Archipelago, which has changed colours since the war began.

The fleet of cruisers has proved so useful that a distinct patrol has been assigned to it by the admiralty. Australia has been so confident of its cruisers' ability that it has loaned its Dreadnought to the admiralty. One of its cruisers, the Melbourne, has patrolled over 18,000 miles since the war began.

There are those in Australia who did not believe in an Australian navy. They will be glad to hear it designated, as it has been, an effective branch of the navy in the present circumstances. Australia has proved the case for a colonial fleet.—London Advertiser.

Germany's Plan To Contest For Sea Mastery

Monster Siege Guns That Battered Liege Were, in Fact, Designed, It Is Said, for the Kaiser's Navy

FEARSOME ADOPTION OF THE MORTAR PRINCIPLE

A 1,700 Pound Projectile, Fired at an Angle of 45 Degrees, to Fall on Enemy's Ship

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2. — About the middle of October Germany will put forth a supreme effort to become as near mistress of the waves as Great Britain.

Navy ordnance officers for weeks have been hearing rumours that fourteen vessels of the Kaiser's navy were being fitted with 42-centimeter guns and that the work would be completed early in October. There are fourteen ships of the Dreadnought and super-Dreadnought type on which the new gun is being fitted. These officers are almost ready to believe the reports that were published in the newspapers at the time the Germans began reducing the forts at Liege with heavy siege guns, namely, that the German land forces were really using an arm intended for the fleet.

The first reports as to the character of the gun being used on the forts at Liege came from Austrian sources. In a newspaper despatch it was asserted that "the Germans sent their 42-centimeter naval gun" to be used on the forts "on a platform built on a railway carriage."

At that time the report was discredited because no navy so far had ever thought of using siege guns fired at a high angle. But since that time corroborative reports have been coming from many sources.

An Uncanny Weapon.

Circumstantial gossip is now coming from Germany that for two years the Krupps have been making a gun which, when ready to fire looks like a bunch of tubes fastened together, smaller ones surrounding a large one in the centre. There have been pictures in the newspapers, none, however, distinct enough to make a definite study of the weapon possible, which have indicated that the Germans have produced a new type.

The big tube in the centre of the bunch is the barrel of the gun that is to do the trick. The smaller tubes surrounding it are recoil tubes, filled with compressed air, to absorb the shock of the firing of the centre tube.

This gossip, coming from letters written by workmen in the Krupp works and in the German shipyards, is to the effect that the new gun can be fitted to the carriages that have been discarded. The inference is that the check the Belgians gave the German army at Liege was so unexpected that the work of fitting the German battleships had to be suspended to provide guns for the work of the army.

The difference between the naval gun now in use and the 42-centimeter weapon (16.39 inches bore) is that the new gun fires its projectile upward at an angle of 45 degrees, while the degree of elevation of the ordinary naval gun is seldom more than 5 or 6 degrees. The ordinary gun is designed to send the projectile on as near a straight line as possible; the new gun is aimed so that the bullet will go five miles into the air and then fall on the target.

Would Cut Hull in Two.

It is an adaptation of the mortar. The hitting power of the projectile is increased many fold by being thrown up into the air to fall on a target five miles away with a velocity much greater than is possible to a projectile fired horizontally.

Reports from Germany indicate that the 42-centimeter gun sends up a shell weighing probably 1,700 pounds. One such shell falling on a ship, no matter how large, would cut her hull in two, even if the high explosive failed to work.

But firing a mortar from a rigid base is one thing; firing it from a platform on the deck of a rolling battleship is entirely different. And no ordnance officer who has given a thought to the matter would be willing to undertake to plot an enemy's position, preparing the fuse, and then firing it from the deck of a ship, and guarantee to hit the target once in one hundred trials.

The One Problem.

Mortar fire from land fortifications is the most deadly known to ordnance officers. The hits average nearly 98 per cent. If a hostile ship were to endeavour to force its way into a harbour guarded by such ordnance, the only questions to be determined in advance would be her location and the rate at which she is steaming. If they are accurately ascertained, the ship has less than three chances in one hundred of escaping unhit.

There are no instruments in the American army or navy delicate enough to get the range and the rate of steaming so as to enable a gunner to fire a mortar from the deck of a battleship with any hope of landing other than by chance. But Germans have the finest instrument makers in the world. They kept the fact that they were making a 42-centimeter mortar for use on battleships under cover, and the gossip did not begin to attract attention until the forts at Liege were blown up.

The Germans are said also to have been making a special preparation to neutralise the submarine also. Their latest ships are said to have triple well-braced bottoms, so that unless a torpedo is right up against the outer skin when it explodes, the ship has a chance of escaping.

31 Transports And 11 Warships Were Required

To Carry and Convey the Canadian Contingent From Quebec—No Display at Departure

MONTREAL, Oct 3.—A writer in the Daily Mail has sent from Rimouski the following description of the departure of the Canadian troops from Quebec:

"Thirty-one ships were required to carry the men, the guns, the horses and the supplies of the overseas expeditionary force. To convoy that number of ships a fleet of eleven war vessels was requistioned, the whole movement being the largest and most important ever effected on the Atlantic. It was carried out in a splendid manner. The movement from Valcartier was effected in fine style, and the embarkation and sailing followed as part of a well ordered plan. The movement of 31,200 troops and 8,000 horses was the biggest war action that Canada has ever undertaken, and it was performed almost faultlessly.

Took Eight Days.

"The movement from Valcartier started with the mustering of the left half of the 12th Battalion, which was sent to Quebec to perform guard duty, and ended with the departure from camp, eight days later of the right half of the same battalion. The troops that moved in took possession of the wharves and the breakwater, and when they disappeared one saw the red coats of the 87th Regiment replaced the khaki serges of the men of the 12th Battalion. In those eight days the division had moved out of Valcartier, Horses, artillery and transport wagons came over the eighteen miles of road, while the troops were sent by train.

From Train to Ship.

"It had been intended to march all the men to Quebec, but the weather was vile, and plans were hastily made for the movements by train. It required five days to transfer the various units, an average of ten troops moving away from the camp each day. The trains ran directly to the breakwater, and the transfer to the ships was promptly made. As the ships were filled they moved off and steamed down the river to anchorage previously agreed on, and there met the naval convoy and afterwards the great fleet set out to sea.

"There was little of the picturesque in all this business. There were no cheering crowds; in fact comparatively few people knew anything of what was going on."

A CONSERVATIVE JOURNAL SHOWS DANGER OF MAKING A PREMIER BY MACHINERY

This is the way the Toronto World (Conservative) under the heading "A Free Choice Denied," deals with the matter of selecting a premier and a leader of the Conservative party in Ontario:

This is a great day for the Liberal party in Ontario. The Conservatives, who have the strongest representation any party could hope to get, have deliberately thrown away their advantage, disgusted their members, and flown in the face of all Conservative party principles by submitting to the dictation of outside agencies, and failing to insist upon a caucus for the choice of a new leader.

The death of Sir James Whitney left the party in an unusual position. On coming into power for the first time after an election, a political party always has a leader who is naturally recognized as the logical premier. In the present case the Conservative party has no recognized leader in Ontario, and the proper thing to have done would have been to call the members together and let them decide upon a leader. An inner circle, however, decided that they would not trust the members, that is, that they would not trust the people, and set about carrying out their own wishes independently of either members or people.

The members have not had strength enough, or perhaps a sufficient nucleus of opinion, to enable them to come out in the open and say what they wanted. If half the members had declared in public what they have been thinking in private there would have been a caucus summoned immediately after the funeral on Tuesday. No action was taken. The city members sat tight, and the country members ran around loose.

Ottawa sent down word what it wanted, and the thing was put through in approved Kaiser fashion. This overthrow of popular government methods, this infringement of the rights of the members of the Legislature, this sweeping aside of all the honourable principles of government for which Sir James Whitney established a tradition in the province, can only mean the decadence and ultimate break-up of the Conservative party.

We shall be told that it is rank treason to say such things. It is far ranker treason not to say them. To allow the Conservative party to run its train into a broken bridge and keep quiet while the smash is coming is a poor idea of loyalty to the party. Every man who has the interest of the Conservative party at heart should be out with a red flag waving off the danger.

Government by junta or by chique or by any form of Kaiserism is utterly foreign to the spirit and principle of the Conservative party and the Conservative voters of Ontario. Certain self-appointed leaders may think they know better than all the political sages of the last hundred years. But they don't, and they will learn, as others have learned, when it is too late to put the lesson into practice.

The World has taken its stand on this democratic principle, and the Whitney tradition. It has not supported nor opposed the claim of any man to office. It has declared that the choice of a weak man will be fatal to the party interests. It holds that no man should be chosen without taking the views of the party in caucus. If the holding of such opinions is treachery to the Conservative party, then there are few loyal men in it. But such views and opinion are the strength of the party, and without them the party will be weak as water, and the strongest man appointed to represent the absence of such views will have neither influence nor authority with the members nor in the country.

We are informed by The Toronto News that Hon. Mr. Hanna has refused the position of premier. The News should have supplemented the statement by telling us who offered it to him. The News also tells us that Hon. Mr. Lucas has not had sufficient experience for the office. The News should also have told us why a man with still less experience is regarded as more eligible. The Mail and Empire discourses on Von Klnk's predicament and on greenhouse vegetables in winter, but says nothing about Hon. Dr. Pyne's predicament, or how to get a premier in an open fall. Papers like The Brantford Courier say that whoever may be chosen, the choice will be that of the members and the party as a whole. But what has been done to insist upon the assembling of the members in caucus?

There is no blinking the fact that the members are being pushed to one side in the choice of a premier, and therefore the democratic status of the Conservative party is attacked. We have already pointed out where that attack has come from. We are glad to see that The Evening Telegram also recognizes the danger, and we quote from what The Telegram says elsewhere.

There is really no general disagreement about the matter at all, but those who are agreed seem afraid to express their convictions, and the choosing of a premier for Ontario is being allowed to go by default. Every minister in the future cabinet will be under the same stigma that must attach to the new premier chosen in such a way, and when the next session of the house is called the whole government will be particularly and unnecessarily susceptible to criticism.

DRAGOON SERGT. TELLS OF WILD CHARGE OF HORSE

LONDON, Oct. 2.—This is the story of a British sergeant who was wounded somewhere in that retreat toward Paris:

The sergeant was cross. He was distinctly cross. At first he seemed disinclined to take up the role of wounded hero of the Great War, which several of us had pressed upon him.

"Don't get too bally near me," the sergeant said. "First thing you know you'll be stepping on my sore foot. And then I'll jolly well bash the man as does it."

But there are ways of mollifying wounded heroes, and a British soldier could never be convinced that ale could be the slightest drag upon convalescence. He had just returned from France, where he had been wounded in a battle with the Germans. His wound was not serious. He hoped to be back on the fighting line in a month.

"Where was the battle in which you were wounded?" some one asked.

Then he revealed the fashion in which a fighting man looks at a battle—much as an ant would look at a sandbag. He could only see the little grain of sand immediately before his eyes. Of the strategy involved, of the numbers in conflict, of the general plan of the battle, he knew no more than we did who had stayed at home.

"All I know is they were fighting all over," said he. "Mornings you'd wake up to 'ear them same guns going. Everywhere they were at it—all around. Sometimes the Germans seemed in the rear of us and sometimes we were in the rear of the Germans. I don't know what happened. We were somewhere in Belgium."

The troop of cavalry to which he belonged had not been engaged during the first day of the big battle. "We never got near the Germans. Three or four times they had been ordered here or there.

"Just like we'd be going out to exercise our 'osses like," said he. Sometimes we'd see 'em, and they'd see us, but both of us went on about our business."

Idly Watching the Wounded.

He saw the wounded brought back from the front. It was pretty tough, he said, to stand in ranks and watch waggons full of groaning, cursing, screaming men file past. The worst of it, he thought was to watch the blood drip through seams of the waggon beds. The undergear of some of the waggons grew to a dark, dusty purple. When his troop was ordered on scouting duty the men took it as a relief.

"It was bad, now," said he, "to watch the water waggons that used to sprinkle London's streets come jolting up with water for us. They took your mind hoff the fellows that 'ad been 'urt. And the 'buses! When I got my 'urt, I rode to the rear in a Charing Cross 'bus, that maybe the old woman used to ride in every morning when she went down town. Rum, aren't it?"

His troop was sheltered behind a hill, he said, where the shells couldn't get at them. It was hot, and most of the men were standing by their horses. They had loosened the girths and opened their own tunics. He was concerned about his own horse.

"Old 'Vdraulic," he said, "got to lathering bad that morning. I feared the old beggar was going to be sick."

A staff officer cantered up in a perfectly matter-of-fact way, and gave an order to the commanding officer. The word to mount was passed along. It was obvious that another scouting expedition was on foot. The sergeant heard one of the men in the ranks say to a comrade that one of these days they'd get bally well caught by the sausages, going around this way, careless like. He reprimanded the speaker.

"'E was just a cornerboy in London," said the sergeant. "I could tell what sort 'e is directly I laid heyes on 'im. They always 'ave more strategy than ole K. himself."

The troop took the long hill at a walk. The warm, tired men lolled in their saddles until the sergeant made them straighten up to save the backs of their horses. They were distinctly not interested. Half a dozen of these expeditions had been unfruitful. They had seen nothing of significance in the movements of the enemy.

"H'all as once," said the sergeant, in a louder tone. "'e sounded the charge."

The men took the crest of the hill at a gallop. The first of the troop were already tearing down hill, toward a company of German lancers, who were on level ground, not a hundred yards away. The noise of battle which filled the air for 75 miles on either side had masked the approach of each from the other.

"It was a 'ell of a charge," said the sergeant, in disgust. "We didn't 'ave no chawnce to get into proper formation or nothink. We just beat it down the hill, 'ell for leather. My pore ole 'Vdraulic, 'e planted them fore feet 'ard every jump. 'E 'alle nearly shook me h'out of the saddle."

When the Clash Came.

It was just a disorderly gallop of molnted men upon an equally disorganized other group of mounted men, the sergeant said. On his way down he he remembers that his knee was bruised against the saddle of the man on the right. He wanted to button his tunic, which had been flying open, but abandoned that as impracticable. Someone behind him had lugged out a revolver and was shooting. It annoyed him excessively.

"Me beink a sergeant, like," said he, "it would look bad hif I was to be shot in the back by one of my own men. Wouldn't it, now?"

So he sat his horse in that yelling, swearing, sweating rout, and kept his sabre up in the first position—which is guard—and wondered how he would dodge the Sausage's lance when the collision came. The guards he had been taught in sabre school seemed absurdly ineffectual. Ten feet away from the other line he and a big German sergeant, profuse of whisker, seemed to get each other's eye. But some one got between them.

"I 'it 'im"—referring to this unlucky other fellow—"in the 'ead with my sword. 'E cussed like anythink in Dutch I 'eard 'im."

The two troops passed through each other in some miraculous fashion, as though they were country dancing. Halting to reform, they saw a French mounted battery bounce over a hill, swing into position, with the dust of the hillside rising in huge clouds from the scoring wheels, and the gunners leap from their seats and begin to whirl the muzzles toward the Germans.

"So we got under the 'ill again," said the sergeant. "Then Frenchies had took over our show. They was giving them Sausages what-for almost before we was under cover. So taht night I was sent to the rear and come 'on 'ome with this 'ole in my foot."

War May Solve Problem.

LONDON, Oct. 3.— Sir Edward Carson, speaking in Ulster, said though Home Rule was now on the statute book, the act was not worth the paper it was printed on. Ulstermen, having helped the Empire in the present emergency, would never be asked to go under the government they so detested. The present war might prove the solution of the Irish troubles.

A Triumph For Alderman Duffus In Ford Car Sales

Makes a Record for Selling the Largest Number of Fords of Any Dealer in the Province

It is somewhat early, as yet, to determine to what extent business in Peterborough has been affected by the great struggle going on in Europe, but it is cheering news to learn that there are a number of our local industries in which, instead of depression, there is increased activity.

One striking instance of this fact comes from Alderman Jos. J. Duffus, proprietor of the Duffus Garage. In a brief interview, the other day, Mr. Duffus was asked if the sale of Fords had diminished in any way on account of the money stringency or the existing war conditions. His reply, in his own words, was: "I am glad to be able to say that the sale of Fords in my territory, this season, has gone away beyond my most sanguine expectations. One reason for this is that the Ford has become a necessity, not a luxury. My output of automobiles this season to date, makes a record, of which I may feel justly proud, because I am now able to claim the honour of having sold the largest number of Ford automobiles in the Province of Ontario."

Here in Peterborough, it was generally known that Ald. Duffus was an aggressive motor car salesman. Rain or shine, summer or winter, he was carrying the glad news to the "other man." He was going where automobiles were only infrequently mentioned and coming out with the order in his pocket. He was selling the man who "can't be sold," even if he had to sell the wife, daughter and hired man to do it. Best of all, Ald. Duffus combines these attributes with intelligent administrations of his business and a determination to excel.

Few, however, had any idea that Mr. Duffus was outselling all other motor car agencies in the province, where larger fields were open to the salesman, and where the opportunities were so much greater. This is a triumph for Peterborough to share in as well as Ald. Duffus, and he is to be congratulated on his remarkable success.

"Has the recent reduction in the price of the Ford been a factor in increasing your sales, Mr. Duffus?"

"No. I believe I could have sold all the machines at the old prices, although I know that some of my customers expected a reduction and waited for it."

"Do you mind saying what your sales amount to this season so far?"

"Well, off-hand, I hardly remember now, the exact number; but last season my sales were over sixty cars; this season I know I have more than doubled that number. Practical business men are buying Ford automobiles and practical business arguments are selling them. I am daily receiving more evidences of the practical characteristics of the wonderful Ford. With us it is—"Business as usual during alterations to the map of Europe."

The Ford year ends with the 31st of September, and it was while in Toronto this week arranging for a large shipment of new Fords that Mr. Duffus learned that he had reached the "Grand Final," and scored the highest number of cars sold by any one dealer in the province.

A new shipment of Ford cars was received at the Duffus garage this week to begin the new Ford year. Advance catalogues are being sent out, and Mr. Duffus starts off the new year with the good old proverb that "He who would reap well must sow well."

Peterborough has a right to feel proud of such successful business men as Alderman Duffus, who possess the ambition not only to be successful but to excel in whatever they undertake. And the Ford Motor Car Co., too, is to be congratulated on having secured the services of so sagacious and keen-sighted a sales agent for Peterborough, who has made good in a city where competition in motor cars is so acute.

ALDERMAN JOS. J. DUFFUS,
A Business Man With a Provincial Record.

PETERBORO' FAIR SURPLUS WILL BE CLOSE TO $1000

Highly Satisfactory Showing for Present Year—Question of Permanent Grounds Must be Taken up Soon—Grant Made to Red Cross Fund

Between $900 and $1,000 is the surplus indicated to the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition directors, as they wind up their 1914 accounts. At a meeting held last night it was reported that most of the bills had been paid and the prospects were bright for a credit balance of slightly less than $1,000.

Considering the finacial conditions previous to the fair the directors are truly grateful that their efforts were so successful. The surplus is regarded as an evidence of the popularity and the strength of the Peterborough Exhibition.

The directors passed a vote of thanks and a grant to the Salvation Army band in recognition of their services voluntarily offered on the two main days.

A contribution of $10 to the Red Cross Fund was also passed.

Question of Grounds

The question of permanent grounds still confronts the directors. They are more than ever convinced that the time is ripe for a pretentious exhibition of a week's duration in Peterborough. It is the natural selection of a half way location between Toronto and Ottawa. In addition there are indications that the smaller fairs will be gradually absorbed. Finally, Peterborough cannot afford to continue marking time—an advance is almost imperative. The directors realize this fact but they are handicapped by the lack of permanent grounds. Let that obstruction be removed and they are prepared to go ahead along lines they have been carefully planning. Hence during the coming year they will probably make a strong effort to convince the City that it should take over the grounds for park, fair and other purposes. The directors will then commence to erect the necessary sheds and buildings.

"Mystery of the Lighthouse" will be presented by the Dramatic Section of St. Peter's T.A.S. on Friday Evening, October 9th. Admission—Adults 25c, Children 15c.

PLAN TO GET RID OF CITY DEBENTURES

To Advance Sum of $20,000 to City Trust Commissioners Finance Committee Meeting

The Finance Committee of the City Council met last night and discussed several matters relative to the monetary branch the the city's affairs. There were present Aldermen Anderson (chairman), Duncan, Langford, Johnston and Greer.

City Treasurer Adams was present and suggested a unique scheme of getting rid of $20,000 worth of the city's debentures. This could be accomplished by advancing $20,000 to the City Trust Fund, and at the end of two months receive that amount for the debentures now in the bank. The plan was eagerly taken up, and the thing will be done as suggested.

A statement was to hand from the Bank of Montreal showing a debit balance to the city of $70,848.50, and a credit balance for sewers of $41,800, and for pavements $11,375. Mr. Adams reported that $10.00 had been added to the latter, raising the city's credit to $62,000.

A communication was received from the Utilities Commission asking the city to buy their interest in the adding machine, (of which both owned half), as they would need one continuously in the new offices, and proposed to get a new one. The machine when new cost $525, and the Finance Committee last night decided to offer $300 for the half interest. The adder has been in use three years.

Bills for city indigent patients at St. Joseph's Hospital were received. But, as before their entrance into the hospital the Relief Officer had had no notification, which should have been attended to by the hospital authorities, the City Clerk was instructed to return the bills with a note to that effect. A large number of reports from Mr. Miller were received, giving the names of persons who were allowed into local hospitals as "City" patients, on his order.

Indigent patients in the hospitals are costing the city quite a figure. The bill from the Nicholls Hospital for attendance on local indigents during the past month was $278.00.

Has Beautiful Persian Kittens

People passing Number 565 Weller Street often stop to admire a family of Persian kittens playing around the lawn and trees. Mrs. Callander is always pleased to show them to callers. They are mostly solid black with fine bushy tails and are splendid mousers and great house pets. The owner says she will dispose of two or three of them to good homes at $5.00 each.

Relief at Once Cure Certain

Conclusive Evidence That Dr. Chase's Ointment Cures Itching Piles.

Mr. John G. McDonald, Pictou, N.S., writes:—"I used Dr. Chase's Ointment for itching piles, and found that the first application gave relief. After using a few boxes of the ointment I was completely cured, and can recommend it highly to all sufferers from this disease. You have my permission to use this letter for the benefit of others."

Mr. James M. Douglas, Superior Junction, Ont., writes:—"For about six years I suffered from piles, and often could not work for two or three days at a time, so great was the suffering from pain and itching. Doctors treated me in vain, and I tried many treatments before I came across Dr. Chase's Ointment. Two boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment cured me, and for several months I have had no return of this annoying ailment."

There can be no doubt that Dr. Chase's Ointment is the most effective treatment obtainable for every form of piles. 60 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

THE RUSH HAS FAILED

Germans Have Done Their Worst Now Without Success

FIGHTING IS STILL SEVERE

ON THE BATTLEFRONT, Oct. 3, —(Via Paris.)—A thrill was in the air all along the extended allied lines to-day. The French and British troops, who have been over a fortnight in the closest contact with the Germans, felt that they had accomplished their hard task of preventing the Germans breaking through the human barrier erected between them and their main objective, Paris, and that this meant eventual victory for the allies.

The following communication was issued last night by the French War Office:

"First—On our left wing one of our detachments which came out of Arras to fortified town and capital of the Department of Pas-de-Calais) has fallen back a little toward the east and north of that city.

"North of the Somme we have made progress in front of Albert. Between Roye and Lassigny the enemy has directed violent attacks, which have broken against our resistance.

"Second—Quiet prevails along the rest of the front. It is reported that in the neighborhood of St. Mihiel (Department of Meuse, twenty miles southeast of Verdun) there remains no enemy on the left bank of the Meuse."

The fury of the German onslaught was unabated yesterday, especially on the western wing, but their every effort was met with vigorous resistance by the allies, who seemed to vie with each other in throwing all their strength and courage against the attackers.

The scene of the most violent attacks changes day by day. The Germans, finding it impossible to penetrate the allied lines in the vicinity of Rheims and Soissons, quickly transported many of their divisions farther northwest and yesterday hurled them against Roye. Again they failed, although last night they had not ceased their efforts to batter down the resistance.

Spies are so numerous along the front that orders have been issued stating that any German in civilian dress encountered will be considered a spy, and those furnishing him with clothes will be regarded as accomplices. Germans who do not surrender on the first summons to do so will be executed. The order says that any group of more than three armed Germans found behind the allies' lines will be considered as ghouls and shot while every person found committing robberies on the battlefields, whether civilian or soldier, will be court-martialled.

Fight Three Weeks Old.

LONDON, Oct. 3.—The battle of the Aisne, as it is still called, although the armies contending in it have spread far beyond that river, has been in progress just three weeks now, and no decision has yet been reached. The reports coming from Paris earlier in the week that the results of the allies' operations were about to be attained were premature, and from all appearances there must be more hard fighting before either side gives way.

The heaviest blows are being given and taken in the western area, where, according to yesterday's French official communication, an extremely violent battle continues, especially in the Roye district, where the Germans have concentrated considerable forces. The communication added that the action was extending more and more northward, and that the fighting front now extended to the district south of Arras.

This, apparently, was a modest account of the northward advance of the French, for private telegrams received in London last night announced that the French actually had reached Arras. Stubborn resistance is being offered by the Germans in the vicinity of Roye, where earlier in the week they succeeded in occupying the heights, which, however, they later were compelled to give up.

Along the front from the Oise to the Meuse rivers, according to the French report, only partial operations have been attempted by either side. Frontal attacks by the allies have, as a matter of fact, been discontinued, while the flanks are fighting for ascendancy.

On the allies' right the Germans have made another attempt to cross the Meuse at St. Mihiel, where they got across last week. The German attempt to regain this ground, which they had abandoned when threatened on their flank by troops from Toul, was made Thursday, when they tried to throw a bridge across the river. The bridge, however, according to the French report, was destroyed during the night.

Although figures are naturally withheld, it is learned in Paris that during the last two days the army of Gen. D'Amade, which commands the extreme left of the French position, has been reinforced by nearly three army corps (about 120,000 men), so that it has been possible to extend this line very nearly to the Belgian border. As a matter of fact, the French are in touch with the Belgian forces, who have been operating irregularly in the west of Belgium and with the British base at Ostend.

Zeppelin To the Front.

LONDON, Oct. 3.—Count Zeppelin is declared to have passed through Essen on route to the front, where he will direct the operation of the Zeppelins, according to a news agency despatch from Amsterdam.

Typhoid Among Germans.

LONDON, Oct., 3.—It is reported in Amsterdam, telegraphs the correspondent of the Central News in that city that 800 German troops on the lines between Brussels and Antwerp are suffering from typhoid fever.

THE ATTACK IS FUTILE

Germans Driven Back From Osowitz With Great Slaughter

FLEEING FROM SUWALKI

LONDON, Oct. 3. — The Russian War Office announced yesterday that following the assault of the Germans at Osowitz, in the Polish Province of Suwalki, the Kaisers' forces have been driven back with great slaughter. The principal German forces are said to be strongly entrenched in the vicinity of Pitrokow and Kielce, in the region west of the Simno. Violent conflicts are in progress. Many of the German troops participating in the series of actions which lead to their retreat came from France. This is established by the capture of numerous prisoners.

Following the fall of Tarnow on Wednesday the Russians pushed forward and crossed the Nida river in Poland and the Donajec river in Galicia. This force constitutes the main Russian army. It is said to have gone into action along the Raba river, the first advance line before Cracow.

Gen. Von Hindenburg, who has scored several successes against the advance of the Czar's legions, is in command at Cracow, where several of the Bavarian army corps are stationed. These troops did valiant work in France before being transferred. The total Austro-German force are estimated in some quarters to aggregate 2,500,000 men. These figures are probably excessive.

Opposed to those forces are the pick of the Russian troops, under Gen. G. Rennenkampf. At least one million men will be on the fighting line, supported by an enormous amount of heavy artillery.

The Russian embassy at Rome announces that the Germans have been decisively defeated with terrible losses in the Province of Lodz and Suwalki. The Germans have been compelled to flee from Suwalki, Ostrowitz and other towns, leaving great quantities of transport guns. The troops in their route, threw away their rifles and small baggage. Numerous batteries were abandoned in the deep quagmires.

Other messages from Petrograd declare that the Germans lost 30,000 killed and wounded and 20,000 prisoners.

A despatch to the Central News from Rome says:

"The Russian embassy here has issued a communication which announces that the Germans have suffered a terrible defeat in the provinces of Lodz and Suwalki, Russian Poland.

"The Germans, the communication says, were attacked with extreme violence and compelled to flee from Suwalki, Ostrowitz, and other towns, leaving behind them great quantities of transport and guns. Their troops threw away their rifles and baggage. Numerous cannon were abandoned in the quagmire."

Other telegrams from Petrograd, the Central News correspondent at Rome says, declare that the Germans have lost 30,000 men in killed or wounded and 20,000 men taken prisoners.

Russian Cavalry's Success.

PARIS, Oct. 3.—A despatch from Petrograd gives the following official announcement:

"A division of Russian cavalry has obtained a brilliant success against the advance guard of Germans leaving Andreje, Government of Kielce, Russian Poland, in the direction of the city of Kielce. The enemy, surprised, threw down their arms and ammunition and fled, while the Russian cavalry cut up a laggard detachment.

"The German operations in Russian territory have nearly all failed, their artillery being defenceless on the roads, which are not macadamized. Most of the batteries become stuck in the mud as soon as they leave the principal roads."

Pertinent Reminder

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—Much is said and money is spent beautifying and making our city up-to-date. A stranger takes a walk around the principal part of our city to see the sights. He halts at the corner of Aylmer and Brock streets. He is told he is within three minutes' walk of the post office, and within a stone's throw of the residences of many doctors and leading business men of our city.

He looks on either side of him and behold two large unsightly billboards and a vacant lot grown full of burdocks, about three feet high, ripe, all ready to harvest, but no harvester. He asks why are things in this wild state? This is a violation of the law, to allow weeds to grow anywhere. This looks like the outskirts of a little village away back in Muskoka. Why is this so, especially on a street they are now paving? The only answer that could be given was this: If it was owned by a poor man or the money to come out of the city treasury, to pay the cost, it is more than likely the law would have been enforced, and this brown harvest of burrs would not appear as they do.

Yours truly,
Ratepayer.

THE NEW ARTILLERY AND HOW IT IS USED

Although the armies of Europe are equipped with artillery of a power and range surpassing anything that was used even in the comparatively recent Russian-Japanese war, the great battles that are now being waged will be won by infantry. Yet the steadiest infantry would be helpless without artillery. Not until the enemy's batteries have been silenced dare the infantry advance. Hence the old Napoleonic artillery duel is still a dramtic feature of modern warfare. But how changed! How puny and utterly insignificant are the cannon that roared at Austerlitz compared even with the smallest modern field gun!

How different, too, is the method of firing! Nowadays the gunners crouching behind steel shields, never see the object at which they are firing. A battery comander, perched on a support ten or fifteen feet above ground and screened by foliage, scientifically finds the range and then corrects it by observing how the first shots fell. The accuracy of fire is amazing. If there is any pleasure in the game, the battery commander has it all; for he alone knows what is happening when the shrapnel explodes. Also he is more likely to be killed than his men because of his elevated station.

The guns now employed on the battle-ground vary from the three-inch field piece with a range of three and one-half miles, firing a fifteen-pound projectile, to the German 8.4-inch field howitzer firing a projectile weighing 250 pounds. For siege work, for battering down fortifications, like those of Liege or Namur, even heavier pieces are required, such as mortars that have a bore over eleven inches in diameter and fire shells weighing 500 pounds and more. Each cannon whether it be used in the field or behind a fixed barrier, has its special use. Against men under cover, for example, the ordinary field gun is useless. A gun must be brought to bear which throws its projectile high into the air and drops it behind an embankment or on top of a bomb-proof. That gun is the howitzer.—From "The War as Affected by New Inventions," by Waldemar Kaempffert, in the American Review of Reviews for October.

ALSATIAN GIRL FACED DEATH IN THE WAR ZONE

NEW YORK, Oct. 2.—Her health shattered by twelve days of horrors which she is never likely to forget, Miss Jenny Dufau, of Chicago, who was in Saulxuers, Alsace, while the Germans and French were fighting there, returned home on board the Italian steamship Tamaso di Savoia. Her experiences, which included her arrest as a spy by the Germans, and the suspense following an order that she, with her two sisters and aged father, be put to death, have left the woman a pitiable wreck.

"In July," said Miss Dufau, composing herself with an effort when approached by reporters, "I went to Saulxuers to visit my seventy-two-year-old father, my sisters and two brothers. Their home is in a valley, an hour's trip from the French border, and there my father managed a linen factory. When I arrived home all was peace and quiet. Then war came. My brother went to war, forced to join the German army, although French at heart. They, like all Alsatians, will never fire at the French, being bound by pledges among themselves to fire their rifles in the air hoping that they may be captured in order to serve with the French army.

"We did not feel the effect of the war until August 12, when two French regiments, one of infantry and one of cavalry, arived and took possession of the town. The Germans came next and from the hills to the east started to shell the town. The French infantry attempted to take the German position under protection of their artillery, but were practically annihilated. The French withdrew and the Germans occupied Saulxuers. The following day the French, reinforced, shelled the town and the Germans were the ones to retreat. All that night and for days to follow the battle raged, finally extending from Metz to Salles.

"The inhabitants of Saulxuers took to their cellars when the cannonading started, and stayed there, although in many cases the house were knocked down over them. At the end of the battle the whole place was destroyed and the streets were full of French dead."

Miss Dufau said that with her father and sisters she was arrested as a spy and condemned to death. An hour before the time set for the execution of the order she was freed, but the strain has left its permanent mark. She finally managed to leave Alsace and get to Naples.

"SIXTY YEARS A QUEEN" PICTURE

Is Attracting Large Crowds at The Grand Opera House

There were large attendances both afternoon and evening at the Grand opera house yesterday to witness the splendid moving pictures entitled "Sixty Years a Queen." The picture is a wonderful review of the leading events in the British Empire during the reign of Victoria the Good.

This "movie" is one of the finest ever seen in this city, and those who have not already seen it should avail themselves of the opportunity to do so, either this afternoon or evening. The school teachers of the city will be the guests of the management this afternoon, and the scholars will be particularly benefitted by attending.

HARDING DAVIS HAS HAD ENOUGH

PARIS, Oct. 2 — I met Richard Harding Davis sprinting down the Rue de Rivoli to-day.

"I've only got time to shake hands and say good-bye," he said. "I'm off in five minutes."

"Off to the front," I asked.

"No more front for me," he replied. "I have been arrested and locked up and God knows what else. War correspondents can do nothing, and I leave England for New York on Saturday."

Citizens Urged To Join The Rifle Club

Gallery Practice to Commence Early Next Week—Regular Service Rifle to be Used

LECTURE TO BE GIVEN

The next regular meeting of the Rifle Club will be held on Tuesday evening in the recreation room of the Armouries, when a lecture on rifle shooting will be given by W. H. Moore, an ex-Bisley man. To be eligible for membership in the Rifle Club prospective members must be British subjects, between the ages of eighteen and sixty years. Rifles are issued free, one to every four persons, also one hundred rounds of ammunition. Each member is required to shoot the above amount of ammunition, and as this is done a report is made to the Executive, who sends the returns to the Government.

The Executive is making arrangements for gallery practice with miniature ammunition and the regular service rifle, which, it is expected, will commence early in the week.

Citizens Urged to Join.

On account of a large membership the Club will be formed into different detachments, and a plan that has been followed in other places, might easily be adopted here. In many cities where rifle clubs have been organized the various professions, merchants, bankers, ministers and different branches of the Trades and Labour Council have formed the detachments in the Association. Thus competition is encouraged and keener interest is aroused. It is urged that every eligible man in the City not already connected with the regiment, join the Rifle Club. Those desiring to do so are asked to communicate with E. L. Goodwill (Capt.); F. Linton, (Sec.-Treas.), or any of the following members of the Executive. Messrs. F. Bartlett, W. H. Moore, F. D. Kerr, W. H. Munro and G. A. Borland.

Educational Rally At The Y.M.C.A.

Splendid Gathering of Young Women Last Evening—Opportunities Offered

The educational rally at the Y.W.C.A. last evening was largely attended, it being the opening of the fall and winter work. Miss Dickson occupied the chair, and the opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Mr. Rollins. Interesting reports from the Muskoka Conference were read by Miss Denne and Miss Cameron. Mrs. J. E. Middleton gave a vocal solo that was much enjoyed, as was also a violin selection by Miss Palmer.

Miss Peacock gave a splendid talk on the work of the association, setting forth its exceptional opportunities for young women. The world-wide Association work embraced thirty nations with a total membership of 600,000. In Canada there are 27 associations with 18,600 members. The purpose of this organization is a three-fold one, namely to provide recreation, education and religious inspiration to young women. In Peterborough a beautiful building splendidly equipped, was at the disposal of the young ladies of this city, and should be taken advantage of by them.

AN OLD FRENCH VETERAN DRANK TO BRITISH CROWN

LONDON, Sept. 30. — A British cavalryman gives an account of a speech of an old French squire, a retired General, who entertained a small party of troops at his house. He says:

"The old gentleman's two daughters helped to wait on the men, and after the meal was over the General said:

"'My dear comrades, let me so call you. It is an old soldier who fought against Prussia forty-four years ago. I was then a Captain of Cuirassiers—who welcomes you to his house with a heart full of emotion and in a voice trembling with sympathy and thick with tears. You honour me by this visit. In the midst of all your trials and privations you have a soldier's heart and courage and cheerfulness. By your wounds I know your sufferings. You see me old, but I am active and glad to be honoured by your sharing such as I can offer you. France can never repay the debt she owes to England for giving to us her best and bravest sons. My father was killed in the war of 1870 at the battle of Sedan.

"It was a picture to see the grand old veteran, with faltering voice, strike the men's hearts by the first phrase. 'My dear comrades,' but when he raised his glass and gave 'The King and Queen of England' the men stood up and tears chased each other down their cheeks. Then the parish priest said a few kind words of welcome and invited the party to attend benediction in the little church which adjoins the park of the General. This was a happy thought, for Protestants, Episcopalians, and Presbyterians joined with Catholics in a solemn service of devotion under circumstances which show how easily, under stress of trial and adversity, the barriers of class and creed fall down."

"There is no occasion for you to envy me," said the prosperous person. "I have as many troubles as you." "I s'pose ye have, mister," admitted Dismal Dawson, "but the difficulty with me is that I ain't got anything else."

TEN YEARS IN PENITENTIARY FOR KILLING

Special to The Examiner:

ST. CATHARINES, Oct. 3.—Ten years in penitentiary was the sentence Chief Justice Falconbridge this morning gave 67-year-old Jesse Ward, of Grimsby Beach, who killed Percy Sparlings whom he found in his room on August 2. The judge said he had no doubt that Ward followed up the shooting by cutting Sparling's throat, but the evidence was not sufficient and he was therefore spared the painful necessity of sentencing him to be hanged.

THE LIFE OF A WATCH

It should be cleaned and oiled once a year. Many dead watches are allowed to go without cleaning and oiling, and the result is the oil is entirely dried up, the pivots become cut and rusted so badly that it costs nearly as much as a new movement to put it in proper condition again. MILLBROOK FAIR HAD RECORD ATTENDANCE AND EXTENSIVE ENTRY LISTS

Directors Delighted With Results—Peterboro' People Were Numerous on the Grounds and Weather Was Ideal—Races Were Good

SPLENDID HORSES SHOWN

(By Staff Reporter)

The conditions which attended the Millbrook Central Exhibition, yesterday, were far more favourable than those of the past few years. On several of the immediate preceding occasions the Fair Directors in Millbrook had to contend with either cold or wet, but the weather yesterday was more in keeping with July or August than with October.

The trains from Peterborough were all crowded. The 11.40 contained two extra coaches, and in addition to a large number of visitors from Peterborough, the 57th Band attended, rendering selections during the judging. Many of those attending from afar carried light coats with them, but were glad to discard them when arriving at the grounds upon which the sun shone warmly from an azure sky.

The President of the Exhibition is Mr. A. T. Armstrong, and the Secretary Mr. J. N. McGill. In conversation with the latter it was learned that up to last evening the attendance had far surpassed either last year or the year previous. Indeed, he thought the show was the best the directors had ever experienced. The horse exhibition was said to be one of the finest in the United Counties, while the entries complete numbered about three thousand.

The building of the fair grounds was replete with specimens of various industries. The arts exhibit was no doubt superior to previous efforts, and the ladies' fancy work suggested considerable skill and patience. The samples of cooking, too, proclaimed that the wants of the inner man were well provided for in that vicinity. The fruits and vegetables, in view of the somewhat unfavourable summer, was quite up to the average and it may safely be asserted that the apple exhibit was more than normal.

Along the midway were the usual pastimes and exhibits. While some satisfied their curiosity by viewing the five-footed colt, others amused themselves throwing at dolls, while ever and anon the voice of the cheap Jack could be heard selling articles and returning the money just to show "their hearts were in the right place." Mr. Maher of the Oak Hall, Peterborough, exhibited at the Fair, as did also Mr. Duffus, with Ford automobiles. Much might be said of the cattle and sheep exhibit would time and space permit. Suffice it to say that the reputation of the locality was adequately maintained and the prizes distributed by competent judges.

The Races.

There were very few entries for the races, nevertheless they were keenly contested, the final heat of the 2.30 being especially exciting when only a head divided Ester D and Orono Medium, at the finish. The first prize in the free-for-all came to Peterborough, Mr. Montgomery carrying off the prize with Jimmy Direct.

The results were as follows:

Free-for-all.

Jimmy Direct	1	1	1
Oro Medium	3	2	2
Ester D	2	3	3

Result of Free-for-all:

Mr. Montgomery's "Jimmy Direct" 1st money; Mr. W. Montgomery's "Oro Medium" 2nd money; Mr. W. E. Juby's "Ester D" 3rd money.

2.30 Class

Ester D	1	1	1
Newcastle
Oro Medium	2	2	2

Result of 2.30 class.

Mr. W. E. Juby's "Ester D" 1st money; Mr. W. Montgomery's "Oro Medium" 2nd money; Mr. B. Stapleton's "Newcastle" 3rd money.

Prizes.

The prizes in the light class of horses were also keenly contested, and although competent judges officiated, it was in many cases difficult for them to decide. Nor were the prizes monopolized by any individual or vicinity, as will be readily seen by the following results:

Roadster Class.

Best Gents' Turn Out — 1 J. T. Staples & Son, Ida; 2 R. Reid, Peterborough; 3, Thos. Cowan, Orono.

Pair Horses Over 15.2—1 Lewis Bros. Port Hope; 2 R. Kearns, Franklin; 3, J. O. Ball, Springville.

Single Horse Over 15.2 — W. Harbridge, Otonabee, first and second; 3, J. F. Staples & Sons.

Pair Horses Under 15.2—1 W. H. Simons & Son, Welcome; 2 Geo. Brown, Millbrook; 3 W. H. Hoskin, Campbellford.

Single Horse, 15.2 and Under.—1 J. F. Staples & Son; 2 A. T. Fontaine, Peterborough.

Col. Sutton and Mr. A. J. Henderson were judges.

When the receipts were counted at the end of the day, it was found that last year's amount had been considerably exceeded.

PROMINENT EXHIBITORS

While ther were quite a number of outside exhibits that were worthy of extended reference it was remarked that there were but few practical displays of an agricultural character.

W. G. RUSSELL & SON'S EXHIBIT

Near the main building Messrs. W. G. Russel & Son's of Millbrook made an interesting display of Eastlake's Steel Shingles and corrugated roofing for interior decorations, ceilings, wall finish, etc. They are agents for the Metallic Roofing Co., of Toronto, and were fortunate in securing a large number of prospects from well known farmers in the district. The utility and advantage of these metallic goods has been well proven, being fire-proof, storm-proof and wear-proof. If you are going to "roof" call up Russell & Sons, phone 5, Millbrook. Russell & Sons also are large dealers in lumber, shingles, doors, coal, lime, salt, etc., and have on hand large supplies of pine and hemlock logs to fill bills from.

THE FORD MOTOR CAR CO. EXHIBIT.

The growth and expansion of the Ford Motor Car in this district, stimulated by the energetic Peterborough representative, Mr. Jos. J. Duffus, of Peterborough, received additional expression in the hearty encomiums evoked by the interesting exhibit he made at the Millbrook Fair. Without enquiry whether Mr. Duffus is the originator of the idea of exhibiting Ford cars at agricultural fairs, it is safe to assume that he was present at the hatching of it.

Modern business hates uncertainty, delay and waste; and in the same measure farmers demand honest, quick service and sane economy. In these things the Ford claims to excel. And so it was quite a novel sight to the farmers at this Fair, to see a large red and white tent, occupying a commanding position on the grounds, in which was shown the newest types of the Ford motor car. Here was displayed a handsome sample of the Ford Five-passenger Touring Car, as well as a Service truck, motor tires and other accessories. The exhibit attracted many of the farmers, farmers' wives, sons and daughters, who besieged the enterprising agent with many inquiries about his "universal car."

It has been the aim of the Ford Company to build a car for the people—not a luxury, but a car so reasonable in price that everyone can buy it—a car that was simple, practical and economical. Nowhere in the last hundred years has there been an invention that has meant so much to the farmer as the motor car. One of the things it has taught him is that there is more enjoyment in life than he thought. He has come to realize that the good things of life are for him as well as for his brother living in the city. When we look at the matter seriously, we are almost brought to believe that the motor car is more for the farmer than anyone else. The city man has the street cars that will take him any where he wishes to go, and quick train service to suburban points and other cities. He really does not need an automobile, and he has to compromise with his economical conscience to make himself believe that such an investment is justified. But the farmer has nothing to take the place of his motor car, nothing else can give him the advantages, the pleasure. Nothing else can add to so much enjoyment to his life. Farmers are beginning to learn also to market their products in the motor car—having bought it for pleasure, it has turned out to be one of the most useful things on the farm.

He motors through the gladsome glades of budding green and white spring shades. He hears the phoebe's sweet, sedate song in the orchard to his mate. And, when at eve he's homeward turned, he frets not at the gas he's burned. He thinks the kids will want a ride at twilight—and the wife besides. He strokes with glee his Model T—without, at, where would e'er he be?

Mr. Duffus, the energetic Peterborough agent, was rewarded with numerous prospects of sales at the Fair, and believes he has opened up a fruitful field for Ford cars in this section.

WATERY RASH ITCHED AND BURNED
On Arms. Would Tingle and Itch. In One Great Mass. Looked Scaly. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Rash Disappeared.

So. Buxton, Ont.—"My skin trouble started about seven years ago. My arms began to tingle and itch. A watery looking rash, very fine and close together, would break out every summer. It would itch and burn as the trouble progressed and it became worse when I scratched it. It looked ashy and scaly and in one great mass. My arms were so disfigured I could not wear short sleeves. I could not help scratching it all the time and when I had taken a bath it would itch and burn for about an hour. My flesh was sore from scratching.

"I used all kinds of soap and used sulphur baths but nothing would relieve me. At last I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in the paper and I sent for a sample. The samples helped me so much I got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment and began bathing with the Soap and water as hot as I could bear it, then I would take a little of the Ointment and put on the skin. I did this every night and morning. I used only two cakes of Soap and one box of Ointment and in less than six weeks the rash had all disappeared and now my arms look natural again." (Signed) Mrs. Andrew Johnston, May 29, 1914.

Samples Free by Mail

A single cake of Cuticura Soap and box of Cuticura Ointment are often sufficient when all else has failed. Sold throughout the world. Sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. D, Boston, U. S. A."

"OAK HALL" CLOTHIERS OUT FOR BUSINESS.

The popularity of Oak Hall clothing was never better exemplified than at Millbrook this year. It was impossible for a visitor to miss the palace clothing display at the Fair, as it faced the main entrance and showed up with fine effect. The exhibit was a timely representation of the popular styles of the season for men, youths and boys. The Sanford Company of Hamilton, the wholesale manufacturers of "Oak Hall" clothing, are a Canadian house with a national reputation for reliable goods, and the excellent samples shown at Millbrook could not fail to enlist the interest of all visitors.

"True service to you" is the aim of "Oak Hall" and one of their best paying advertisements. Personal expression in one's dress means an appearance which is becoming, the current fashion being of secondary importance. And so it becomes that this firm devotes special attention to fitting the man, not the figure. The men worth while to you judge quickly by the becomingness of your outfit and the faulty details stand out like red flags. If appareled a the "current fashion dictates," you may lose your identity.

The "Oak Hall" shop in Peterborough is known to give you that personal expression in dress which is best suited to your features and figure. Their excellent fall suits and overcoats, are skillfully tailored to look like "yours," and they also supply the haberdashy accessories to create an ensemble which bespeak the man.

In an interview with Mr. Maher, manager of the Peterborough store, some interesting facts were learned. Mr. Maher had just returned from Hamilton, where a meeting of "Oak Hall" managers had been held for two days, with the object of discussing business with the heads of the firm. Mr Maher had a "cheer up" attitude respecting the season's prospects and among other things modestly mentioned that the Sanford Company had donated $5,000 to the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

Besides the Peterborough store, there are large Oak Hall establishments at Hamilton, London, Galt, Toronto, St. Catharines, Windsor, Owen Sound, and Woodstock. The company, perhaps the oldest clothing manufacturers in Canada, keep from eighteen to twenty-two travellers on the road, and 2,500 other stores are supplied besides their own. Sovereign brand clothes for men and young men were shown in their highest grade, and they are guaranteed not to lose their shape. A smart looking suit in brown heather mixture was shown. Ticketed at $12.50, was a good sample of excellent values. Other suits were marked at $10, $13 and $15, that showed very moderate prices. For boys they make the Juvenile brand, and the little men get something that stands the wear of boisterous youth. Attractive literature was handed out freely and there was always a good demand for the Oak Hall picture post-cards. Mr. Geo. Wesley of the Peterborough store, had charge of the exhibit.

MERITORIOUS DISPLAY OF BUGGIES

Finney Bros., of Cavanville, made one of the finest displays of buggies at this Fair ever seen in the district. There were twelve handsome designs, including Stanhopes, with auto seats and rubber tires, and substantially built top buggies, with steel and rubber tires. Quite a number of those on the ground were sold, and good prospects for others. Finney Bros. have built nineteen new buggies this year, and are now engaged in building twenty-five new cutters. The firm is well established in the district and have a fine trade.

Ploughing Contest To Be Held Soon

Mr. J. H. Garbutt has been canvassing recently for prizes for a ploughing contest. He has met with considerable success in his efforts and in a short time the date and the place of the contest will be announced.

A sod and a stubble field have to be secured, and the other details will be arranged shortly.

EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYEES

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Austrian Government Contemplates Transfer To Prague.

LONDON, Oct. 3. — Despatches from Vienna, via Rome, state that the Austrian Emperor and his Cabinet are debating the removal of the Government to Prague, in view of a possible siege of Vienna by the Russians. For the past month a large number of laborers have been throwing up defences in every direction and the city is believed to be almost impregnable. But the Government will not risk capture and has chosen Prague as its new location.

Prague is about midway between Vienna and Berlin on the north bank of the River Moldau. It is fortified.

Salsburg Also Mentioned.

ROME, Oct. 3. — (Via Paris.)— A great impression has been produced by a report circulating in diplomatic circles here to the effect that the Austrian Government is urging Emperor Francis Joseph to transfer the court and seat of Government to either Prague or Salsburg.

Britain Announces Adoption of Measures to Cope With Germans.

LONDON, Oct. 3.—The official information bureau announced yesterday that the Government had decided to lay mines in certain areas as a counter stroke to the German procedure.

The official information bureau has issued the following on behalf of the Admiralty:

"The German policy of mine-laying, combined with the submarine activity, makes it necessary on military grounds for the Admiralty to adopt counter measures.

"His Majesty's Government has therefore authorized a mine-laying policy in certain areas."

THE WORLD OF SPORT

AND MUGSY McGRAW GOT G. T. STALLINGS HIS JOB

Irony of Fate Reflected in the Result of the National League Race---Honesty of the Grand Old Game Proven in Many Ways

The baseball season drawing to a close has been a most remarkable one and filled with many startling surprises, writes Joe Vila in the Sun. Not the least of these has been Boston's sensational fight against great odds, soon to be crowned with a championship. But through it all—the glorious achievments and the bitter disappointments one fact stands out so clear that it cannot be questioned by the most sceptical. Baseball is a square and honest sport.

The defeat of John J. McGraw's three-time champion Giants proves this more conclusively than any other individual circumstance in recent years, though many striking illustrations might be furnished to prove the honour of the sport. There is no object save glory to spur the Braves to victory. From a monetary standpoint the club would have done as well as runnerup. That would have given a city championship against the Red Sox in a town that is simply baseball daft and which might have overshadowed in both attendance and spoils the prospective classic between the Braves and Athletics.

By winning this year's pennant, then, the Braves virtually destroyed one of two prospective bonanzas. It may be put even more strongly: They destroyed two of three. Can you imagine the crowds that would have turned out to the Polo grounds for the five games between the Giants and Braves had the race been as close as it was when New York journeyed to the Hub Labour Day? Those five games would have broken all series records of attendance and fiancial game. They would have furnished the interest and excitement of any world's series.

Was No Jockeying.

A little jockeying might easily have conserved the closeness of the race until the season's close. It could have been accomplished, perhaps, without the least risk of the public ever finding out. But, instead of this, when the champion Giants began to crack Stallings fought all the harder to break up the race as quickly as possible. Had there been the least shade of dishonesty in America's national game it no doubt would have crept out in such a situation. Goodness knows there was excuse enough to salve the ordinary conscience. This has been a sadly lean year for the promoters.

The American league, too, has paid its tribute to honesty. The Athletics won the race so easily and so early that the circuit suffered greatly there by. On the last Western trip the Eastern clubs have not been drawing carfare. The race in the Johnson circuit was over before Labour Day. Connie Mack's walkover meant a loss of fully $20,000 to each and every one of the seven other clubs. To Connie it meant double that figure, for once away out in front he attracted attention neither at home nor abroad.

There are certain croakers who always shout against the honesty of baseball every time some unusual circumstance arises. These under existing conditions have been hushed for once. They can find nothing to reproach. And this exoneration of the grand summer pastime which every honest man always has considered honest is worth the loss of half a dozen pennants to New York.

A fourth consecutive pennant would have been a crowning achievement for Christy Mathewson, one of the grandest pitchers of all time, who seems at last to be nearing the down grade of the great decline after carrying the Giants on his back for more than a dozen years. Without the grand old master New York's chances for a speedy renewal of another attempt against the fourth straight pennant are sadly dimmed. Matty cannot hope to retain his cunning through the course of four more campaigns.

New York's failure against tradition removes the danger of such an unset for some years to come. Connie Mack's Philadelphia Athletics are now clinching their second straight pennant. They slipped up in 1912 after putting two triumphs behind them. But this wonderful machine would have to win again both next year and the season after that to obtain the fourth straight flag. That is too much to expect. Baker, Collins and Barry have been together almost eight years. The $100,000 infield has just about survived the usual span of major league effectiveness.

Stallings Usurps Throne.

George Stallings has usurped the throne of John J. McGraw. He is now the lion of the hour. This must make the little leader appreciate the pain of Casear as Brutus poigniarder him. McGraw is directly responsible for his present humiliation, for it was he who secured George Stallings his berth with the Boston Braves. James E. Gaffney had selected another manager to succeed Johnny Knig. He chanced to meet McGraw one night and asked him his opinion of the man he had in mind. McGraw, who was a close friend of Stallings, and who appreciated his worth, recommended George so highly to Gaffney that the Boston owner at once opened negotiations for his services. But for McGraw, Stallings would not be in Boston now. But for Stallings Boston would not have the pennant clinched. And but for Boston's having clinched the pennant, John J. McGraw's champions already would have achieved their fourth straight pennant.

In spite of Stallings' wonderful generalship, McGraw might have won the great distinction that lay almost within grasp all season, but for the fact that the whole Giant team cracked together.

The National League race this season was a mighty cheap one; that is, a team of usual first division strength should have cantered home. This is shown by the fact that Boston which does not figure strongly on paper, was able to rush from last to first place in two months. Nothing in the field could stop the Braves once they gained the confidence of a few victories.

McAvoy Will Get World Series Share

If baseball fans will recall the Berlin team of last year they will probably remember a long lanky but very energetic player behind the bat for the Dutchmen. He was Jim McAvoy, twenty years old and awkward. Jim's contract probably called for $125 a month. Next week the same lanky backstop will be sitting on the Athletic bench at Boston and Philadelphia, and when the world's series is over, he will drag down as much of the winner or loser's end of the receipts as Eddie Collins, Walter Maranville, Chief Bender or Dick Rudolph. McAvoy is a full-fledged member of the Athletics and has been with the Mackmen on and off all season. He was recalled from the International League where Mack had sent him in May and has been with the Athletics since the middle of August. McAvoy was drafted by the Athletics from Berlin last fall. He didn't look any great potatoes here, but Connie Mack's scouts saw lots of baseball stored away in his awkward frame, and though just twenty-one, the ex-Canadian leaguer will receive anywhere from $2,000 to $3,000 at the conclusion of the world's series.

BIG JEFF LOOMS SMALL IN THIS

NEW YORK, Oct. 2.—Charles E. Tesreau, known to baseball fans as "Jeff," filed in the Supreme Court a bond for $25,000 guaranteeing that he will be present at the trial of the breach of promise action which Miss Clara Young has brought against him.

Miss Young, who lives at Perryville, Mo., alleges that "Jeff" courted her for several months and then asked her to be his wife. She consented and it was generally known, she says, that she was his fiancee. Many letters passed between the couple, which Miss Young says she will produce at the trial.

About the time that Miss Young expected to become Mrs. Tesreau, she was startled to see an announcement of Tesreau's mariage to Miss Helen F. Blake. This was just prior to the time he started on a baseball trip around the world.

Tesreau has filed an answer denying the allegations. In one of the letters which Miss Young intends to use at the trial the baseball pitcher wrote: "You spoiled me the evening we came from your sisters—I mean I was already spoiled—but that first kiss was enough to have me tell you about it. And I have never regretted a word that I ever told you or a minute that I spent with you."

In another letter he wrote: "McGraw has been kidding me ever since the news came out. He asked me if I could do my best when I was in love. Everyone in the club now calls me Clara."

MARANVILLE'S AMBITION HAS BEEN ATTAINED

As the Giants and Athletics were about to begin the first game of the world's series last week on the Polo Grounds, a notable incident developed when the big band on the field blazoned forth the national anthem.

It was an impressive, thrilling incident in that day of sunshine, crowding and excitement.

In the space allotted to the newspaper men, a little under-developed chap, apparently a school boy, who had bagged it for the day, and in some incredible manner sneaked his way into the expensive pavilion, seemed especially to share the excitement.

"Gee!" he said wistfully, looking out to the diamond where baseball's best was about to begin their great annual struggle. "I'd like to be out there!"

The speech seemed a piece of vanity, of absurdity, on the part of the mite, but he had a perfect right to make it.

This year he will be "out there."

The boyish outburst came from Maranville, midget shortstop of the Braves, then a despised second division team. He was in the press stand writing for a Boston paper. All who met him liked the earnest, polite little fellow, but his chances for getting in a world's series then looked most remote.

His own team's sensational spurt, and the crumbling of the Giants give him his chance. This year he moves from press box to field; fine, manly little chap that he is. Not one of his newspaper pals who met him last year, but will wish him the best in the series to come.

As one of the chief factors in Boston's incredible victory, he deserves to be where he is.

KLEM BANISHED 26 GIANTS WITH ONE DECISION

Before the shortlived Braves had attended to all the little details of beating the Giants by a 7 to 6 score at the Polo Ground yesterday, William Klem, umpiring genius, established a record for wholesale exile of athletes by banishing twenty-six Giants from the players' dugout and nearby points in one sweeping decision.

Following a declaration by Klem adjudging Grant out at the home plate in the sixth inning there was a well-trained chorus of protesting voices from the Giants' bench when the Braves began their half of the seventh. Klem called "Time," and summoning "Mike" Donlin, acting manager, explained that every one but Donlin would have to go. Led by "Matty," the athletes lock-stepped to a point near the exit gate in right centre, marching in Indian file with the leader setting a pace that brought an accompaniment of shouts from the diverted populace. Some one is charged with having called the umpire "catfiish," but why Mr. Klem should consider that an insult is beyond the understanding of many who have never had a chance to talk it over with Mr. Klem at close range.

"Rookies" are Flattered.

Some of the young athletes who got fired off the field yesterday can thank the best umpire in the National League for their baptism as big leaguers. Being ordered out of a game before having a chance to play in one puts some of the rookies in possession of bewildering fodder for winter fanning. "The day 'Bill' Klem chased me" is likely to be the basis for some village poet office arguments.

THREE FRENCH JUDGES KILLED IN THE WAR.

PARIS, Oct. 2 — The French Bar has suffered the fortunes of war. In opening the sessions of the courts to-day the Public Prosecutor, Jules Hebeaux, announced that three judges of the Paris Bench had been killed, while a list of dead issued by the War Office contained the names of many lawyers, among them being a large number of young men who had already entered on brilliant careers and whose futures seemed full of promise.

Justice Blondel, the Public Prosecutor said, fell in the fighting on the Meuse; Justice Matillon was killed at the Aisne, and Justice Perlange was mortally wounded in a recent engagement.

Presentation To Mrs. W. Taylor

W. C. T. U. Gave Retiring President a Beautiful Sunburst of Pearls

Last evening the members of the W. C. T. U. assembled at the residence of the President, Mrs. T. W. Whalley, Boswell Avenue, and presented the retiring President, Mrs. Wilson Taylor, with a beautiful sunburst of pearls and the following address:

Dear Mrs. Taylor,—We, the members of the W. C. T. U. of this City, feel we cannot let you leave us without presenting some token of our appreciation of your efforts in the interests of our loved White Ribbon work, "for God and Home and Every Land." So we ask you to accept this little gift, not for its intrinsic value, but for the love that goes with it from all our hearts.

Our Union need what you have given us, and we are sure we shall always do better work because of your sojourn with us.

You bear a lamp of hope
To shine where He may say,
And lamps are not for sunny rooms,
Nor for the light of day.
But for the dark places of the earth,
Where wrong and trobule and worment have birth.

May you ever be able to dispel the clouds with the bright sunshine of your presence.

We pray the Master's "Well Done" may be your reward. May the spirit of our loving Father ever be with you and yours to keep you in all your ways until we meet with the Redeemed, where sin and evil shall be no more.

Signed by the sub-executive of Peterborough W. C. T. U.:

Mrs. Whalley, President.
Mrs. Goodfellow, Cor.-Sec.
Mrs. Fife, Rec.-Secretary.
Mrs. Micks, Treasurer.

Mrs. Taylor replied in a suitable manner, thanking them for their gift and assuring them that she would cherish it as a reminder of the pleasant times spent in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and wishing them continued success in the Master's work.

Afterwards a very pleasant evening was spent together.

AFTER THE SALARIES

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I saw a communication in your paper some time ago stating that at least some of the factories had reduced the workmen's wages twenty per cent. on account of the war, and made the suggestion that, in order to even up matter and provide for the needy, made so by the war, the Council should deduct a similar percentage from the higher salaries of their employees. If they would only reduce these salaries, say ten per cent., it would lessen the taxes on the poor man, and add to the relief of the suffering caused by the war during its continuance. There are others who should share in the reduction for the term commencing and ending with the war, for instance the Ministerial Association, who are undoubtedly patriotic should take into consideration a reduction of their salaries and set the ball rolling. The poor man generally, has done his duty nobly, but I am afraid that most of our rich men have been impervious to their responsibilities.

Yours truly,
FAIR PLAY.

HOW BRAVES FOUGHT THEIR WAY TO FRONT

The rise of Geo. Stallings' Boston Braves from a tail-end team on July 15 to leaders and champions of July 15 to leaders and champions of the National League on October 1 is one of the greatest stunts that has ever happened in major league baseball. Getting away to a very bad start, Stallings' team only won ten out of their first thirty-four games, and were hopeless tail-enders, 373 points behind the Giants.

On July 15 the Braves were still tail-enders, but their playing had improved, while the Giants were beginning to come back. They were only 153 points ahead of Boston. By August 1 the Braves had shot up to the fourth rung from the top, being only 91 points behind McGraw's men. From this date onward Boston never faltered, being in first place on September 7. The rise of Stallings and the fall of McGraw is told in figures below.

Evers Predicts Fall of Mackmen

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—A happy crowd of well trained athletes arrived in New York last night from Boston. It was George Stallings and his National League champions coming here to entertain the Giants in a five game series on how pennants are won. Led by "Johnny" Evens, the newly crowned title-holders hied early to their hotel, where only a few questions were answered.

"Just how did it happen?" Evers was asked.

"We just decided we wanted the pennant, so went out and got it," was his laughing reply.

"How do you figure your chances against the Athletics?" was the next question.

"Some writers have dubbed us the 'Miracle Workers.' There may be something to that, so grab some of the short money," again smiled Evers.

"We are not the weaklings that 'dopesters' and others contend," continued Evers. "We have been sorely tried all year, and I believe we have delivered whenever asked. We have a better pitching staff than the Othletics. Maranville is worth more to a team than Barry, and Gowdy compares favourably with Schang. Of course there are Collins, Baker, McInnis and Oldring, but these men will have their work cut out to terrify James, Rudolph and Tyler. The more I think of it the better I like the Braves' chances. Nothing like having confidence, and no team ever had more confidence than we have right now."

Since the pennant is tucked safely away the veterans will get a short vacation, and the youngsters will be given a chance to show their mettle.

To Start The Outfall Sewer In Two Weeks

In the course of ten days or two weeks the outfall sewer into North Monaghan will be started, supplying still more work to local men. The hoist, which is one part of the large ditching machines that will be assembled in Peterborough for use in the digging of the sewer, is being built at Belleville and will soon be completed. When it arrives in Peterborough the work of the construction for the ditching machine will begin and as soon as that is finished the digging and laying of the sewer will commence. All of which it is estimated will take nearly two weeks.

To these figures the despatch states, must be added the Bavarian, Saxon and Wurtemberg lists. Prince Franz, the third son of the King of Bavaria, commanding the Second Bavarian infantry, has been wounded in battle. The list includes three major-generals, one killed and two wounded. Major General Scherbening was killed, while Major General Oskar Reuter was dangerously wounded.

RUSSIANS SAY THEY HAVE KILLED OR WOUNDED 60,000 GERMANS

PETROGRAD, October 3.—In a review of recent operations in Russian Poland issued by the war office to-day, it is stated that at every point the Germans have been forced to retreat. The war office estimates that the total losses to the Germans in these operations, which have extended over the last fortnight, will reach 60,000 in killed, wounded and prisoners. In addition it is stated that the Russians have captured a number of German guns and rapid firers mounted on motors.

BARONESS' SON KILLED IN ACTION

LONDON, October 3. — Captain the Honourable William Amherst Cecil, of the Grenadier Guards, 26 years of age, who was the eldest son and heir of Baroness Amherst of Hackney, has been officially reported as killed in action in France.

Belgians Flood Fields and Remove Trees To Stay Advance of the Invaders

LONDON, Oct. 2.—A graphic picture of the desolation of Belgium was brought to London to-day by Mr. J. H. Whitehouse, member of Parliament from Lanarkshire, who has just returned from a tour around Antwerp for the purpose of assisting in the relief measures.

"Always having regarded war as the negation of all that is good," said Mr. Whitehouse to-night, "I desired to see what its ravages were in a country exposed to all its fury and what steps were possible to mitigate them. I do not think that any one here has realized the plight of the civilian population of Belgium to-day and can only attempt to give any picture of this by describing some of my own experiences."

Mr. Whitehouse made the journey outside Antwerp with two military automobiles, attended by Belgian officials. In describing the damage which the Belgians had to inflict upon their country to supplement the defences of Antwerp, he said:

"Hundreds of thousands of trees had been cut down, so that at some points of our journey we had the impression of passing thropgh a wilderness of roots. The tree trunks had all been removed so as to afford no cover to the enemy. All houses had been blown up or otherwise destroyed. Later, we passed through the country, which had been flooded as a further measure of defence. The damage resulting from these precautionary measures alone amounted to £10,000,000 ($50,000,000.)

"In the villages all ordinary life was arrested. Women and children were standing or sitting dumb and patient by the roadside. Half way to Termonde we could plainly hear the booming guns and saw many evidences of the battle which was then raging.

Destruction in Termonde.

"I had read newspaper accounts of the destruction of Termonde, and had seen photographs, but they had not conveyed to my mind any realization of the horror of what actually happened. Termonde a few weeks ago was a beautiful city of about sixteen thousand inhabitants, a city in which the dignity of its buildings harmonized with the natural beauty of its situation, a city which contained some buildings of surpassing integest.

"I went through street after street, square after square, and I found every house entirely destroyed with all its contents. It was not the result of bombardment; it was systematic destruction. In each house a separate bomb had been placed, which had blown up the interior and set fire to the contents. All that remained in every case were portions of the outer walls, which were still constantly falling, and inside the cinders of the contents of the buildings. Not a shred of furniture or anything else remained.

"This sight continued throughout the entire extent of what had been a considerable town. It had been an indescribable influence upon observers which no printed description, or even pictorial record, could give. This influence was increased by the utter silence of the city, broken only by the sound of the guns.

Only Two Alive in City.

"Of the population I thought that not a soul remained. I was wrong, for as we turned into a square where the wreck of what had been one of the most beautiful Gothic churches met my eyes, a blind woman and her daughter groped among the ruins. They were the sole living creatures in the whole town.

"Shops, factories, churches and houses of the wealthy, all were similarly destroyed. One qualification only have I to make of this statement. Two or perhaps three houses bore the German command in chalk that they were not to be burned. These remained standing but deserted amidst the ruins on either side. Where a destroyed house had obviously contained articles of value looting had taken place.

"I inquired what had become of the population. It was a question to which no direct reply could be given. They had fled in all directions. Some had reached Antwerp, but a great number were wandering about the country, panic stricken and starving. Many were already dead.

OBITUARY

BABY BYERS.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Byers, Brown street, Brownton, will sympathize with them in the loss they have sustained by the death of their infant son, who passed away on Thursday evening. He was seven weeks and four days old.

The funeral took place yesterday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock to the Little Lake Cemetery.

THE LATE JAMES KERR.

The death occurred at his late residence, James street, on Saturday of James Kerr, in his 64th year. Mr. Kerr met with an accident about two years ago, when he was injured by a fall, after which he was unable to resume work, and has been since gradually failing. He was born at Baltimore in 1850, and came to Cobourg at the age of 14 years. He has since resided here, with the exception of one year, or 30 years he has been superintendent of the iron department of the Crossen Car Works. He was a clever and affable man, and the turnout of the employees of the Car Works at the funeral on Monday was a tribute of the respect in which he was held by the men. Mr. Kerr was a member of the town council for several years, also of the public school board, and like for a number of years been an elder in St. Andrew's Church. Fraternally he was a member of the Royal Arcanum. He was a genial, straightforward and kind man, and in his death Cobourg has lost one of its best citizens. Mr. Kerr was married twice. His first wife, Miss Colvin, died in 1897. This union was blessed with two daughters, Mrs. George Gibson of Toronto, and Miss Ethel Kerr. In 1900 he was married to Miss Annie Murdock Dickson. Mr. Kerr is also survived by two sisters, Mrs. Carter of Indian Road and Miss Annie Kerr of Peterborough, and three brothers, John of Peterborough, Edward of Toronto, and William of Cobourg. The funeral took place on Monday to the Union cemetery, Rev. Dr. Reynar conducting the funeral services. The pallbearers were Messrs. Arthur Hayden, John Tinney, Col. N. F. MacNachton, Jas. F. McCullagh, J. B. McColl and J. D. Hayden.—Cobourg World.

SOME RECIPES

Sweet Potato Croquettes

Cook in boiling salted water eight medium sized sweet potatoes, peel and press through a sieve. Add one large tablespoon of water, two tablespoons of brown sugar, one tablespoon of powdered cracker crumbs, one-quarter teaspoon each of peper and cinnamon, one-half teaspoon of salt and the beaten yolks of two eggs. Mix thoroughly, shape into cones, roll in fine crumbs, dip in beaten egg, roll again in crumbs, and fry in deep hot fat.

Molasses Drop Cookies

To make them use one large cupful of granulated sugar and two-thirds of a cupful of shortening mixed together. Add one egg, one and one-third cupful of molasses, one cupful of lukewarm water, two teaspoonfuls of soda, a pinch of ginger, and four cupfuls of flour. Drop from a teaspoon, but do not roll out. Bake in a rather quick oven. If the cakes spread out too much in baking, a little more flour is needed.

FRIED APPLES.

Quarter and core five apples without paring. Put into a frying pan one cup of sugar, one tablespoon of butter, and three tablespoons of water. Let this melt, and lay in the apples with the skin up. Cover and fry slowly until brown.

Germany Loses Her Great Rheumatism Cure

It is now made in Canada and a Dollar Box will be sent Free to every Rheumatic Sufferer in Canada

THE GERMANS were the first to discover this Great Remedy which has cured so many Cases of Rheumatism. The secret of this remedy is now known, and it will be joyful news to every Canadian who suffers with Rheumatism, as they can now have a chance to try this great remedy called:

PAD POWDERS In Capsule Form

This is actually the only medicine that goes to the seat of the pain and drives the uric acid from the joints by dissolving the uric acid. It matters not how long you have had Rheumatism or how severe. This remedy will actually cause the pain to disappear in one to three days.

An Epidemic of Rheumatics has spread throughout the Dominion this Fall, and there are thousands upon thousands who are suffering especially throughout the several Districts where they are subject to such sudden changes of temperature. About nine persons out of every ten are complaining of a steady pain in the Shoulders, Hands, Feet and any place where there is a joint. Well this is a sure sign of Rheumatism with its pains and intense agony which follows, if you do not soon get it cured.

No effect on the Bowels, you will notice—if you have taken many Rheumatism Cures, that they will act as a laxative on the bowels and as soon as that is over, your Rheumatism comes back again. Pad Powders do not act upon the bowels, but instead, they go right to the joints and disolve the uric acid and drive it entirely from the system.

To every sufferer in Canada, a chance to secure a Dollar Box will be sent FREE to try. If it cures you send me just One Dollar, if not, merely write me so and it costs you nothing. Why I am sending these out free to try, is because this is something new and the people do not realise what a wonderful cure it is.

ROAST FOR KING CHARLES

LONDON, Oct. 5.—"From the commencement of this European conflict the Roumanian people have been hostile to Germany and Austria. This hostility is pushing the people to drastic action—the cry for greater Roumania and the liberation of our brothers in Transylvania. Undoubtedly the situation has placed King Charles in a dilemma, for he already has made his choice between his duty as a free people and his duty as a Hohenzollern.

"This policy of King Charles will give him in history the role of a traitor to the interests of his country, although he is a hero in his staunchness to the Hohenzollern and Hapsburg traditions."

This amazing statement has been given to the public by Victor Jonnesco, nephew of the Prime Minister of Roumania and at present secretary of the Roumanian legation in Paris.

ADVANCE ON WEST WING IS GRADUAL

Trench After Trench Was Taken by the French Who Are Now Meeting Heavy Forces of the Enemy

VON KLUK REPULSED

FROM THE BATTLEFRONT, Oct. 5.—Trench after trench of the German line fell into the possession of the allies on Saturday after most vigorous assaults, carried home with determination, combined with the newly-learned lesson of caution.

The Germans who had borne back the allies' western wing slightly retained their advanced positions near Roye until they became untenable. They then fell back to new lines which had been previously prepared.

The western wing of the allied armies was still farther extended yesterday and now reaches within 30 miles of the Belgian frontier, carrying the allies' overlapping movement in a northeasterly direction.

The German reinforcements on this end of the line are very strong. These troops probably were brought from bodies of German forces echeloned in the rear of their advanced entrenchments. Their courageous dashes to the allies' front did not meet with success, and the French and British were able to make them fall back on their deep trenches.

The sight of the allied infantry creeping across the open spaces in front of the trenches, in a brilliant sunshine which glittered on their weapons, was impressive. Hundreds of holes burst overhead in their rear without doing damage.

Everywhere the French and British soldiers seemed as though glued to the ground, but yet their widely extended lines progressed always forward. In only two or three instances did they encounter the spitting machine gun fire with its murderous hail of bullets, which opened on them when they surmounted slight eminences, before reaching the German trenches. They found few Germans there to meet their bayonets, as the invaders had retired to another line only a few hundred yards back.

It is stated that the Germans also receded on the eastern wing, where for many days they have been going back continually. In that region of the great battlefield the famous French Alpine riflemen came in contact with the Germans and inflicted considerable loss.

In the centre there was comparative calm, although the artillery and infantry kept firing occasionally as though to remind their adversaries of their presence.

The aviators on each side have kept continual watch on the movements of the enemy, and sometimes have dropped shrapnel bombs, generally with small effect, as the troops are well sheltered in their burrows.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

A Petrograd despatch says it is semi-officially announced that Emperor William has left Breslau for Thorn and Bromberg in East Prussia.

M. Eyschen, Minister of State of Luxemburg, has issued a proclamation urging the people of the little state to remain calm in the face of German aggressions.

Ward Hamilton Bewlby, K.C., celebrated his 86th birthday yesterday in Berlin. He is the oldest crown attorney in the Dominion of Canada, having held his position for 47 years.

The war is costing France $7,000,000 a day. Minister of Finance Alexandre Ribot announced Saturday that the outlay for the first 60 days of the conflict had been $420,000,000.

Among the speakers on the second day of the American Bar Association Convention in New York on Oct. 20, 21 and 22, will be Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, Chief Justice of the Canadian Supreme Court.

Lieut. Harold Pearson, M.P., son of Lord Cowdray, the noted oil financier, who was taken prisoner at the battle of the Marne, was later shot and killed by a German sentry while trying to escape.

Samuel Jones, farmer, of Percy Township, was found dead by a neighbor at his farm near Warkworth, Ont., Saturday. Mr. Jones was suddenly attacked by illness while in the fields.

Choosing a term in jail in preference to returning to the tramp steamer Askehall and serving under Capt. Harris, thirteen sailors were sentenced Saturday to 12 weeks in jail by Judge Lanctot at Montreal for having "mutinied" on board the steamer.

Telegraph Poles on Track.

GUELPH, Oct. 5.—An attempt was made Friday night by persons unknown to wreck a Grand Trunk passenger train between Brantford and Guelph. Opposite the siding at the lime kilns, three miles north of Hespeler, the passengers were almost thrown out of their seats by the sudden stopping of the train.

The crew ran back with lanterns, and it was discovered that three large telegraph poles had been placed across the tracks. The engineer did not see the poles in time to stop the train, and he ran into them at full speed. Two of them were broken to pieces, while the third was pushed to one side.

The engine was not derailed, and there was no one hurt.

Snow in Calgary.

CALGARY, Oct. 5.—It is snowing in Calgary, and with a strong wind, and the heavy clouds gathering, it looks as if this district would register a good fall within the next day or two. The temperature has dropped perceptibly and wintry weather prevails.

BATTLE OF THE AISNE TO DECIDE THE FUTURE PHILOSOPHY OF WAR

Experts Predict That Result of Great Conflict Raging in France Will Prove Whether a Nation of Militarists or One of Patriots Make the Best Fighters

To military experts who have been watching the progress of the battles on the Aisne not only the political destinies of Europe, but the philosophy of warfare, are being decided there. On the final result of this—the greatest of all world's conflicts—they believe will rest the fate of militarism.

The battle, which has raged with unabated ferocity through days of burning heat and clammy chill, from trenches alternately baked by the sun and flooded with fall rains, has now reached the stage where the stamina—the morale of the contestants—will decide it. Army officers and experts believe that the Allies will win a sweeping victory, and they say that if they do they will prove what has long been contended—that a nation of militarists are weaker in war than a nation of patriots.

No nation ever went into a war more completely prepared than Germany, they state. The bewildering number of minute details which have been taken care of and the contingencies which have been provided against are stupendous. From the armoured soup kitchens that provide the soldiers with warm, palatable food to the little vials of oil to keep their shoes soft when they are wet, nothing seems to have been overlooked. Besides all these minute preparations, which range from cut to order uniform with complete changes for every soldier to armament that is amazing in its diversity and completeness, the Germans have a staff of highly trained, competent leaders, who were supposed to have foreseen every military probability. As an indication of the effect which the armies of the French and the Germans produced, a correspondent in a recent article referred to the entrance of both into Brussels—the French pasing through to relieve Namur, the Germans entering as conquerors.

The French, he wrote, took with them the gay atmosphere of the panoply of war, with the jaunty step, their red breeches and their laughing greetings. But, he added, here and there the door of a supply train flapped open and here and there straps on packs were twisted. When the Germans entered they came like a green haze, marching evenly and solemn. All of their supply trains bore patent locks and their straps and ropes were all tied one way. Each regiment had its own fleet of automobile trucks.

The French went into the war with little preparation. The automobile omnibuses of Paris were transformed into commissary waggons. Of course, the French reservists were trained soldiers in a way, but their training was not that of a nation absolutely military. Rather, it was a patriotic training, which taught them that devotion to the cause of one's country was of more avail than knowledge of a drill manual.

The English nation, calm, resolute determined, sent its little standing army over to Belgium, where it showed the Germans what the training of an Anglo-Saxon soldier is.

Now England is drilling and sending her volunteers to war, and when this contest is ended, experts say, it will prove once for all whether the efficiency of a centralized government is superior to the glorious patriotism of the men who love their countries and who are fighting not because a scientific, cold blooded general staff has ordered them to but because, in the words of a great Englishman

Problem Of Feeding Armies

Vast Numbers May Mean an Army's Defeat Unless Proper Attention Has Been Given to Commisariat

It is useless to collect together a vast multitude of fighting men unless athey can be fed, for the human machine requires fuel just as certainly as any mechanical motor. Something about the preparations that must be taken in this respect is as follows.

To provide for the wants of the troops every army has one or more administrative departments charged with the procuration, custody and distribution of certain varieties of supplies which are essential to keep the troops in health and strength, and which provide them at all times with everything that is indispensable for the furtherance of the plan of campaign.

Points to Consider.

In forming a plan of supply for a particular campaign the following points must be carefully considered: the resources of the theatre of war, and the facility of utilizing the same; the time of year and climate; the nature of the war, whether offensive or defensive; the length of the line of communications; the rapidity of the movements, the propinquity of the enemy; and the temper of the inhabitants.

The national country must provide the supplies for its armies. This is particularly important now, as it has been held that provisions and foodstuffs of ordinarily innocent use, which are usually only conditionally contraband, may become absolutely contraband of war when actually and especially destined for the military or naval forces of a belligerent.

Live on the Country.

The right of armies to take from the country all that they require for their sustenance is indisputable, though we usually understand the expression "living upon the country" has direct application to an enemy's country. Military necessity, as understood by all civilized nations, permits the enforcement in an enemy's country of all those measures which are indispensable to facilitate and assist in the conduct of the war, and which are lawful according to the modern law and usages of war.

The preparation, therefore, must extend to an elaborate study of the resources of the home country and of a probable theatre of operations. In some of the great powers this work is carried out through the co-operation of the various civil authorities whose duty it is to make instant report of any change in the supply situation in their district. Statistical data and supply maps are prepared showing

What to Know.

The principal production of the country; the distribution of the available resources; the importance of the last harvest; the amount of the exports of same; the amount locally consumed; the number and kind of meat cattle; the number, motive power, daily capacity, and location of the flour millsIn the number and average yield of the bakeries; the number and location of the abattoirs and meat-packing establishments; the number of draft animals; the means of transportation, railways, steamboat and ordinary roads, and their capacity; the number of the inhabitants, urban ad rural; the character of the imports and exports; the supply and character of the potable water; the fuel used and its abundance

COLLIDED WITH G. T. R. GATE

An automobile leaving the G. T. R station on Saturday evening with some half dozen ladies, ran into the east King street gates. The car itself was only slightly damaged, but the gates were knocked down and the casting broken. None of the passengers, however, were injured.

TRUCE IS REFUSED

Germans Before Antwerp Wanted Time to Bury Their Dead—Losses Were Heavy.

NEAR HOLLAND BORDER

LONDON, Oct. 5. — A despatch to the Central News from Antwerp, dated Sunday night, says:

"The Germans have been repulsed. They asked for a two-hour armistice to bury their dead, but the Belgians refused to comply.

"The Belgians have destroyed all the bridges over the River Nethe. The Germans attempted unsuccessfully to rebuild the bridges."

Reuter's Amsterdam correspondent in a despatch filed Sunday, says:

"The German troops to-day displayed greater activity around the Dutch frontier. They occupied Lanaken after a short bombardment."

An earlier despatch said: "The Germans have also been active in two widely-separated parts of Belgium. They visited Tournai on Saturday and announced that they were an advance guard of 10,000 men proceeding to Lille, while last night and this morning fighting was going on far to the east near Lanaken, northwest of Maestricht. One report said that Lanaken was on fire, but another declared that it was a nearby village that was burning. A number of fugitives have arrived at Maestricht, as well as some Belgian soldiers, who have been interned."

GHENT, Oct. 5. — The Germans made no forward movement all day Saturday. Southward of Antwerp there has been scarcely a shot fired near the Antwerp forts or the Scheldt defences. Skirting Ghent on the loop line, I have seen many trains in operation. Early yesterday morning the Germans blew up the railway bridge near Grammont to prevent the allies from using that route to cut off the German retreat from northern France by bringing troops down to Enghien.

There has been heavy fighting east of Antwerp, the Germans yesterday having concentrated on the forts on that side, but it has been in favor of the defenders. One of the huge 17-inch guns of the Germans was located by a Belgian aeroplane and destroyed by concentrated Belgian artillery fire. Scouts proceeding as far southwards as Nlenov report that they have seen no Germans whatever.

AEROPLANE IS SHELLED.

British Aviator Completes Task and Sails Home Unharmed.

LONDON, Oct. 5.—A despatch to The Morning Post from its Antwerp correspondent says: I witnessed on Friday from the outside of Lierre the most interesting aerial engagement, if engagement is the proper word for a flight under heavy shell fire. A little after four o'clock a British naval biplane rose out of Antwerp and headed for the German lines between Willebroek and Howndonek. These machines fly with almost incredible swiftness. This one passed a fast motor-car going in the same direction as easily as a swallow passes a sparrow.

As soon the the British aeroplane got over the German lines it came under the fire of German guns, especially designed to attack aviators. Two of these guns engaged the aviator. They fired first some ranging shells, which on bursting left a thick ball of black smoke. These shells apparently were fired with a difference in elevation of 500 feet, and were designed to ascertain the elevation of the aeroplane, but the aeroplane seemed to shape its course so as to avoid passing near the smoke balls, which were in any case at a greater height than itself.

The German guns then began with shrapnel fire, as if satisfied with the information given by the ranging shells. Twelve shells were fired, all at a greater height than the aeroplane, as if the design were to scatter the balls on it from above. Changing its course occasionally the aeroplane flew about, completed its work and winged its way back to the Belgian lines. Its passage in safety under the bursting shrapnel was one of the most exciting warfare incidents imaginable.

PRINCE'S HEART FAILED.

Kaiser's Son Had Serious Attack After Fight With Turcos.

LONDON, Oct. 5.—A despatch to The Evening News, from Copenhagen, reports that the correspondent of The Berliner Tageblatt, who witnessed the battle at Verdun, on Sept. 24, when Prince Oscar led the Imperial Guard, says: Though the Germans fought like lions, the Turcos climbed trees like monkeys, hiding in the leaves. The Germans and Turcos fought and wrestled in a terrible hand-to-hand struggle, and many German officers fell dead around the prince, who thereafter had the heart attack already described.

He was taken to the hospital at Metz in a rather serious condition. Arrived there he began to regain strength, and when told that the Kaiser had conferred the Iron Cross on him he brightened up visibly.

The decoration was pinned on him by Gen. Von Stranta, who received it in 1890.

COL. HUGHES RETURNS.

Minister of Militia May Not Have Time For Trip to England.

OTTAWA, Oct. 5.—Col. Hughes arrived back in Ottawa yesterday and took over the administration of his Department again, Sir Robert Borden having been acting Minister of Militia for the past two weeks. A long session of the Militia Council was held yesterday to deal with a mass of accumulated business.

Col. Hughes confirmed the reported appointment of Gen. Alderson to command the Canadian contingent and said the choice was a good one.

Asked as to whether he was going to England, he replied that he might go, if he could find time for the trip, but he had made no definite arrangements and was not sure that he could spare the time. He had gone with the troops ships as far as he could without going right across.

Col. Hughes added that the organization of the French-Canadian brigade would be commenced forthwith and troops would be enlisted at various Canadian centres to reinforce the contingent which has just sailed.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

The old man gave the order. And presently nine canoes stood in near at hand, while all the rest lay irregularly grouped about them.

Now Stern's plan of the tenfold cable developed itself. Already he was untwisting the thick rope. One by one he passed the separate cords to men in the other boats. And in a few minutes he and nine other men held the ropes, which, all attached to the big iron ring below, spread upward like the ribs of an inverted umbrella.

The engineer's scheme was working to perfection. Well he had realized that no one boat could have sufficed to lift the great weight of the machine. Even the largest canoe would have been capsized and sunk long before a single portion of the Pauillac and its engine had been so much as stirred from the sandy bottom.

But with the buoyant power of ten canoes and twenty or thirty men all applied simultaneously, Stern figured he had a reasonable chance of raising the sunken aeroplane. The fact that it was submerged, together with the diminished gravitation of the Abyss, also worked in his favour. And as he saw the Folk-men grip the cords with muscular hands, awaiting his command, he thrilled with pride and with the sense of real achievement.

"Come, now, boys!" he cried. "Pull! Heave-ho, there! Altogether, lift her! Pull!"

He strained at the rope which he and two others held; the rest—each rope now held by three or four men—bent their back to the labour. As the ropes drew tense, the canoes crowded and jostled together. Those men who were not at the ropes, worked with the paddles to keep the boats apart, so that the ropes should not foul in bend. And in an irregular ring, all round the active canoes, the others drew. Lighted by so many torches, the misty waters glittered as broken waves, thrown out by the agitation of the canoes, radiated in all directions.

"Pull, boys! pull!" shouted the engineer again. "Up she comes! Now, all together!"

Came a jerk, a long and dragging resistance, then a terrific straining on the main cords. The taut and a half of men breathed hard; on their naked arms the veins and muscles swelled; the torchlight gleamed blue on their sweating faces and bodies.

And spontaneously, as at all times of great endeavour among the Folk, a wailing song arose; it echoed through the gloom; it grew, taken up by the outlying boats; and in the eternal dark of the Abyss it rose, uncanny, soul-shaking, weird beyond all telling.

Stern felt the shuddering chills chase each other up and down his spine, playing a nervous accompaniment to their chant.

"Gad!" he muttered, shivering, "what a situation for a hard-headed, practical man like me! It's more like a scene from some weird pipe-dream magazine story of the remote past than solid reality!"

Again the Folk strained at the ropes. Stern with them, and now the great weight below was surely rising, inch by inch, up, up, toward the black and gleaming surface of the abyssmal sea.

Stern's heart was pounding wildly. If only—incredible as it seemed—the Pauillac really were there at the end of the converging ropes; and if it were still in condition to be repaired again! If only the hook and the hard-taxed ropes held!

"Up, boys! Heave 'er!" he shouted, pulling till his muscles hardened like steel, and the canoe—balanced, though it was by five oarsmen and the patriarch all at the other gunwale—toped crazily. "Pull! Pull!"

Beatrice sprang to the rope. Unable to restrain herself, she, too, laid hold on the taut, dripping cord; and her white hands, firm, muscular, shapely, gripped with a strength one could never have guessed lay in them.

And now the ropes were sliding up out of the water, faster, ever faster; and higher rose the song of all those labouring Folk and all who watched from the outlying ring of boats.

Even as he spoke the waters beneath them began to boil and bubble strangely, as though with the rising of a monstrous fish; and all at once, with a heave, a sloshing splatter, a huge, weed-covered, wing-like object, sluicing brine, wallowed sharply out into the torchlight.

A great triumphal howl rose from the waiting Folk—a howl that drowned Stern's cheer and that of Beatrice, and for a moment all was confusion. The wing rose, fell, slid back into the water, and again dipped upward. The canoes canted; some took water; all were thrown against each other in the central group; and cries, shouts, orders, and a wild fencing off with padles followed.

Stern yelled in vain orders that the old man could not even hear to translate; orders which would not, even though heard, have been obeyed. But after a moment or two comparative order was restored, and the engineer, veins standing out on his temples, eyes ablaze, bellowed:

"Hold fast, you! No more, no more—don't pull up any more, d——n you! Hey, stop that—you'll rip the hook clean out and lose it again!

"You, father—here—tell 'em to let it down a little, now—about six feet, so. Easy—does it—easy!"

Now the Pauillac, sodden with water, hanging thickly with the luxuriant weed-clusters which even in a fortnight had grown in that warm sea, was suspended at the end of the ten cords about six or eight feet below the keels of the canoes.

"Tell 'em to let it stay that way now," continued the engineer. "Tell 'em all to hold fast, those that have the ropes. The others paddle for the shore as fast as they can—and d——n the man that loafs now!"

The patriarch conveyed the essence of these instructions to the oarsmen, and now, convoyed by the outlying boats, the ten canoes moved very slowly toward the village.

Retarded by the vast, bird-like bulk that trailed below, they seemed hardly to make any progress at all. Stern ordered the free boats to hitch on and help by towing. Lines were passed, and after a while all twenty-five canoes, driven by the power of two hundred and fifty pairs of sinewy arms, were dragging the Pauillac shoreward.

Stern's excitement—now that the machine was really almost within his grasp again—far from diminishing, was every minute growing keener.

The delay until he could examine it and see its condition and its chances of repair, seemed interminable. Continually he urged the patriarch—himself profoundly moved—to force the rowers to still greater exertion. At a paddle he laboured, throwing every ounce of strength into the toil. Each moment seemed an hour.

"Gad! If it's only possible to make it fly again!" thought he.

Half an hour passed, and now at length the dim and clustered lights of the village began to show vaguely through the mist.

"Come on, boys; now for it!" shouted Stern. "Land her for me, and I'll show you wonders you never even dreamed of!"

They drew near the shore. Already Stern was formulating his plans for landing the machine without injuring it, when out from the beach a long and swift canoe put rapidly, driven by twenty men.

At sight of it the rowing in Stern's boats weakened, then stopped. Confused cries arose, altercations, and strange shouts; then a hush of expectancy, of fear, seemd to possess the boat crews.

And ever nearer, larger, drew the long canoe, a two-pronged, blazing cresset at its bows.

Across the waters drifted a word.

"Go on, you! Row!" cried Stern. "Land the machine, I tell you! Say, father, what's the matter now? What are my men on strike for all of a sudden? Why don't they finish the job?"

The old man, perplexed, listened intently.

Between the group of canoes and the shore the single boat had stopped. A man was standing upright in it. Now came a clear hail, and now two or three sentences, peremptory, angry, harsh.

At sound of them consternation seized certain of the men. A number dropped the ropes, while others reached for the slings and spears that always lay in the bottoms of the canoes.

"What the devil now?" shouted Stern. "You all gone crazy, or what?"

He turned appealingly to the old man.

"For Heaven's sake, what's up?" he cried. "Tell me, can't you, before the idiots drop my machine and ruin the whole thing? What—"

"Misfortune, O my son!" cried the patriarch in a strange trembling voice. "The worst that could befall! In our absence he has come back—he, Kamrou! And under pain of death he bids all men abandon every task and haste to homage. Kamrou the Terrible is here!"

CHAPTER XXXV.

FACE TO FACE WITH DEATH.

For a moment Stern stared, speechless with amazement, at the old man, as though to determine whether or not he had gone mad. But the commotion, the mingled fear and anger of the boat crews convinced him the danger, though unknown, was very real.

And, flaring into sudden rage at this untimely interruption just in the very moment of success, he jerked his pistol from its holster, and stood up in the boat.

"I'll have no butting in here!" he cried in a loud, harsh voice. "Who the devil is Kamrou, I'd like to know? Go on, on, to shore!"

"My son—!"

"You order these men to grab those ropes again and go ashore or I warn you there's going to be a whole big heap of trouble!"

Over the waters drifted another hail, and the strange long boat, under the urge of vigorous arms, now began to move toward Stern's fleet. At the same time, mingled cries arose on shore. Stern could see lights moving back and forth; some confusion was under way there, though what, he could not imagine.

"Well," he cried, "are you going to order these men to go forward? Or shall I—with this?"

And menacingly he raised the grim and ugly gun.

"Oh my son!" exclaimed the patriarch, his lips twitching, his hands outstretched—while in the boats a babel of conflicting voices rose—"O my son, if I have sinned in keeping this from you, now let me die! I hid it from your knowledge, verily, to save my people—to keep you with us till this thing should be accomplished! My reckoning was that Kamrou and his men would stay beyond the Great Vortex, at their labour, until after—"

"Kamrou?" shouted Stern again. "What the deuce do I care about him? Who is he, anyhow? A Lanskaarn, or—"

The girl seized Allan's sand.

"Oh, listen, listen!" she implored. "I—"

"Did you know about this? And never told me?"

"Allan, he said our work could all be done before the—"

"So you did know, eh?"

"He said I must not tell you. Otherwise—"

"Oh, hang that! See here, Beatrice, what's the matter anyhow? These people have all gone crazy? just in a second, the old man and all! If you know anything about it, for God's sake tell me! I can't stand much more!

"I've got to get this machine to land before they go entirely nutty and drop it, and we lose all our work for nothing. What's up? Who's this Kamrou they're talking about? For heaven's sake, tell me!"

"He's their chief. Allan—their chief! He's been gone a long time, he and his men. And—"

"Well, what do we care for him? We're running this village now, aren't we?"

"Listen. The old man says—"

Crippled With Rheumatism

And Skeptical After Trying Many Medicines — Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Cured Him.

When the kidneys fail to purify the blood the poisons left in the system cause pain and suffering, such as backache, lumbago and rheumatism. Read how this skeptic was cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. F. W. Brown, Kingsbury, Que., writes:—"I have been completely cured of backache and lame back by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I also recommended the pills to a man who was a cripple from rheumatism. He was skeptical, as he said that he had tried nearly everything on earth. Finally he consented to try them, and to his surprise was greatly benefited in the first week, and the pains left his legs until he was so supple he could walk without pain or difficulty. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have worked wonders in this place, and we think there is no medicine like them."

DISTRESS OF NATIONS WITH PERPLEXITY

"A Time of Trouble Such as Never Was."

CLASHING PRAYERS ASCEND

Great Confusion of Thought—The Present War Long Foretold in Prophecy—All Nations to Be Involved—Inefficiency of All Gentile Kingdoms to Bring Lasting Peace—Need of Divine Interposition—Nebuchadnezzar's Dream of Gentile Supremacy—"Times of the Gentiles" Now Expiring—The World's Hope—Messiah's Kingdom.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]

October 4.—Pastor Russell's discourse to-day was strictly up to date. He took for his text the Master's words, "Upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth." (Luke 21:25, 26.) He said in part:

Never was there such a war as there is at the present time. Peculiar conditions have arisen, more so than has ever been known before in the history of the world. With the utter destruction of civilization impending, present conditions seem to take on a peculiar force as we think of what relationship God has to all these matters.

On every hand prayers for peace are ascending to God. Some are praying for the success of the allied armies—which means the slaughter of the Germans, Austrians and Hungarians; others are praying for just the reverse; still others are praying that the war shall not go on. All this shows great confusion of thought. How could all these prayers be heard? The Master has told us that we are to pray in accord with the Word of God. Therefore, before praying on the subject, it would be well to determine what are God's purposes in regard to this war, in order to pray in harmony with His arrangements. Instead of telling the Almighty what to do, we should all hearken to His Word, and take note of what He says about this war and the terrible Armageddon which will follow it—the "Time of Trouble such as was not since there was a nation."

As I read my Bible with clearer eyes than once I read it, I see so many things different from what once I thought that I have great sympathy with people who are confused on this matter. As I read the Bible, God has foretold this very war and has indicated just what is happening to-day. Through the Prophet Joel He has said to all nations, "Let the weak say, I am strong. * * * Let the nations be wakened, and come up to the Valley of Jehoshaphat"—to the Battle of the great Day of God Almighty. If God prophesied this war of nations, then we need not pray that He stop a war which He has foretold would take place.

Surely, so far as the present war has gone, it has brought a greater number to the grave than has any previous war. Many, doubtless, will be shocked at the declaration that this war and the still greater calamity to follow are of Divine arrangement. Nevertheless, the gathering of the nations to the present struggle is referred to in the Prophet's words, where the weak nations are called upon to assert their strength and to go down, all of them, to the Valley of Jehoshaphat—otherwise the Valley of Graves.

In harmony with this prophecy, the nations have for years been "beating their plowshares into swords, and their pruning-hooks into spears," in the sense that money has been spent for military purposes which should properly have been spent in agricultural implements and developments. Apparently all the nations of the world will yet be involved. Happy would it be if our own land should escape! We are very glad to note that our President and our Secretary of State are men of peace, and will surely do all in their power to avoid complications and war itself. Nevertheless, it is reasonable to expect that the great nations of Europe, realizing how much they will be weakened by the war, will do all in their power to ensnare these United States, lest at the conclusion of the war we should tower too much above the other nations in financial strength and in every other way.

But to the majority it is very confusing to think that God would bring about any great war. There is surely something wrong or there would not be such perplexity; for the Lord tells His people that they will not be in darkness. Speaking about this Time of Trouble, St. Paul says, "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that Day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of the light, and the children of the Day." (1 Thessalonians [illegible].) God's people should have general information regarding His plans, purposes and arrangements.

Only as we look at the Divine Plan as a whole can we understand God's relationship with this bloody war—and with all war. Many have seen only small portions of the Divine Plan, and so have failed to grasp the great lengths, breadths, heights and depths of God's great Purpose. But whoever has an understanding of the great Plan of God will ever after be able rightly to appreciate and to locate not only the events of to-day, but also everything that is coming; for the Bible outlines the history of man.

The Scriptures clearly teach that our earth is the only rebellious province in all God's fair creation. In this little planet God has permitted sin to take its course—to bud, to blossom, to bring forth its fruitage—that both men and angels may see the dire results of opposition to the Divine Government. The Bible tells us how this world became rebellious. It tells us that God did not create mankind imperfect, as we are to-day. Man was created perfect, an earthly being—in the image of His Heavenly Creator, in the sense of having a moral character, but limited to earthly conditions. This perfect man was placed in a perfect home in every way adapted to his needs. This Eden was especially prepared for him, and he was to enjoy it. But he was the king of the whole earth; and therefore his Creator instructed him that, as his family increased, he was to subdue the earth and develop it. Had mankind remained in harmony with God, the whole world would have become as Eden.

God foreknew just what would occur, however. He foreknew Adam's sin and fall, as well as the mental, moral and physical degeneracy which would result from the disobedience of our first parents. He foreknew our weakness and imperfection, our attempts at moral, religious and mental reform and at mental and physical health. Yet He permitted all this to come to pass.

Sin entered the world, and has continued to rest upon the human family for six thousand years. This curse of sin and death is upon mankind. God's penalty for sin is death, and whether it comes through pestilence, famine, war or by slower processes, matters little. There is no one so stupid but that he can see that the whole course of human history has been a reign of Sin and Death.

The Bible tells us that God has permitted this condition to continue for the past six thousand years as a great lesson on the exceeding sinfulness of sin and on the utter hopelessness of any other help than that which He Himself has provided. For six great Days of a thousand years each—from Adam's time until now—Sin and Death have reigned over the race. These are man's own Week, in which he has been permitted to try everything he could imagine for his own relief from sin and its penalty—death.

And now, after the Week has drawn to a close, what do we find? Mankind are still dying—mentally, morally, physically. So far from gaining life for our race, all our efforts through doctors, scientists, etc., have accomplished practically nothing. Yea, our most learned physicians and specialists tell us that the world is on the verge of a collapse. They say that at the present rate of increase there would not be, in a hundred and sixty years from now, enough sane people in the world to care for the insane. They tell us that various diseases are increasing so rapidly as to endanger the existence of the race in a very short time; and this in face of the fact that sanitary conditions are made a necessity, even to the extent of providing individual drinking cups.

Our only hope is in God; and He has arranged that His blessing shall come through Messiah's Kingdom when our race shall have reached its limit. Man's extremity will be God's opportunity. In the great Seventh Day of man's work Week, the antitypical Sabbath, Messiah will, in association with His Church of this Gospel Age, set up the Divine Kingdom amongst men—a spiritual Kingdom, not an earthly one, ruling, blessing and uplifting mankind. For a thousand years this work of uplift will progress, until all the willing and obedient will have attained again the lost likeness of their Creator and all the unwilling and disobedient will have been cut off from life in the Second Death.

Another great lesson which God has been teaching mankind during the reign of Sin and Death is the fact that they are incapable of establishing such a government as is necessary for real blessing and uplift of the race. For a time He assisted the nation of Israel to be His typical kingdom, selecting King David and his posterity to constitute the royal family. The last king of David's line was Zedekiah, of whom we read: "And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose time has come that iniquity shall have an end. Thus saith the Lord God, Remove the diadem, take off the crown; I will overturn, overturn, overturn it until He comes whose right it is; and I will give it unto Him." (Ezekiel 21:25-27.) The One whose right it is, is Messiah—Jesus the Head, and the Church His Body—on the spirit plane.

Certain Scriptures indicate that the time during which God's Kingdom would be removed would be seven prophetic Times, each of which is 360 years in length. Seven Times would therefore equal 2,520 years. That period, reckoned from the time of King Zedekiah's overthrow, ends with this year; for according to the Scriptures the crown was taken away from King Zedekiah in 606 B. C. If so, with the close of the present year Messiah should take to Himself His great power and begin the long-promised Millennial Reign of Glory, the opening or beginning of which, according to the Bible, will be a very dark hour—"a Time of Trouble such as was not since there was a nation," "nor ever shall be"—the like again.

When God took away His typical kingdom, 606 B.C., He gave the Gentiles authority or permission to do their best to rule and govern the world and to bring in righteousness. That we might know all this, He gave a dream to Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, and sent the interpretation of the dream through Daniel, the Prophet. The dream showed a great image, whose head was of gold, representing Babylon; the breast and arms of silver, representing the succeeding government of Medo-Persia; the belly of brass, representing the Grecian Empire, which succeeded the Medes and Persians; and its legs of iron represented Rome, the government of the Caesars. Each of these governments has had universal sway, each has shown the best it was able to do for humanity, and each has failed.

The feet of the image were of iron, showing that they represented part of the Roman Empire; but they were smeared with clay and thus made to represent stone feet. These feet represented the Holy Roman Empire, whose divisions, or toes, are now at war with each other. The dream and its interpretation showed that the stone which struck the image in the feet, ground them to powder and utterly destroyed the entire image, represented God's Kingdom. According to the prophecy, this Kingdom will ultimately fill the whole earth.

The clay smeared on the feet, making them look like the stone, represents the fact that the present Roman governments of Europe claim to be Christ's Kingdom. On their coins, and otherwise, they claim to be representatives of God. They have deceived themselves into thinking of themselves as Christendom, which signifies Christ's Kingdom. In reality, however, they are Gentile kingdoms, the last representatives of Gentile power—the feet and the toes of the image of Gentile supremacy which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream.

These powers are what the Bible calls "the kingdoms of this world." But they are part of the Gentile power which has been permitted to rule the world up to the time when God will be ready to set up His Kingdom, which was also represented in Nebuchadnezzar's dream—the stone cut out without hands. The Word of God transforming the hearts of his people will gradually make them His Kingdom, and in the spiritual Kingdom these will be Messiah's joint-heirs. When the image of Gentile supremacy falls, these will be put into power and place. Then all will have opportunity to return to the image of God.

We have read in history, and daily we are reading in the newspapers, how these nations are attempting to blow one another off the sea and the land. "The nations were angry," says the Revelator. There is no nation so small but that it desires to go to war. As the Prophet Joel says to the nations, "Come up to the Valley of Jehoshaphat." Outside of the walls of Jerusalem is the cemetery of Jehoshaphat, known as the Valley of Graves. In figurative language the Prophet is saying to the nations, "Come up to the Valley of Graves!" And this is just where they are going.

When we think of the appalling loss of life amongst these angry nations, it is grand to know that all these bitter experiences are not lost, and that the poor creatures who have suffered are not, when they die, buried into eternal torment—that these poor creatures, not knowing what the war really is about, but demonstrating to the best of their ability their patriotism, are not thrown to the devil to be forever roasted. Ah, no! According to the Scriptures, they are falling asleep in death. Their sorrows and woes are all over for the present. They will know nothing more until He who has redeemed them will call them forth from the dominion of Death.

The present war will weaken the nations, not only of their life-blood, but also of their wealth; and it will demonstrate the inefficiency of all Gentile kingdoms to bring to the world peace, righteousness, satisfactory government. But Messiah's Kingdom, which will then be inaugurated, will be "the desire of all nations." This war and the anarchy of Armageddon, which will follow it, will prove conclusively the great need of Divine interposition in human affairs.

Doubtless earth's great rulers have done the best they know how to do for their peoples. Some of our very best laws came from Julius Caesar, in combination with the Mosaic code. Some of the world's rulers to-day are also doing their best; but they are confused. Having a false idea of what constitutes Christ's Kingdom, they seem to think it their mission to conquer the world. They also believe that they foresee a general uprising of Socialism, and their hearts are failing them, fearing the things coming upon the earth.

While they know that this would be the worst war ever known, yet they preferred it to that which they were striving to ward off and which they have succeeded in [illegible]

THE ONLY CURE FOR CONSTIPATION

Is "Fruit-a-tives"—That Wonderful Remedy Made From Fruit Juices.

AVON, ONT., MAY 14th, 1913.

"I have used "Fruit-a-tives" for Indigestion and Constipation with most excellent results, and they continue to be my only medicine. When I first started about six years ago to use them, I took four at a dose but gradually reduced the dose to one tablet at night. Before taking "Fruit-a-tives", I took salts and other pills but the treatment was too harsh. I thought I might as well suffer from the illness as from these treatments. Finally, I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised with a letter in which some one recommended them very highly, so I tried them, and I have no hesitation in recommending them." ANNIE E. CORBETT.

HAVE AN EXPRESSIVE FACE.

The secret of beauty does not entirely lie in the art of massaging, nor is it due to the skill of the perfumer, the taste of the dressmaker or the cleverness of the milliner, but in the recognition of the fact that the human face and form change with every year of life, and knowing this, governing one's actions accordingly. If your face lacks intellectuality, the only way to remedy it is by exercise of mind. Take up a course of reading and study beyond that which you have hitherto attained. To put it figuratively, cultivate the muscles of the brain as you would cultivate the muscles of the body. It is the action of the brain that will influence the expression.

Belgian Railway Stock And Motor Cars In South France

Letter From Bordeaux Says Germans Have Wanted War Every Day For Forty Years—Many Belgians in France.

NEW YORK, Oct. 2—A U. S. banker, writing to a friend from Bourdeaux, to a friend in New York, comments on the war as follows:

"The most surprising feature of the war, in my judgment, is the ignorance of the French and English as to the character of the German preparation for one final, desperate struggle. What to us who have been keeping our eyes open for the last twenty years is only what we have known must happen whenever the war did come is to these people a sort of painful surprise. This explains the daily newspaper complaints that the Germans burn villages where their troops are fired on from windows, etc., and that they even use motor vans by the hundred to bring up their troops quickly.

One newspaper here seems astonished that when three farmers fired on German scouts from a field the scouts killed the lot of them. The fact is that guns and ammunition alone don't make a nation ready for war. Neither the French nor the English, remain a warlike people. They like peace and all that goes with it, as we do. The Germans wanted a war, have wanted it every day in the week for forty years, and have trained one whole generation of fighting men to live and work and think with nothing else in mind. What can you expect?

Dummies to Draw Rifle Fire.

A wounded French officer, who fought them in Belgium, told me yesterday that they were wonderfully organized, but couldn't shot their rifles They excel, he says, only in their Gatling guns, which are terribly effective and in their science and strategy. He told me how a large force of Germans engaged the 10,000 French he was with in Belgium from 8 o'clock one morning until dark—firing from behind trenches all day without making one forward move.

It was of course, a cover for other operations. He said they entrenched behind a triple earthwork, the front line being set up with dummy men to draw the rifle fire, the second with abattis and barbed wire, and the third with the troops.

He said his men wasted a lot of fire on the dummies which carried helmets from dead soldiers; and that these trenches were almost impossible to take until the troops behind them had been driven out by artillery.

This officer said the condition of the country districts in Belgium was awful. The whole country has been trampled over by the armies, and there is absolutely nothing left but a dead land strewn with corpses. The numbers of men engaged is greater than was ever in the field before.

All the best Belgian railroad rolling stock has been moved safely into France and I saw 250 Belgian motor cars in Havre the other day—run out of the country and packed there to await the end of the war. The Chemin de Fer du Nord of France, most of which is in German hands, must have sent some of its rolling stock south, because the car I came to Bordeaux in on the last lap of my journey, was one of that company.

Use Hotels for Hospitals.

Most of the best summer hotels in France are taken for hospitals. This has caused trouble for a great many Americans who counted on remining in Europe "until the war is over."

I don't know what part of the Belgian population has fled into France but it must be very large. Trains are still crowded with them as far down as Nantes and Bordeaux. I understand it is the same in England. From France no foreigners, except Americans on their way to America, are permitted to leave for England, unless they have a residence in England. You have to prove the residence to British Columbia, and I have had to send to London for my proofs. I am thankful to say that I had a wire this morning saying they are being sent, and they ought to arrive by the time I need them.

A GRACIOUS LADY SHE

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY, QUEEN VICTORIA.

QUEEN VICTORIA IN THE TUILERIES, 1855.

QUEEN VICTORIA
BUILDER of EMPIRE

ROYAL FAMILY OF ENGLAND WHEN VICTORIA REIGNED.

Stead's Tribute to Queen Victoria on Her Diamond Jubilee in 1897

"NO other British monarch has reigned so long and so well and has continued so steadily to grow in the love and affection of the lieges to the very end. The English speaking race has in the closing century made a tolerably conspicuous mark for itself in the history of the world. It opened with the battle thunder as of Trafalgar and Waterloo. It is closing with the peaceful commemoration of a reign which, although darkened by the shadow of one war and one mutiny, has nevertheless for sixty years been a reign of peace.

"Among all the garnered glories of the hundred years there are none that may be regarded with more perfect and absolute satisfaction than the production of the supreme American man in the person of Abraham Lincoln and the supreme English woman in the person of Queen Victoria.

It is easy to suggest how either might have been altered so as to make them conform more closely to the conventional type of the human ideal in person, in character and in capacity. Improvements might be suggested to bring them up to a more ideal standard. Lincoln was not a Shakespeare. The Queen is not a Raphael.

"But, notwithstanding that, the century has very little that is greater to show than the somewhat homely but familiar figures of that man and that woman—neither of them apparently of the stuff of which saints and sages and heroes are made, both modelled out of simple human clay, treading our common earth with average mortal feet, and yet both alike discharging 'the common round, the daily task' with fidelity and capacity, passing through ordeal after ordeal unvanquished, meeting great crises with undaunted heart—who have stamped indelibly upon the mind of the race the conception of the highest duty noblest done.

"There is nothing after the Elizabethan era which compares with the Victorian age except perhaps the troubled glories of the Commonwealth. Elizabeth and Victoria will ever be the greatest names in our history, ranking side by side with Alfred, Edward the Third and Oliver Cromwell.

"Many a time and oft has the idea recurred in later years whether by some strange inversion of the Salic law our dynastic line could be made to pass only through female sovereigns.

"Queen Victoria is the central figure of the whole English speaking race, the supreme woman of our century."

By Mary Watts.

BECAUSE a little woman was sufficiently wise and true-hearted to become a builder of empire half a century ago German statesmen were greatly disconcerted when, at the beginning of the present war, England came forward as an active member of the allied forces.

If Queen Victoria had not been also the Empress of India, if she had not made fast the bond between Australia and British North America and the mother country, Germany would have been indifferent to the stand taken by England in the struggle that is now disrupting Europe.

If there were not Canada and Australia to feed England, if there were not India and British Columbia to send troops, what would it matter to the armies of Emperor William that Great Britain dared to defy them?

Queen Victoria stood with Sir John Macdonald and Lord Beaconsfield as the builder of the greatest empire that the world has ever known.

She was a strictly constitutional monarch, and throughout her long reign never deviated even by a hair's breadth from the line of conduct which lay well within her right.

Her influence, therefore, in solidifying the position of the crown and in welding together the empire in all the more remarkable. The Queen's career from the beginning to the end of her reign was a triumph of personality.

It is the influence of that personality, more than anything else, which sent the crack troops of India across two seas and a continent to fight side by side with London clerks and Scottish ploughmen. It is the tradition of "the Great White Mother" which Beaconsfield used so successfully in the Orient and Sir John Macdonald wielded so powerfully in the great north of our own continent that enabled the empire to survive even when a group of English statesmen had come to the conclusion that it would be much better for Great Britain if her colonies were to fall away and demand their independence.

"Under Victoria England has encompassed the world with innocent commonwealths," said William T. Stead.

"The chronicle of the Queen's reign is an unbroken record of imperial expansion. Of all the jewels in her diadem of empire she has lost only one, Heligoland."

When the young Queen came to the throne monarchy had ceased to be greatly admired in England.

It had come to be associated more or less with despotism, lax morals and undignified behavior.

Little that was good or kingly, much that was weak and ugly, was connected in the minds of the people with the preceding reigns.

In order that Queen Victoria should be able to exercise any influence whatever, therefore, it was necessary that she should first gain the respect of her lieges and that she should win from them a personal regard which would prove a much needed bulwark for the crown.

The Queen was eminently fitted by nature to achieve this task merely by living out her life according to natural inclination. Pure hearted, honorable, industrious and devoted to her duty both as a sovereign and a woman, she was able as the years went by to nullify to a certain extent the effect of the unhappy records of the previous reigns. She came soon to embody the national ideal of what a good woman and a good wife and mother should be. The personal equation has never counted more heavily in the history of the world. In the contemplation of the career of the good Queen the English people forgot the bad kings who had gone before her. The respect and love for the Queen personally came to constitute an asset for monarchy that in England provided an indestructible barrier to the democratic and liberal principles which in the comparatively early part of her reign flooded Europe and might have found England a very easy conquest if the head of the State had been an object of scorn or of derision.

Thus while the year 1848 shook so many Continental thrones, that of Great Britain scarcely felt the shock of the Continent wide upheaval of discontent with monarchical government. Paris, Vienna, Berlin, Madrid, Rome, Naples, Venice, Munich, Dresden and Budapest were all shaken by revolutions that year. But royalty was again in stanch favor with the people of Great Britain, and England became an asylum for the royal personages who were forced to flee from their own countries by the misfortunes of their governments.

The Queen was not beautiful, but she had much personal charm, a sweet and self-sacrificing nature and that womanliness which appeals more widely to men of all classes than even more brilliant qualities. From her earliest coming to the throne she had been an inspiration to her subjects. Men of the army and the navy, government officials of all classes and the public at large cherished a sentiment of tenderness for the young sovereign, who represented to them all that was sweetest and best in life. Kipling in one of his stories speaks of this feeling which existed among the officers of the Indian regiments, in which it was the custom for the officers to drink the glasses from which a toast to the Queen had been drunk, since no one else was worthy to be toasted from the same glass.

William IV., Queen Victoria's uncle, and her predecessor on the throne, had some vague conception of the relation in which his sweet and charming niece might stand to the people of Great Britain when she came to reign over them. He was fond of the girl and very often asserted that she would become a good woman and a good Queen. That she should ever rise to such heights of fame and occupy so exalted a place in the affections of her people as came later to be hers he probably never imagined. But in a slighter sense he realized how a pure hearted and devoted Queen might appeal to the hearts of her subjects.

"It will touch every sailor's heart to have a girl Queen to fight for," said the King when he realized that he was fast coming to his last hours. "They will tattoo her face on their arms, and I'll be bound they'll all think she was christened after Nelson's ship."

It was the personal popularity of the Queen which was the strongest bulwark of the crown in the Chartist movement which in 1840 was supposed to have found a tool in Edward Oxford, a tavern potboy, who sought to take the Queen's life while she and Prince Albert were driving up Constitution Hill in an open carriage. Oxford fired two pistols, but the bullets went wide of the mark. He was tried and acquitted on the ground of insanity, but his rooms were found to be filled with the literature of a society called "Young England." So impassioned did the demonstrations of loyalty for the Queen become after this episode that Sydney Smith, the English wit, declared that even the London street dogs barked "God save the Queen."

Having invested the crown in the minds of the people with the integrity of her own character so that it had come to be again surrounded with reverence, the Queen then came to the second phase of her building of empire.

The generation of her day, many of them at least, had brought the home government into disregard with the colonies by insisting that these dependencies and federated states owed allegiance to England as a sovereign state.

The colonials universally rejected this theory of government and insisted that they owed allegiance to the crown only, and not to England as a sovereign state. Modern historians are of the opinion that the insistence on the former theory of the land which outfitted the colonies to the mother country would have disrupted the empire.

The Queen and her favorite advisers set about making the crown the symbol of empire. It was tacitly admitted that the colonies owed allegiance only to the crown, and since the person of the sovereign was so much beloved the bonds which united the various parts of the empire soon became strong beyond possibility of severance. While the Queen played her part in the strengthening of the empire by standing as its embodied expression, Lord Beaconsfield, her favorite minister, made imperialism a reality for the nation through a political party and also advanced the interests of the empire in the Orient. Sir John Macdonald held the great North American territories to the crown as his part of the compact. It is interesting to note that British historians have set down the conviction that it was the combined power of the Queen and Macdonald at this point that kept Canada from acceding, with the probability of later joining the United States.

It was well for the empire that the Queen had been able to make for herself so strong a position in the hearts of the people of the colonies, for between 1860 and 1890 a number of the leading British statesmen arrived at the conclusion that it would be wisest to dismember the empire by pursuing a course of action which would goad the colonies into demanding their independence. These statesmen had come to believe that in the matter of markets for English goods and in all other ways it would be best for Great Britain to be free of her colonies. Conditions of trade were largely responsible for this point of view, as in certain instances special arrangements in regard to trade existed between the mother country and the colonies which seemed to some economists of the times to be a drag upon the home market.

The colonies by this time, however, had learned to disregard the Ministers and to consider the sovereign as of sole importance. What has since been called the fallacy of dismemberment was therefore entirely ineffective.

The name of Queen Victoria was one to conjure with throughout the world. The men who built up the empire in Australia, South Africa and British North America worshiped the Queen, whom some of them had never even seen, as they might some fair divinity who furnished them with an ideal for which to fight. In India the natives called Queen Victoria "The Great White Mother," and even in the most remote portions of the empire, where the name of the greatest British Minister or the Viceroy would have been received without recognition, that of the Queen was respected and loved.

The Queen became the Empress of India in 1876 by the passage of a bill introduced into Parliament by Disraeli. The bill was strongly opposed by those who conceived the title to be merely an empty bauble, designed solely for the pleasure of the sovereign. But there was a much bigger reason for the acquisition of the title. It was intended to impress the Indian princes and people with the suzerainty of the British crown. It was also a recognition of the sovereign's responsibility toward her great dependency. The effect of the adoption of the title upon the Indian subjects was immediately felt in their greater devotion and in greater unity. Some years later the influence of the Empress of India was still further to be noted in the voluntary raising and equipment of a native force to be maintained at the expense of the tributary States.

The newly created Empress left no stone unturned to impress upon her Indian subjects her interest in their welfare. That the "Kaiseri-hind" loved them and took a personal interest in their well being they were never left to doubt. The Queen endeared herself to her Indian subjects by studying the literature of the East, in which she was instructed by learned Indians. She learned Hindustani when she was seventy years old and she kept a diary in the Urd tongue. She kept many Indian servants about her and at all times continued until the end of her life to show a warm and never waning interest in her dark subjects.

In June, 1897, on the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee, the Queen had the opportunity of reviewing a procession which represented in magnificent fashion the imperial solidarity for the furtherance of which she had expended her influence for sixty years.

The Ministers of Great Britain seized the opportunity to make the occasion a festival for the British Empire.

In the Jubilee procession there were, in addition to the regiments of Englishmen, Irishmen, Scotchmen and Welshmen, Mounted Rifles from Victoria and New South Wales, from the Cape, from Natal and from Canada; Hausas from the Niger and the Gold Coast, colored men from the West Indian regiments, Zaptiehs from Cyprus, Chinese from Hong Kong, Dyaks from British North Borneo, Imperial Service troops sent by the native princes of India and detachments of Sikhs who, next to the brilliant Indian troops, received the most admiring applause from the spectators.

The Queen, greatly affected by the magnificent loyalty of the display, sent to her subjects throughout the world the message:—

"From my heart I thank my beloved people; may God bless them."

The Queen died January 22, 1901, having reigned sixty four years.

GREAT BATTLE OF TSU-SHIMA.

IN the armaments engaged and the fierceness of the fighting Tsu-shima has not been equalled in the authentic annals of the sea before the present war. According to Sir George Sydenham Clarke in his preface to Captain Lindsay's translation of "Tsu-shima," a book by Captain Semenoff, commander of the Russian war ship Suvaroff, the Russians had eight first class battle ships, the Japanese four; the Russians three coast defence armor clads, the Japanese none, the Japanese eight armored cruisers, the Russians three.

It was May 26 when the stately Russian vessels, wrapped in fog, approached the straits. Later in the morning a large body of vessels was sighted, steaming on a parallel course to the Russians. The Orel opened fire by mistake and the Japanese withdrew.

At the Admiral's order four Russian battle ships turned to starboard, as though to attack the enemy, and, then wheeling, formed in line ahead, parallel to the rest of the fleet and somewhat ahead of it. The Japanese withdrew from range, and at about half past one in the afternoon four more Russian ships joined the advance line to starboard.

The fleets were now in the wide eastern strait of Tsu-shima. At about a range of 9,500 yards the heavy Japanese vessels, with Togo in the Mikasa leading, steamed obliquely across the Russian bows and began a circling movement, which would enable the line to reverse the Russian bows, the ships being so spaced that the Russians would be under a converging fire.

The light cruisers, meanwhile, unknown to the Russians, were manoeuvring to attack from the rear.

To oppose the Japanese circling movement, Rojdestvensky swung to starboard and opened fire at 8,500 yards. With batteries silent, the grim vessels of Togo swept onward to 6,500 yards. There was a series of flashes from the sides and turrets of the Mikasa and the vessels near her and shells began to explode on the Suvaroff and the Oushakya.

The Japanese gunnery was unswerving. A heavy shell exploded against the conning tower of the Suvaroff, and Rojdestvensky staggered back, his skull so injured that he could not speak.

By now the Imperator Alexander III. and the Oushakya were in flames. A few minutes later three other ships of this division cheered off, wrapped in flames and black smoke.

Her steering gear carried away, the Suvaroff floundered about in the swells. While Japanese quick fires swept her decks, gallant squads fought the fire with buckets, practically all her steam pipes having been severed.

The Imperator Alexander III. had become the flagship and she led the Russians in a circle in an attempt to foil the Japanese and break through eventually to the north, but Togo followed in a parallel line until, as the Russians were pointing due south, he wheeled his ships in short half circles and was ready to cross the Russians' bows as they finally bore away to the north.

The Alexander was the next to drift out of line ablaze. The Borodino was now ahead, but as she tried to reform the Russian line one of the light cruiser squadrons appeared from the rear, commanded by Rear Admiral Dewa, who is now said to be attacking Kiaochau. This threw the Russians into a huddled mass and doubt as to the outcome of the battle was at an end.

Away to the west lay the Mikasaff, afire, the Admiral speechless with a fractured skull and Captain Ignatius blown to atoms. From her mast a tattered Russian naval flag still floated and as a group of Japanese destroyers darted out to finish her she fought them off with six quick firers which were still in commission.

Under the guns of enough Japanese vessels to blow her out of the water the Russian destroyer Buiny ran alongside and took off Rojdestvensky and a handful of survivors.

When night fell the Japanese battle ships withdrew and eighty torpedo boats and destroyers which had remained under cover all day were unleashed. The night roared with the explosions of the hunted Russian vessels. With no light showing they sped through the heavy seas, but the enemy were relentless in their pursuit.

The war ships then renewed their attack. A squadron of Japanese vessels asked the Sviethana to surrender, but Captain Behein and his officers decided to fight, though they had but 100 cartridges in the hold.

As the last shot was fired Captain Behein opened the sea cocks and the great vessel sank beneath the white crested waters. The fighting was fraught with similar acts of heroism on both sides and Togo showed his appreciation of Rojdestvensky's gallant conduct by refusing to receive his sword when the Russian Admiral was finally captured May 28.

Only two Russian destroyers, the Bravy and Grosny, and the cruiser Almaz reached Vladivostock after the battle of Tsu-shima, the greatest naval battle of all time, previous to the present war.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A KISS DEFERRED

By Nathaniel J. Cotton

THE long, cavernous depth of the floor of Sol Hemingway's barn was thickly hung with dim, flaring lanterns. Gigantic mows of sweet-smelling hay were lost in the dense gloom of the towering loft. Piled along the floor in big heaps was the corn to be husked.

Merry voices, shouts of laughter, snatches of songs and sprightly jokes broke on the clear, bracing October air, as under the mellow light of the moon a merry group of girls and boys and staid middle-aged farmers and their buxom wives trooped noisily into the big barn.

Climbing on to a pile of corn, Sol arrested the attention of the merry huskers by a loud shout, accompanied by windmill gyrations of the arms. "Hold yer gab thar a minit. 'Fore we pile inter this air corn I've got a sort of an innervation ter introduce. Fust thing all you gals that ain't married line up side of ther barn thar."

In a flutter of excitement and amid suppressed giggles and whispered comments, the fresh-cheeked, wholesome lassies of the countryside ranged themselves demurely in line as directed.

"Now, boys," continued Sol, taking off a tattered straw hat and dropping it on the corn before him, "cast yer vote fer the gal of yer chise. The one that gits the most votes is ter be queen of the evening, ter have the place of honor at the husking, lead the grand march at the hoe-down, and set at the head of the table at the spread. Move lively now, boys."

Amid the gibes and banter of the older people the lads furtively prepared and cast their votes, some with awkward diffidence, others with swaggering bravado, all more or less embarrassed by the titter of the girls and the raillery of the old folks.

In suppressed excitement the party watched Sol deliberately count the votes. This accomplished, Sol arose, stroked his whiskers, spat once and with proper solemnity began: "It seems from the vote that the wind blows puty much all one way. Miss Amy Dean, schoolmarm at No. 2, having a majority of all votes cast, is declared elected Queen of the Huskers. Bring the wreath, Mandy."

Bustling, buxom Mrs. Hemingway brought a wreath made of corn husks, and with pompous ceremony Sol placed it upon the dark hair of the pretty schoolmarm, and the boys promptly cheered until the old barn rang.

"Now, boys," broke in Sol, "the Queen's got ter have a King. You young fellers git over thar and git ter shucking corn. The one that shucks the most corn in ten minutes gits the job shucking corn with the Queen, leading the march to the hoe-down, and taking her ter supper. Git ready now, and when I say the word, hump yerselves."

Pulling an ancient watch from his pocket, Sol glued his eyes to the face an instant, with one hand uplifted; then it dropped, and he roared: "Hump yerselves, boys!"

Right and left the corn shucks fell as the nimble fingers of the expert lads stripped the coats from the shining yellow ears. Cheers and words of encouragement flew back and forth to the frantic huskers, who were bending their best efforts to win.

With bated breath Amy Dean watched the contest. It was all new to her. Fresh from high school, she was teaching her first school in a country district. Unconsciously she watched a big, broad-shouldered, smiling, good-natured young man, who husked with a certain sure deliberation, in striking contrast to the frantic haste of his rivals. As the piles grew in front of the huskers, she realized he was to be her king, and a thrill of pleasure tingled every nerve, as he looked up and she squarely met his smiling blue eyes.

"Time's up," snapped Sol, and closing the big watch he returned it to his pocket, while critically viewing the piles. "No need measuring," he decided. "Cliff Leighton's got more than a half bushel more corn than yew tother fellers. Mandy, another wreath. Come, Cliff, march up and take yer medicine, and git acquainted with ther puttiest schoolmarm in Coos County."

Blushing like a schoolgirl, big Cliff Leighton, with a certain awkward grace, came forward and was duly crowned.

"Now, King and Queen, take yer places at the head of the barn, and the rest of you pair off and git ter husking, and every red ear means a kiss."

In a few moments the barn was riotous with mirth. Red ears were plentiful, and scuffles and resounding smacks were heard in every direction.

Amy Dean and Cliff Leighton began husking in shy silence. He instructed her delicate, inexperienced fingers in the knack of stripping off the tough husks. Presently he found a red ear and lifted his eyes questioningly to hers. She smiled back, but her eyes conveyed no answer, and the ear dropped into the basket. She was unchallenged, and secretly she respected him for his delicacy. But the act was noticed, and a dozen voices shouted: "Kiss her, Cliff; you've got to."

He looked appealingly at her, and whispered: "It's the custom, and they'll josh us unmercifully if we don't comply."

"All right," she bravely replied, "but——," and she hesitated, "I'd rather not."

"Trust me," he whispered, and boldly drew her head toward him. She saw his handsome face coming nearer, closed her eyes and waited. There was an audible smack and a shout. It was all over. She looked at him in surprise; his lips had not touched hers. She smiled her thanks.

"How did you do it?" she whispered, when they had resumed their husking.

She liked him better and better. She realized the temptation, and a faint desire of her own, and marveled at his delicate chivalry.

The husking was speedily finished and the merry party trooped down to the big back kitchen for the dance. The room had been previously cleared of everything but some chairs around the room for spectators. The fiddlers, Lem Hoskins and Jake Weatherbee, occupying seats of honor at one end of the long room, began to scrape out a lively march, accompanied by a fan fan of thumping feet, led by Lem's number elevens.

Cliff Leighton and Amy Dean trod the mazes of the march in pure delight. She entered into the spirit of the occasion, and thrilled by the music, the novelty, and the big, handsome lad at her side, she glided along by his side in a dream. Dance after dance, good old-fashioned country dances, succeeded each other, and as Miss Dean did not dance, Cliff sat out many of them with her, and they grew sociable and quite confidential.

She told him of her school life and hopes in music, and he discussed with her his desire for better things, an advanced education, and an ambition along literary lines.

"I love the farm," he went on earnestly, "and would not leave it permanently. But I desire a higher education in conjunction, and most of all I want to succeed in literature. I feel it is in me." Then he went on to tell her of his modest literary success, and was pleased with her earnest sympathy and interest.

After, the bountiful harvest supper, finishing with the famous pumpkin pie, sweet cider and apples, put every one in good humor for the continuance of the dance. Yielding to the persistent entreaties of his admirers, Cliff executed a country clog dance with plump, pretty Kittie Sinclair. Amy watched Cliff and Kittie execute the intricate steps of the dance, and saw their flushed faces and eager animated eyes looking into each others and was conscious of a pang—a desire to dance as well as Kittie, with Cliff.

It was soon over and he was smiling down at her, and asking how she liked it. In the background she saw Kittie's eyes resting fondly on him, then drop to her with a glint of antagonism in them. She was treading on dangerous ground, and eagerly wondered how much there was between them.

The dance was prolonged until early morning. Soon after twelve, young men began to diffidently approach the girls of their choice and engage them in conversation. Speedily Amy learned the reason. Cliff approached and asked if he might see her to her boarding place.

"Why," she replied, "I came with Mr. Hoskins' people; they will expect me to return with them."

"Oh, no," he smiled; "it is customary for the young ladies to be escorted home. If you'd rather—" he began, but she broke in.

"Oh, no, I would be delighted."

Later, as they were departing, Amy met Kittie Sinclair's eyes on them, and the lurid light in them revealed the dangerous nature of the ground she was treading on. But she could not explain or withdraw if she would, so with an uncomfortable feeling she went out into the bright moon-lit night with Cliff.

The splendor of the night and the magnetic virility of the man beside her drove Kittie from her mind, and she lived in the present. Light-hearted and happy, she talked volubly, and he listened attentively, glad to be near a girl in so many ways approaching his ideal. They discussed their likes and dislikes, their hopes and desires; and presently she ventured naively: "Why didn't you kiss me when you found that red ear?"

"Something told me you would not like it," he quietly replied, "though it would have been one of the greatest pleasures of my life."

Innately she knew this was sincere, and was pleased. "I am sorry you didn't, then," she said, half contritely.

"Are you?" he quickly exclaimed.

"I think I am, and still I didn't want you to. It would have changed my opinion of you."

He paused and looked sober, nodding his head. "I understand. I think. We will call it a lost pleasure."

"Yes," she whispered, "I always thought a kiss too sacred to become common, to be given without the heart."

"You are right," he answered. "I should not have liked you as well if you had been perfectly willing."

That night Amy wondered how much Kittie Sinclair was to Cliff, and was troubled. The next day at school she found out for certain. Kittie bluntly told her that Cliff Leighton was her beau, and to leave him alone. Amy quietly ignored the girl and her aspersions, but trouble was brewing, and all through Kittie. The books were new to Amy and she soon had trouble with some mathematical problems for Kittie. Because she could not do them promptly, Kittie told her father, who was on the prudential committee, that she could not do them.

Cliff learned of the difficulty and did the problems for Amy. This put them on more intimate footing, and they saw much of each other. Kittie, fired by jealousy, kept at work upon her father, until he notified Amy that he had decided to dispense with her services. When Cliff heard of it and realized what it would mean to Amy to be turned out of her first school, he went to Mr. Sinclair and tried to reason with him. But Sinclair was a pompous, opinionated man, and flung up his help to Amy, which had leaked out some way. Then Cliff lost his temper.

"See here, Mr. Sinclair, perhaps you don't realize what it means for a young teacher to be turned out of her first school. We have always been good friends, but I don't mind telling you I am interested in Miss Dean, and if you turn her out of this school, on the slim excuse you have, I'll give you the darnedest licking you ever had." Mr. Sinclair took in the square outlines of this husky youngster, and noted the resolute light in his eyes, and decided he would keep Miss Dean.

It was several days before Amy learned of Cliff's championship, then her heart that she had been holding in restraint broke its leashes, and she fully realized she loved this big resolute lad, and she felt it was returned. It was hard to thank him, but she found courage one evening. "I want to thank you for interceding with Mr. Sinclair in my behalf."

"It's nothing," he lightly replied; "he decided to reconsider his decision under my recommendations." Then he tactfully changed the conversation to other matters.

Cliff might never have spoken if Billy Sinclair had not assumed a sudden interest in Amy. His attentions went to such a length that they were almost intolerable, but rather than make more trouble she meekly bore his importunities. The rupture came one night after school. Amy had stopped to do some school work, and Billy, finding her alone, attempted to kiss her. Fighting him with all her strength, she screamed loudly. Cliff, living by, heard the cry and sprang from his wagon to her assistance. Billy heard him coming and attempted to escape, but Cliff met him at the door and promptly proceeded to kick him across the school yard and into a sprawling heap in the road. Then he opened on him. "If I ever catch you insulting Miss Dean again, Billy Sinclair, I'll ridge your worthless carcase until it resembles a washboard."

Relieved of this warning Cliff strode back to the school house. Amy was in tears, and they were what made Cliff speak. Quickly he crossed the room to her side. "Don't cry, Miss Dean; it shall not happen again. Let me be your protector; you need someone."

She lifted her wet eyes to his, and there must have been more than gratitude in them, for he deliberately took her in his arms and said: "Dear heart, I did not mean to speak now, until I made a way for myself in the world; but you need me and I love you so dearly. May I hope?"

She nestled closer in his arms and lifted a shining face through the tears. "There is only you, Clifford, just you, and it will always be you to eternity," and shyly pulling his head down she placed her lips on his in the first kiss—the long deferred kiss they both had so ardently desired, and which now sealed their betrothal.

ENGLAND NOW; CONDITIONS IN WAR TIME

"England To-day; Conditions in War Time," is the timely theme on which H. J. Osborn, J.P., (just arrived from England), is to speak in St. John's School House on Wednesday night, Oct. 7. Everybody is welcome Questions are invited. There will be a collection.

This occasion should attract the attention and presence of all who desire better information of the conditions that attend a state of war in the central country of the empire. The press censorship induces so great reticence in the exercise of the voice of the press, that a viva voce and authoritative detail from a well informed and capable speaker will be deeply interesting. Fresh from England, Mr. Osborn has spoken with effect in Montreal, Ottawa and Kingston, and is very favourably reported in the press of these cities. Mr. Osborn comes Har Time," is the lively theme on Greenwood, the brilliant Canadian member of the British parliament, says: "H. J. Osborn has travelled widely and benefitted by his travels and experiences and is perfectly sound and well informed on the question of the day."

OUT THE POETRY.

City Man—It's all right to hear the leaves whisper, but I never could stand to hear the grass mown!

EASY TO DARKEN YOUR GREY HAIR

You Can Bring Back Colour and Lustre With Sage Tea and Sulphur

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is musty and troublesome. For 50 cents you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use tonic called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or safe brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all grey hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant. You will also discover dandruff is gone and hair has stopped falling.

Grey, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur and look years younger.

ENEMY HAS BIG FORCE

Von Kluk's Army on Extreme West Said to be Unwieldy on Account of Numbers.

ALLIES AT ARRAS NEXT

LONDON, Oct. 5.—The victory of French arms at Roye, where the tremendous assault of the Germans—their major effort of the Aisne campaign—has been completely defeated, is declared to be the deciding point in the twenty-three day battle. A great operation has been launched to hem in the German right in such a way that it cannot reach new defences in Belgium. Great forces are being rapidly concentrated by the allies in an effort to drive a wedge through the forces commanding the railway from Lille to Belgium. This effort is expected to develop in the neighborhood of Arras, where strenuous fighting has already taken place.

In addition to the steady hammering of the allied forces against the entire German right wing, the efforts of the Franco-British are bent directly on the line of German communications. These and these only have enabled Von Kluk to put up his magnificent resistance. By attempting a series of flanking operations, the allies may have delayed the success of their arms, but have saved thousands of lives that would have been thrown away in frontal attacks on the strong German positions. In order to make these flanking operations effective at once, huge reinforcements have come up on the extreme northern end of the allied line, and it is thought that the East Indians landed at Marseilles a few days since are by this time on the fighting line. They may be the deciding factor.

But the Germans are by no means short-handed. It is even reported from some quarters that their manoeuvres are handicapped by the presence of unwieldly masses.

To the east, in the Woevre region, the French advance goes ahead unremittingly. They are reported in command of positions which seriously menace German communications through Luxemburg, even threatening their main supply depot at Prinzville. It is felt that the steady and unsuccessful movement in that quarter indicates a weakness on the part of the exhausted German armies. The same factor has paralyzed operations on the centre of both armies.

The allied commanders are believed to be preparing for the greatest assault of the war near Arras, which will take the form of a frontal attack in tremendous force. On it hinges the result of the Aisne battle; the Germans have made a supreme effort at Roye and failed.

TO TURN ON POWER.

Hydro Commission's First Home-Made Current Begins To-morrow.

TORONTO, Oct. 5. — To-morrow will be recorded as a big day in the history of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, for it will mark the first venture into the actual production of power by a Government commission in the province. Sir Adam Beck will officially open the power plant and developing station at Wausdell Falls, and touch a button that will send light and power flashing into the first three of a string of municipalities in the surrounding district. On the same day inaugural ceremonies in connection with the new power facilities will be conducted by him in Cannington, Beaverton and Stouffville, the three towns which will begin at once to benefit by the commission program.

Arrangements are being made for mass meetings in the different municipalities in the new power zone, and Sir Adam will deliver addresses on Tuesday evening.

To Congratulate Troops.

BORDEAUX, Oct. 5. — President Poincare, Minister of War, Alexandre Millerand, and Premier Rene Viviani, have left for headquarters to personally congratulate the French troops on their gallant conduct of the way.

NOT DRUGS
Food Did It.

After using laxative and cathartic medicines from childhood a case of chronic constipation yielded to the scientific food, Grape-Nuts, in a few days.

"From early childhood I suffered with such terrible constipation that I had to use laxatives continuously going from one drug to another and suffering more or less all the time.

"A prominent physician whom I consulted told me the muscles of the digestive organs were weakened and could not perform their work without help of some kind, so I have tried at different times about every laxative and cathartic known, but found no help that was at all permanent. I had finally become discouraged and had given my case up as hopeless when I began to use the pre-digested food, Grape-Nuts.

"Although I had not expected this food to help my trouble, to my great surprise Grape-Nuts digested easily from the first and in a few days I was convinced that this was just what my system needed.

"The bowels performed their functions regularly and I am now completely and permanently cured of this awful trouble.

"Truly the power of scientific food must be unlimited." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Trial 10 days of Grape-Nuts, when regular food does not seem to sustain the body, works wonders. "There's a Reason."

GERMANS ROUTED IN PRUSSIA

Wounded Abandoned

PETROGRAD, Oct. 5.—The official communication from the general staff headquarters, issued last night, reads:

"The battle of Augustowo ended yesterday, Oct. 3, in a victory for the Russian arms. The German defeat is complete.

"The enemy is at this moment in a disordered retreat and in flight toward the East Prussian frontier. The valiant Russian troops are in close pursuit, the Germans abandoning in their desperate march trains, cannons and munitions, not having even time to gather up their wounded.

"It is already known that the battle of Augustowo, began on Sept. 29 with a bombardment by the German heavy artillery in the region of Sopotskin (on the left bank of the River Niemen), followed by an offensive movement by the enemy against the same fortified town.

"At the same time, the Germans made repeated efforts to crush and dislocate the Russian forces near Druskeniki on the Niemen.

"On Sept. 26 the Germans also began an attack on the fortresses of Ossowetz, but everywhere met with fierce resistence and were compelled to retreat. Not satisfied with counter attacks, our troops took the offensive vigorously and pursued the enemy. Notwithstanding the energetic resistance offered by the Germans, they could not check the onward rush of our troops, who captured the enemy's positions, one after another.

"Routed by this irresistible engagement, the Germans weakened and are at present in full retreat, they are leaving our territory in haste. At certain points this retreat is degenerating into a flight."

An official communique issued Saturday night said:

"Yesterday in the region of Augustowo the enemy developed an extremely obstinate defence in positions to the north of Lake Tligra. They made a desperate attack from Rachka and Borjimau, trying to seize the western exits from Augustowo forest. On the road to Ladzee and Shiplishka the first German cavalry division attempted to stop the advance of Russian squadrons. A desperate fight proceeded until darkness set in. The German cavalry recoiled and fell back in disorder with terrible losses before the Russian charge, sweeping back in general flight their own infantry supports. The Russians have occupied Raigrod, Kalkaria and Marjampol. Minor encounters have occurred in the region of Kielce.

"In the Carpathians the Russians have descended into the valley of the Nat Iag. An Austrian detachment was defeated at Migulitse and lost their guns and maxims in the fighting.

The military critic of Russky Slowo says that the German army assembled in Silesia includes two Bavarian corps and that the army is commanded by the King of Bavaria.

"The Russians now have to deal with a total of six armies," he says. "Two of these in East Prussia constitute the left flank, two in West Poland form the centre and two others are concentrating on the right wing in West Galicia.

"The Polish peasants in Kalisz, Russian Poland, are carrying on a guerrilla warfare, in which the Germans and the peasants hunt each other on the forest with the aid of snares and entanglements. No mercy is shown on either side."

TOO QUICK FOR VON KLUK.

Allies Are Mercilessly Cutting Off His Retreat to Belgium.

LONDON, Oct. 5. — The Daily News has the following from its correspondent, H. M. Tomlinson, dated in France, Saturday, Oct. 3: The violent and repeated attacks of the Prussians against the French line between Craonne and the Argonne were intended to mask a great and rapid German movement, which, aided by reinforcements from Germany, through Belgium, was meant to outflank the allies primarily, and, in any case, to secure the main German lines of communication and a broad road home. But the French were quicker; their wonderful railways prepared a shocking surprise for Von Kluk. The impregnable British position by Soissons was the hinge of this huge door, which was being shut against the exit of the German army, vainly at Noyon and at Roye the Germans have thrown their strength against this closing of the barrier, and they have been thrown back.

I cannot say that the German line through Valenciennes, Cambrai and St. Quintin has yet been cut, but if an official communication now announced it, it would not surprise me.

Wheat Flour Scarce.

THE HAGUE, Oct. 5.—(Via London.)—Owing to the general scarcity of wheat flour in Holland, and white bread is becoming a luxury, at Dordrecht, a town ten miles southeast of Rotterdam, the bakers have announced that beginning Monday, they will produce nothing but rye bread.

A despatch received here from Copenhagen states that upon representation of farmers the Danish Government has prohibited the exportation of all young horses.

"Pape's Diapepsin" ends stomach misery, indigestion in five minutes.

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of dizziness heartburn, fullness, nausea, bad taste in mouth and stomach headache, you can get blessed relief in five minutes.

Ask your pharmacist to show you the formula, plainly printed on these fifty-cent cases of Pape's Diapepsin then you will understand why dyspeptic troubles of all kinds must go and why they relieve sour, out-of-order stomachs or indigestion in five minutes. "Pape's Diapepsin" is harmless; tastes like candy, though each dose will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you eat; besides, it makes you go to the table with a healthy appetite; but what will please you most is that you will feel that your stomach and intestines are clean and fresh and you will not need to resort to laxatives or liver pills for biliousness or constipation.

This city will have many "Pape's Diapepsin" cranks, as some people will call them, but you will be enthusiastic about this splendid stomach preparation, too, if you ever take it for indigestion, gases, heartburn, sourness, dyspepcia, or any stomach misery.

Get some now, this minute, and rid yourself of stomach trouble and indigestion in five minutes.

FRENCHMEN SURPRISED.

British Soldiers Played Football to Ease Their Muscles.

FROM THE BATTLEFRONT, Oct. 5.—(Via Paris.) — After the determined attacks and counter-attacks of the past few days, there has been more or less calm along the western front since Saturday afternoon, except on the most extreme wing near Arras, where the fighting has continued incessantly.

The French soldiers were greatly surprised Saturday to see their British comrades after the long spell in the trenches retire to some distance in the rear and inflate several footballs and begin lively games. Some of the British battalions had lost a large proportion of their numbers in the severe battles of the last week, but the zest of the men for the sport was unabated. Two battalions engaged in a regular match, on the result of which some money changed hands. The players stripped off their tunics and caps, but retained their footgear, which was covered with thick layers of clay from the trenches.

Yesterday morning most of the units not actually advanced on the firing line attended open air religious service conducted by the army chaplains.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 4.—There was a natural reaction Saturday after the slump of Friday, and the spread that, in spite of there being "little export trade," several million bushels of grain have left Atlantic ports in as many days. Empress of Russia Leaves German Cruiser a Wreck on Beach.

SEATTLE, Wn., Oct. 5.—The Blue Funnel liner Talthybius, in port from the Orient, brings details of the pursuit of the German auxiliary cruiser Princess Alice, by the British auxiliary cruiser Empress of Russia, formerly a Canadian Pacific liner, off the Philippines early in September, as already cabled. The German vessel was bound for Tsingtau and was reported to carry $10,000,000 for the German officials there. She was sighted by the Empress and fled at once, pursued by the Britisher. The Empress carries four 6-inch guns and six 4.7-inch guns. The Alice had eight 6-inch guns. The Empress overhauled the German boat and a ranging fight followed. The German lost the top of her smoke-mast and had her mainmast cut off clean. The stern was torn away and several holes made in the hull. The Empress was unmarked.

The German ship to avoid capture or foundering headed for the island of Cebu and ran on the beach. The British vessel did not follow inside the three-mile limit. The loss of life was not learned.

If the men and women of Canada will buy nothing but "Canadian-Made" Goods from now to January First, every workman in Canada will be employed and the country will enjoy a period of prosperity hitherto undreamed of.

Canadian manufacturers are doing their duty under present stress in endeavoring to keep plants running and men employed regardless of profits.

Good Canadians will show enlightened patriotism, as well as sound business common sense, by buying only "Made in Canada" goods, thus building up their own prosperity and looking after those who remain at home.

And "Made in Canada" goods offer equal value with those made anywhere else in the world.

THE GERMANS HAVE FORCED THE ALLIES' LINE BACK AT SEVERAL POINTS BUT THE ADVANTAGE GAINED IS OF VERY LITTLE IMPORTANCE

DISTURBED THE MEETING

Sunday Night Drunk in Vicinity of License Inspector's Office Bungled Into Prayer Meeting.

IT COST HIM $5 TO-DAY

Samuel Young, charged with drunkenness in the Police Court this morning, bombarded the door of the Assembly Hall over the Market Square during the service last evening for which privilege he paid $5.

It was opined that Sam intended to make an after church call on a friend nearby, but mistook the door. In any case he manifested annoyance at being kept out; "He'd show them," he said. And when he gained admittance he refused to allow anyone either to enter or to leave. Hence he was escorted to the station for the evening.

Fake Canvasser is Under Arrest

Man Who Victimized Local People is Held by Police in Toronto.

TORONTO, Oct. 5.—Wanted by the police of several Ontario towns and cities, John McCrae, no home, was arrested Saturday afternoon at a football game in Trinity College grounds at the request of Thomas Wauchope, who alleged that McCrae had swindled him out of a dollar.

Detective Murray, who has held a warrant for the man's arrest, states that McCrae, by representing himself as a canvasser for a Detroit magazine, is alleged to have been travelling through Ontario and fraudulently obtaining orders for the publication. Last week the police say that they have received complaints from Kincardine, Galt, Preston and Berlin regarding the man.

McCrae will appear in the Police Court to-day, and will be held until the police can thoroughly investigate his movements.

McCrae also worked Peterborough and was given orders by a number of local people.

3,660,000 GERMANS ACTUALLY UNDER ARMS

Of These 960,000 Are in France and an Equal Number in the East.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—In Swiss military circles, according to a Central News despatch from Berne, it is estimated that Germany now has actually under arms twenty-seven army corps (1,080,000) of her regular troops and an equal number of reserves. Of these twenty-four army corps (960,000) are in France, six (240,000) in Belgium and Alsace, thirteen (520,000) in East Prussia and eleven (440,000) between Thorn and Cracow.

There are in addition, the despatch adds, what is assumed to be 1,400,000 men of the landsturm and volunteers serving in the interior, while 600,000 fresh recruits are reported to be in training sufficiently advanced for them to be ready for service in November.

German Spy Walks Calmly Before Firing Party To Die

PARIS, France, Oct. 5.—By courtesy from Battle Front—The scenes about here almost defy description. A priest has just led four men, caught pilfering from dead bodies on the battlefield to a place where they are to be shot. A huge German, a magnificent specimen of manhood, who came into the French lines as spy because his officers were desperately in need of information as to the position of French troops, has been arrested. How he ever expected to get his information back to his chiefs I cannot imagine. As I looked at him I realised how much more brave a spy must be than an ordinary soldier. I think he must have been resigned to a spy's death before he left the German lines because, when he was held up at a street corner, he looked over the heads of his captors as if he were only an onlooker. "He'll cuddle up at the foot of a stone wall pretty soon," said a soldier, and he did with several bullets in his courageous breast.

Germans Hurl New Forces At Allies' Right and Meet The British Reinforcements

Enemy Makes a Desperate Effort to Hold Their Position, Having Regard to the Effect a Retreat Will Produce on the Morale of the Army—Have Gained Slight Advantage at Some Points.

FIGHTING IS DESPERATE IN WEST FRANCE

LONDON, October 5.—There is no appreciable sign of let up in the ferocity of the fighting in the west of France. The Germans continue their desperate attempts to isolate the northern army of General D'Amade, and have forced the French to give way at several points on the battle line. It is declared by the military experts here, however, that this action in no way means any general retrogression by the French left. Simply at certain points the advanced line got into trouble and was withdrawn to the base trenches, where under the support of their heavy artillery the units can hold the Germans in check.

GERMANS FEEL THEY MUST HOLD POSITIONS

PARIS, October 5.—That the battle between the German right and the French left north of the Oise River, continues to increase in vigour, was admitted in the three o'clock official communication issued this afternoon. It was also stated in decisive terms that the outcome of this battle continues uncertain because of the fact that both sides are being constantly reinforced. Elsewhere along the long wavering battle line extending across France and along the Meuse into Alsace-Lorraine, it is said that the situation remains unchanged.

The complete text of the statement said,—"On our left wing north of the Oise the battle continues with the utmost violence, the enemy having again been heavily reinforced. The result of the action continues undecided. We have been compelled to give ground at certain points. Along the remainder of the battle line there has been no change in the situation. In Russia, in a battle which lasted six days, the German army which was operating between the East Prussian frontier and the Niemen River, has been defeated along its full line and forced to retreat abandoning large quantities of supplies. It has completely evacuated the governments of Suwalki and Lomza."

CHURCHES ARE OPPOSED TO A GARBAGE TAX

Declare That They Should Not Be Taxed, Especially For a Service They Do Not Receive

REMOVAL OF ASHES FAR TOO COSTLY

The churches of Peterborough are up in arms against a garbage tax levied on them. Churches in this country have never been assessed, but a new garbage act authorized municipalities to pass a by-law to levy on the community for sufficient money to meet the requirements of the garbage collection, and the act contains the declaration that all land shall be liable for this special tax regardless of all previous laws or enactments. The churches were not notified of any assessment and are now surprised to get demands upon them for services which have never been rendered. Garbage is not collected from any churches in Peterborough for the reason that the churches don't make garbage, save clean ashes from the furnaces, and these they have removed every spring at small expense. It is found now that the following assessments have been put on the churches at a one mill on the dollar assesment for garbage collection:

George St. Methodist	$ 84,000
St. Paul's	80,500
Murray St. Baptist	48,800
St. John's	44,000
Free Methodist	4,000
Salvation Army	11,800
St. Peter's	75,000
St. Andrew's	47,100
Knox	24,600
Charlotte St. Methodist	18,500
Total	$436,300

The Total taxe therefore is $436.80.

The churches are contending that this tax is unjust, unlawful and exorbitant. They all remove their ashes at a cost of about $60 a year, and are willing to continue to remove their ashes and garbage, if any, but do not want to pay $436 a year for work that has never been done.

Toronto has no garbage by-law. No such by-law is being enforced in some of the smaller cities, and other cities are contesting the legality of it, and propose following up their protest. More will be heard of this matter in the near future.

The Population Of Lindsay

According to Assessors' Returns is 7,672

According to Assessor Lindsay's figures, contained in his roll, which has been turned in at the Town Clerk's office, Lindsay's population is 7,672, an increase of 370 over last year (7,302). The assessment has jumped to $3,021,890, last year's assessment being $2,967,975.

The increase in the town's population is very satisfactory indeed, as it denotes a steady, healthy growth. It is especially gratifying in view of the fact that other large towns are reporting a decreased population.—Lindsay Post.

DOURO FUNERAL WAS A LONG ONE

The funeral of one of Otonabee's best known and highly respected citizens, in the person of Lewis McDonnell, took place on Saturday, October 3rd to the family burying ground in Douro cemetery. It was one of the largest funerals ever seen in the township. Mr. McDonnell leaves a widow and large family, consisting of five girls and four boys; also his six brothers and five sisters to mourn his loss.

Had Only One More Day On Blacklist But Boose Got Him

There are times when the vigilance of the police seems marvellous. On Saturday, for instance, one of them executed a hawk like swoop on a blacklister who, on the very last day of his period of "enlistment," slipped from the water-waggon for the alleged joys superinduced by booze. On October 4th, 1913, Michael Murphy's name was added to the rather lengthy list of "Indians." On Saturday, October 3rd, 1914, he flirted with chance and the cops and they got him. In Police Court this morning he was charged with being intoxicated while on the prohibited list. He was remanded until Thursday.

Czar Has Called Out His Reserves to Speed Up the Onward March to Berlin

Russians Have Taken the Heights Around Premsyzl and Fall of the Stronghold is Imminent—Czar's Forces Protect Themselves Against Possible Hungarian Flank Attacks on the Russian March to Berlin—Successes Continue.

SAYS PORTUGAL HAS BEEN INVITED

PETROGRAD, OCTOBER 5.—CZAR NICHOLAS HAS CALLED OUT ALL HIS RESERVES AND TERRITORIALS TO AID HIS REGULARS IN THEIR MARCH TO BERLIN

FALL OF PREMEZYL IS IMMINENT

PETROGRAD, Oct. 5. — The heights surrounding Premezyl have been taken by the Russians and the early fall of this stronghold is imminent.

RUSSIANS PROTECTED AGAINST HUNGARY

ROME, October 5.—The Cossacks who have seized the passes of the Carpathian Mountains, are now moving south, and have occupied Hosszumezo. They also cut the railway line at Cziget; this is along a great portion of Hungary. The invasion of Hungary is first of all to prevent any flanking attack by Hungarian troops in the Russian march to Berlin and generally to interfere with Hungarian mobilization and instruction of troops by providing an ever present menace.

SAYS BRITAIN HAS ASKED PORTUGAL

BERLIN, October 5.—It is stated here that Great Britain has asked Portugal to forsake her neutrality, and send an army to aid the allies in France.

BERLIN, via The Hague, October 5.—The Germans are gaining decisibely in the fighting in France which involves the right wing of the army, according to an official statement this afternoon. The flanking operations essayed by the allies have been checked and at several points along the line on the west the Germans have pierced the French columns and have driven them from their trenches. The fighting, it is stated, continuues with the utmost ferocity, and both sides are losing heavily.

VON KLUCK'S POSITION PRECARIOUS

LONDON, October 5.—The Daily Mail's correspondent in France reports fighting in and around Douai, in the Department of Nord, 18 miles south of Lille, and military experts here say that if the French have reached that point in force, General Von Kluck's position must be desperate. It is considered certain that Von Kluck has had all the reinforcements that the Germans can spare him from any point. There are many evidences from German prisoners, from French officers and from members of the Irish transport service just from the front, that the enemy is much demoralized. German outposts surrender without a fight when surprised by our patrols. They appear to be very much disheartened.

GIFT OATS TO BE CARRIED FREE

OTTAWA, October 5.—Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, has made arrangements whereby the Government will pay the cost of transportation on all small contributions of oats, etc., given by Canadian farmers to the War Office. These gifts have been made more particularly by the farmers of Ontario, and the Government has been advised that they are very much appreciated by the Imperial authorities.

MILLION MEN LOST TO DATE

During the First Six Weeks of the War France Lost 310,000 and Germans 500,000.

THE AISNE ALSO DEADLY

NEW YORK, Oct. 4—A letter received by a New York physician from a reputable source in France contains the startling information that the French losses (killed, wounded and prisoners for the six weeks' fighting) up to and including the Battle of the Marne, were slightly over 300,000, perhaps 310,000, exclusive of the English losses, which, the writer says, "have been fairly large in comparison to the small number of their engaged army."

YOUNG ARMOUR AS LABOURER IN MEAT FACTORY

CHICAGO, Oct. 5.—They put on a new "hand" at the stockyards the other day. THE GERMANS HAVE FORCED THE ALLIES' LINE BACK AT SEVERAL POINTS BUT THE ADVANTAGE GAINED IS OF VERY LITTLE IMPORTANCE

DISTURBED THE MEETING

Sunday Night Drunk in Vicinity of License Inspector's Office Bungled Into Prayer Meeting.

IT COST HIM $5 TO-DAY

Samuel Young, charged with drunkenness in the Police Court this morning, bombarded the door of the Assembly Hall over the Market Square during the service last evening for which privilege he paid $5.

It was opined that Sam intended to make an after church call on a friend nearby, but mistook the door. In any case he manifested annoyance at being kept out; "He'd show them," he said. And when he gained admittance he refused to allow anyone either to enter or to leave. Hence he was escorted to the station for the evening.

Fake Canvasser is Under Arrest

Man Who Victimized Local People is Held by Police in Toronto.

TORONTO, Oct. 5.—Wanted by the police of several Ontario towns and cities, John McCrae, no home, was arrested Saturday afternoon at a football game in Trinity College grounds at the request of Thomas Wauchope, who alleged that McCrae had swindled him out of a dollar.

Detective Murray, who has held a warrant for the man's arrest, states that McCrae, by representing himself as a canvasser for a Detroit magazine, is alleged to have been travelling through Ontario and fraudulently obtaining orders for the publication. Last week the police say that they have received complaints from Kincardine, Galt, Preston and Berlin regarding the man.

McCrae will appear in the Police Court to-day, and will be held until the police can thoroughly investigate his movements.

McCrae also worked Peterborough and was given orders by a number of local people.

WILL GIVE A TALK ON "A TRIP TO VALCARTIER"

At the Murray Street Church tonight at 8 o'clock Mr. T. F. Matthews will give an illustrated talk on "A Trip to Valcartier." Everybody is invited to attend. As everyone has been interested in the greatest military camp ever assembled in Canada, no doubt there are many who are anxious to hear about and witness pictures from one who was there. There is no admission fee.

3,660,000 GERMANS ACTUALLY UNDER ARMS

Of These 960,000 Are in France and an Equal Number in the East.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—In Swiss military circles, according to a Central News despatch from Berne, it is estimated that Germany now has actually under arms twenty-seven army corps (1,080,000) of her regular troops and an equal number of reserves. Of these twenty-four army corps (960,000) are in France, six (240,000) in Belgium and Alsace, thirteen (520,000) in East Prussia and eleven (440,000) between Thorn and Cracow.

There are in addition, the despatch adds, what is assumed to be 1,500,000 men of the landsturm and volunteers serving in the interior, while 800,000 fresh recruits are reported to be in training sufficiently advanced for them to be ready for service in November.

German Spy Walks Calmly Before Firing Party To Die

PARIS, France, Oct. 5.—By courtesy from Battle Front—The scenes about here almost defy description. A priest has just led four men, caught pilfering from dead bodies on the battlefield to a place where they are to be shot. A huge German, a magnificent specimen of manhood, who came into the French lines as spy because his officers were desperately in need of information as to the position of French troops, has been arrested. How he ever expected to get his information back to his chiefs I cannot imagine. As I looked at him I realized how much more brave a spy must be than an ordinary soldier. I think he must have been resigned to a spy's death before he left the German lines because, when he was held up at a street corner, he looked over the heads of his captors as if he were only an onlooker. "He'll cuddle up at the foot of a stone wall pretty soon," said a soldier, and he did with several bullets in his courageous breast.

Germans Hurl New Forces At Allies' Right and Meet The British Reinforcements

Enemy Makes a Desperate Effort to Hold Their Position, Having Regard to End Effect a Retreat Will Produce on the Morale of the Army—Have Gained Slight Advantage at Some Points.

FIGHTING IS DESPERATE IN WEST FRANCE

LONDON, October 5.—There is no appreciable sign of let up in the ferocity of the fighting in the west of France. The Germans continue their desperate attempts to isolate the northern army of General D'Amade, and have forced the French to give way at several points on the battle line. It is declared by the military experts here, however, that this action in no way means any general retrogression by the French left. Simply at certain points the advanced line got into trouble and was withdrawn to the base trenches, where under the support of their heavy artillery the units can hold the Germans in check.

GERMANS FEEL THEY MUST HOLD POSITIONS

PARIS, October 5.—That the battle between the German right and the French left north of the Oise River, continues to increase in vigour, was admitted in the three o'clock official communication issued this afternoon. It was also stated in decisive terms that the outcome of this battle continues uncertain because of the fact that both sides are being constantly reinforced. Elsewhere along the long wavering battle line extending across France and along the Meuse into Alsace-Lorraine, it is said that the situation remains unchanged.

The complete text of the statement said,—"On our left wing north of the Oise the battle continues with the utmost violence, the enemy having again been heavily reinforced. The result of the action continues undecided. We have been compelled to give ground at certain points. Along the remainder of the battle line there has been no change in the situation. In Russia, in a battle which lasted six days, the German army which was operating between the East Prussian frontier and the Niemen River, has been defeated along its full line and forced to retreat abandoning large quantities of supplies. It has completely evacuated the governments of Suwalki and Lomza."

CHURCHES ARE OPPOSED TO A GARBAGE TAX

Declare That They Should Not Be Taxed, Especially For a Service They Do Not Receive

REMOVAL OF ASHES FAR TOO COSTLY

The churches of Peterborough are up in arms against a garbage tax levied on them. Churches in this country have never been assessed, but a new garbage act authorized municipalities to pass a by-law to levy on the community for sufficient money to meet the requirements of the garbage collection, and the act contains the declaration that all land shall be liable for this special tax regardless of all previous laws or enactments. The churches were not notified of any assessment and are now surprised to get demands upon them for services which have never been rendered. Garbage is not collected from any churches in Peterborough for the reason that the churches don't make garbage, save clean ashes from the furnaces, and these they have removed every spring at small expense. It is found now that the following assessments have been put on the churches at a one mill on the dollar assesment for garbage collection:

George St. Methodist	$ 84,000
St. Paul's	80,500
Murray St. Baptist	42,500
St. John's	44,000
Free Methodist	4,000
Salvation Army	11,800
St. Peter's	75,000
St. Andrew's	47,100
Knox	24,600
Charlotte St. Methodist	16,500
Total	$426,300

The Total taxe therefore is $426.30.

The churches are contending that this tax is unjust, unlawful and exorbitant. They all remove their ashes at a cost of about $60 a year, and are willing to continue to remove their ashes and garbage, if any, but do not want to pay $426 a year for work that has never been done.

Toronto has no garbage by-law. No such by-law is being enforced in some of the smaller cities, and other cities are contesting the legality of it, and propose following up their protest. More will be heard of this matter in the near future.

The Population Of Lindsay

According to Assessors' Returns is 7,672

According to Assessor Lindsay's figures, contained in his roll, which has been turned in at the Town Clerk's office, Lindsay's population is 7,672, an increase of 370 over last year (7,302). The assessment has jumped to $3,021,890, last year's assessment being $2,987,975.

The increase in the town's population is very satisfactory indeed, as it denotes a steady, healthy growth. It is especially gratifying in view of the fact that other large towns are reporting a decreased population.—Lindsay Post.

The members of the Tennis Club intending to enter the tournament are asked to hand in their names to the secretary.

DOURO FUNERAL WAS A LONG ONE

The funeral of one of Otonabee's best known and highly respected citizens, in the person of Lewis McDonnell, took place on Saturday, October 3rd to the family burying ground in Douro cemetery. It was one of the largest funerals ever seen in the township. Mr. McDonnell leaves a widow and large family, consisting of five girls and four boys; also his six brothers and five sisters to mourn his loss.

Had Only One More Day On Blacklist But Boose Got Him

There are times when the vigilance of the police seems marvellous. On Saturday, for instance, one of them executed a hawk like swoop on a blacklister who, on the very last day of his period of "enlistment," slipped from the water-waggon for the alleged joys superinduced by booze. On October 4th, 1913, Michael Murphy's name was added to the rather lengthy list of "Indians." On Saturday, October 3rd, 1914, he flirted with chance and the cops and they got him. In Police Court this morning he was charged with being intoxicated while on the prohibited list. He was remanded until Thursday.

Czar Has Called Out His Reserves to Speed Up the Onward March to Berlin

Russians Have Taken the Heights Around Premsyzl and Fall of the Stronghold is Imminent—Czar's Forces Protect Themselves Against Possible Hungarian Flank Attacks on the Russian March to Berlin—Successes Continue.

PETROGRAD, OCTOBER 5.—CZAR NICHOLAS HAS CALLED OUT ALL HIS RESERVES AND TERRITORIALS TO AID HIS REGULARS IN THEIR MARCH TO BERLIN

FALL OF PREMEZYL IS IMMINENT

PETROGRAD, Oct. 5. — The heights surrounding Premesyl have been taken by the Russians and the early fall of this stronghold is imminent.

RUSSIANS PROTECTED AGAINST HUNGARY

ROME, October 5.—The Cossacks who have seized the passes of the Carpathian Mountains, are now moving south, and have occupied Hosszumezo. They also cut the railway line at Oziget; this is along a great portion of Hungary. The invasion of Hungary is first of all to prevent any flanking attack by Hungarian troops in the Russian march to Berlin and generally to interfere with Hungarian mobilization and instruction of troops by providing an ever present menace.

SAYS BRITAIN HAS ASKED PORTUGAL

BERLIN, October 5.—It is stated here that Great Britain has asked Portugal to forsake her neutrality, and send an army to aid the allies in France.

BERLIN, via The Hague, October 5.—The Germans are gaining decisively in the fighting in France which involves the right wing of the army, according to an official statement this afternoon. The flanking operations essayed by the allies have been checked and at several points along the line on the west the Germans have pierced the French columns and have driven them from their trenches. The fighting, it is stated, continuues with the utmost ferocity, and both sides are losing heavily.

VON KLUCK'S POSITION PRECARIOUS

LONDON, October 5.—The Daily Mail's correspondent in France reports fighting in and around Douai, in the Department of Nord, 18 miles south of Lille, and military experts here say that if the French have reached that point in force, General Von Kluck's position must be desperate. It is considered certain that Von Kluck has had all the reinforcements that the Germans can spare him from any point. There are many evidences from German prisoners, from French officers and from members of the Irish transport service just from the front, that the enemy is much demoralized. German outposts surrender without a fight when surprised by our patrols. They appear to be very much disheartened.

GIFT OATS TO BE CARRIED FREE

OTTAWA, October 5.—Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, has made arrangements whereby the Government will pay the cost of transportation on all small contributions of oats, etc., given by Canadian farmers to the War Office. These gifts have been made more particularly by the farmers of Ontario, and the Government has been advised that they are very much appreciated by the Imperial authorities.

MILLION MEN LOST TO DATE

During the First Six Weeks of the War France Lost 310,000 and Germans 500,000.

THE AISNE ALSO DEADLY

NEW YORK, Oct. 4—A letter received by a New York physician from a reputable source in France contains the startling information that the French losses (killed, wounded and prisoners for the six weeks' fighting) up to and including the Battle of the Marne, were slightly over 300,000, perhaps 310,000, exclusive of the English losses, which, the writer says, "have been fairly large in comparison to the small number of their engaged army."

AUTOCRACY AND DEMOCRACY.

A great many fearful persons who attach more importace to names than to principles, seem to have doubts of the consistency of Russia being an ally of Britain in a fight for the interests of democracy and humanity. All roads lead to Rome, and a road should not be discarded because it is unexpectedly encountered so long as it leads to the goal. We may distrustfully regard Russia as an ally: we may, by loose thinking, conclude that there is little beneficent relation between autocracy and the aims of democracy. But Russia, autocratic as she is held to be, is already giving us pleasant surprises. At the outbreak of the war, her alliance with free democratic powers like England and France, so modified her attitude that she promised Poland self-government as the price of her cooperation of vodka, the national strong Now Russia is showing the way in reform to the best of the nations. Russia, recognizing the curse of strong drink, its malign influence upon the people and upon armies, is proclaiming and enforcing prohibition of vodka, the national strong drink. This decree is justified as a war measure, but it has been supplemented by another proclamation that indicates that prohibition is to be made a principle of the Czar's Government. So remarkable has been the good effect of the edict preventing the sale of vodka that public opinion will sustain the government in raising by other forms of taxation, the revenue necessarily wiped out by forbidding the sale of vodka. The Russian people, whom we have been inclined to pity as the victims of the exercise of autocratic power, are to be benefitted by it. Thanks to her autocracy, she can enforce prohibition, aided by the circumstance of the liquor business being a government monopoly. Thus Russia is accomplishing, with one stroke of autocratic power, what other countries have for generations been seeking to accomplish by persuasion, argument, prayers and appeal to the popular conscience. These appeals have been made in countries where the public spirit has been supersaturated by democracy—and in vain—perhaps, because the popular spirit has been diluted and weakened by excess of democracy. There are times when club law, wisely exercised, is better, more direct, and more effective, than law founded upon democracy. Democracy is so confoundedly democratic, so self-assertive of its liberty of action and opinion that it seems everlastingly unable to make up its mind; so that precipitation of opinion and sentiment to the point of effectiveness of action is an endless process. The benign tyrant who wants a reform in the interest of the people, decrees it, and the thing is done. The sovereign people squabble, discuss, dispute and waste precious time in—doing nothing. A Russian club in the hands of a Russian autocrat, in the case of Russian prohibition, is far more beneficent in its action than the "Canadian club" that a halting, hesitating, irresolute, and party-blinded democracy permits to be wielded upon the manhood of Ontario. If all the nations concerned in this war could take the step and do the good that 'tyrant Russia' is doing by decreeing and enforcing the prohibition of strong drink, all loss of life, human suffering, destruction of property and commercial blight produced by war would be compensated many times over by the removal, through prohibition of the liquor traffic, of the widespread wastage, human and material, the suffering and moral degradation, represented by the existence and retention of the liquor traffic.

"WHY BORROW NEW TROUBLES?"

Under this heading the Toronto World has the following sensible and timely article:

Surely there is no foundation for the rumours and talk that the Ottawa Government intend dissolving parliament and making an appeal to the country. Surely we have enough of troubles on hand without unnecessarily adding to them that of party rancour.

Canada has thrown in her lot with the empire and has declared to all the world that we are in it to the finish.

That being so—and we believe that was the only patriotic thing to do—would it not besuicidal to destroy the unanimity of the people and of the public men by injecting into the situation all of the old contentions, bickerings and partisan struggles of the naval aid period and to keep the country on a turmoil for three months and to destroy from that time forward all hopes of keeping the people united in their devotion to the empire.

All our energies, the energies of all our public men and of the people should now be consecrated to the one thing, that of saving our empire, our political freedom, our commercial future, the welfare of our country, our nationality. Could there ever be another contingent after such a disruption as a political struggle, on the slump that must be based on recrimination, on charges of disloyalty, of inefficiency in office? It would put us out of all standing as a nation that had instincts of British democracy. We must keep united at all cost and parliament should meet and vote further supplies for continuing our contributions of men and other aid till our arms are victorious, or until we go down with flying colours before the assaults of the most brutal despotism ever known in the history of the world and which now threatens all our civilization.

Let us cease talking of elections. Let us organize another and still another contingent and let parliament fulfill its duties. The mother country has set us all an example of forgetting all party disputes and contentions in the face of supreme danger.

And not only parliament but the government must give us undivided attention to keeping up our end in the fighting line. But we must also deal with the great problem of unemployment and the check that has come to all our business industries, our employments because of the war. Parliament must deal with the financial stringency, with the banking situation, we must encourage and help our farmers to increase their production.

We believe there are men who are canvassing this idea of throwing the people into such a turmoil as we dread: we trust that it will forthwith be made abundantly clear that the government at Ottawa have no such policy in hand no matter what individuals may seek for mere party reasons. All are for the state and nothing else.

The World is a staunchly Conservative journal, is loyal to its party; but it is outspokenly loyal. While it may be partizan it is not blind. It does not subordinate national and imperial interests to the promotion of ephemeral party success. This is a time for party and party interest to be still and small. This is a time when the words of Maucaulay should literally apply—

> Then none were for a party;
> Then all were for the state,
> Then the great man loved the poor
> And the poor man loved the great.

We are called upon, in this crisis to, and do, sacrifice our means, our personal interests, and our relatives, our sons and brothers, to the common cause; and certainly we might sacrifice our party interests. For the sake of this duty, for the sake of the Empire and our country, our parties have made an entente cordiale; they forgot party in Parliament, and united as one body of patriotic men to provide that Canada do its duty. Now while the stress is still on to propose a general election would be about as sensible as a man organizing a dinner party while his house was on fire. We should be patriots first; and only revert to the littlenesses of party conflict, when we have no higher duty to demand our undivided attention.

ELECTION NOT WANTED.

Those who have started the talk of a general election in Canada are poor imitations of good citizens. Those who are spreading the talk as as bad. Those who support it are worse. The British Empire is engaged in the greatest struggle of its history, and the first in which the concentrated labour, energy and sacrifice of its units have been needed. To make political capital of the situation is nasty work. If certain members of the Dominion cabinet want a general election, they should recognize, first, that the people of Canada do not want one. Our citizens could not be enthusiastic in a political fight at home, when such a war rages abroad. About the causes, justice and stakes of that war, all Liberals and Conservatives in Canada are agreed. We may well be content with the leadership of Borden and the loyal assistance of Laurier. There is no need whatever to celebrate the government's policy with a general election. Whichever party had been in power, the same policy would have prevailed in this time of crisis. —Monetary Times.

Machine Manipulation of Ontario Government

The people of Ontario, in all the opportunities and priivleges of their everyday life, have more at stake in the leadership and capacity of their Provincial Government, and especially in the quality and power of the Provincial Premier, than they have either in the Government of the Dominion or in the Government of the Empire. All that goes to make life free and happy and strong in the municipal area, in civil rights and property, in protecting public health, promoting public education and administering public justice, and in that large new realm of social progress and industrial reform now kept in the forefront in Britain—all that is within the purview and responsibility of the Legislature and Government of the Province. And in all that the Provincial Premier must be an intelligent and aggressive leader if the Government itself is not to be a clog and burden on the growing life of the people. For this reason the Globe regards the choice of a new Prime Minister and the incoming of a new Administration quite the most important question of public interest for all citizens of Ontario to-day. The ability of this Province to bear its full share of the loss and the load of war, to recover from the damage this war must incur, and to resist one of the evils in self-government and public education which this war has discovered to all the world in the system of Germany, all depend to a degree on the democratic ideals, the clearness of vision, and the power of practical leadership of the Hon. W. H. Hearst.

For years the Globe has contended that the Government of the Provinces is far more an affair of statesmanship in business than of the political principles and programmes which divide parties in the Federal arena. Ontario to-day requires the true spirit of social democracy and the devotion to the rights and needs of the average man represented in Lloyd George, as surely as in the wider field and in the higher politics the Dominion requires the sanity, steadiness and democratic idealism represented by Edward Grey.

One thing is certain, this Administration is a new beginning. What is called the "Whitney tradition" may be asserted either as a standard to inspire effort or as a cloak to hide incapacity and wrongdoing. In reality it will count for little that is worth while. No government can pose long in the garb of its predecessor. No strong Government will put on its predecessor's armour. This is the Hearst Government. It must set up a Hearst standard and create a Hearst tradition.

Quite plainly, as is openly admitted both within and without Government circles, the calling of Mr. Hearst is a public humiliation for Hon. W. J. Hanna. Unquestionably the strongest man in the Whitney Cabinet—in brain power, indeed, the only man whose grip and ability ever impressed either the Legislature or the public—Mr. Hanna, two years ago, was by common consent the inevitable successor of Sir James Whitney. The pretence that he "declined" the offer is only one way of expressing the fact that, for some reason, he should not get the office. It may be that the damage done to his public reputation by what is associated with the "Taylor charges," and with the equally notorious "Snider matters," weakened his name as a political rallying cry. It may be, too, that his very strength of will made him unacceptable to forces outside the Government desirous of dictating the policy and directing the activities of the new Government. In any case it is a very serious humiliation to him to be asked to serve under a junior member, an inferior in politics, and one rather unhopeful in leadership. All who know Mr. Hanna's ability will regret any necessity for his rejection at a time when ability and trained intelligence are in sore demand.

To be sure, Sir Adam Beck has long been named for the Premiership by some who championed the cause of public ownership. Those who knew the situation during the past half-dozen years know right well that within the Government Sir James Whitney alone gave strength to the Beck Hydro-electric policy. Except as Premier with a sympathetic Cabinet, Sir Adam would be hampered and handicapped. Out of the material remaining he could not have organized a Government in sympathy with progressive social and industrial legislation. His absence from the new Administration is significant of a change of attitude which does not augur well for public interests in the management of public utilities.

That augury of reaction is confirmed by such organs of Conservative opinion as exercise independent thought and free expression. The World and the Telegram only declare what is the general judgment, that in this whole reorganization Federal influence dominated. That interference is not from Sir Robert Borden. It is Hon. Frank Cochrane in Ontario, as it is Hon. Robert Rogers in Manitoba. In both cases it is for the lowest ends of organized machine politics. Under such domination from Ottawa Sir Adam Beck knows what to expect. He had to fight the Cochrane sinister influence, distinctly a "private corporation" influence, in former years within the Whitney Cabinet. To fight it again from its present Ottawa vantage-ground without Sir James Whitney's help meant foredoomed defeat. In a Hearst Government under the Cochrane domination the Bank policy has no chance.

Mr. Hearst begins his race both heavily-weighted and hamstrung. At best only negative virtues are expected in his Premiership. Even these are counteracted by things like the "Dunlop timber purchase job," and are utterly spoiled by the Cochrane shadow. As a public-service administrator Hon. Frank Cochrane, alike in Toronto and in Ottawa, has no worthy achievement to his credit. To his discredit—and Ontario is not at likely to forget it—he has the political treason involved in bringing into this Province in 1911 Mr. Henri Bourassa to denounce in any and every form Canada's share in naval defence. Bourassa's violent anti-British Nationalism can be understood, but that Mr. Cochrane should endorse his programme, bring its exponent to Ontario to proclaim it, pay the expenses of that anti-British campaign, and recognize the Bourassa pledges exacted from the Conservative candidates for election to the Federal Parliament—that is conduct more traitorous than anything of which the French-Canadian Nationalist has been guilty. To have Mr. Cochrane's shadow haunt Mr. Hearst's Premiership—no wonder self-respecting Conservative journals make protest against what they plainly call a "putty" Premier with Hon. Frank Cochrane as political Boss. How long will Ontario Conservatives endure it? —Globe.

OLD COUNTRY POTATOES LARGE

Mr. J. Williams, market gardener, who has been furnishing The Examiner with samples of large potatoes, left the following clipping from a Wiltshire, (Eng.) paper which sets his potatoes away in the shade:

More Large Potatoes.

Supt. Buchanan, the chief of the Amesbury police division, has recently dug a large potato in his allotment which adjoins the police station. It scaled 2 3-4 lbs. bumping weight.

Mr. S. Kimber, of the Market Place, Salisbury, has received a monster potato grown by Mr. Vincent, of Bodenham. It weighed 3 lbs. 4 ozs. when unearthed.

Mr. J. Watson, Holly Cottage, Newton street, Looe, writes: Having noticed in your paper the growing of different people's potatoes I thought these few lines would be interesting. I myself have grown two lots of potatoes in the same piece of ground this season. The first lot of potatoes was put in on the 1st March and dug out the first week in June. The second lot of potatoes was planted the 24th June and I commenced digging the 19th September. Both crops were bountiful. I am still digging at the present.

While digging some potatoes in his garden at Breydon Bloomfield Road, Bath, Mr. Hedley Coe unearthed some tubers of wondrous size. One root bore three potatoes, the total weight of which was five and a half pounds, one of them weighing two pounds four and a half ounces.

The Big Potato Season.

Mr. H. Smith, Little Cheverell, Devizes, writes: Much comment has been made in your valued paper re large potatoes of late. I should be glad if you would state in your next issue that a single potato grown by Mr. Nosworthy, the Manor Farm, Little Cheverell, was found when dug to weigh within 1 oz. of 4 lbs., namely, 3 lbs. 15 oz.

Mr. George Smith, Steeple Ashton, writes: Re heavy potatoes, still they come! My son, writing from Chilton Gardens, Hungerford (head gardener, Mr. Beckett), says that when the Up-to-date variety of potatoes were lifted they had quite a large number weighing 2 1-2 lbs. and one weighed 3 lbs. 2 ozs., so that you see your paragraphs in the Wiltshire Times respecting heavy potatoes are read with interest, and I don't think we can claim to have all the heaviest potatoes here in Wiltshire.

Another statement to hand is that a potato turning the scale at 5 lbs. 11 oz. has been unearthed in the garden of Tetworth Hall, Cambridge.

THE KAISER'S THREAT.

God of the Germans, I am grieved
(Forgive Me if I'm blunt),
To say that I have just received
Some bad news from the Front.
My Armies, which I thought would be
In Paris days ago,
Are cheated of their victory
And flee before the foe!

The British Force, which I felt sure
Would be wiped out by now,
It seems has managed to endure—
I'm puzzled to know how!
The French, whom I had hoped to crush
Within a week or two
Defy my Uhlans' fiercest rush,
And then, in turn, pursue!

The Belgians still My power defy
Though like so many ghouls
My brave and faithful soldiers try
To terrorize their souls!
While in the East the Russian horde
Advances day by day—
In short, things look unhealthy, Lord;
What are you up to, pray?
You know I've always understood
That you were on My side,
That Germany triumphant would
Fill you and heaven wnth pride!
You know I always (though 'tis true,
As a mere act of grace),
When mentioning Myself and you,
Give you the second place!

You know that I, by right divine,
Wear the Imperial Crown,
And that I cherish a design
To rule the world, alone;
You know all this, yet you allow
My foes to baulk My aim!
Well, let Me ask you, here and now,
What is your little game?

For years I've told My people, Lord,
That you were on My side,
And Wolff has wired the news abroad—
Don't let them think I lied!
Exert your might on My behalf,
Or else (this is no cod!)
I and My Military Staff
Will choose some other god!

—John Bull.

T. C. S. FIRSTS DEFEAT P.C.I. FOURTEEN AT RIVERSIDE BY 41-16

College Team Showed Better Condition and Training But Was Fought Every Inch of the Way by Garnet and Greys.

ACCOUNT OF THE GAME

The first T. C. S. team invaded the City on Saturday and put away the P.C.I. firsts in a Rugby game at Riverside Park in the afternoon. There were very few spectators present, but the game was a fairly good exhibition of Rugby. Both teams lacked condition and training, but in both of these the College boys outclassed the local fourteen. Besides there uniforms there was only one thing the P. C.Ifi team showed on the field, but which can be developed to make a fairly good Rugby machine. That was sand. There are some pretty lightweights on the Garnet and Grey lineup, but down to the smallest man they were there all the time, bucking and blocking like heroes. There team play, however, fell to pieces when they were needed most, only on one occasion did they survive the shock of the T.C.S. attack when in the second half the locals in three splendid bucks took Long and the ball over the touch line. And when it came to a buck the P.C.I. outfit usually made good, but the close measures usually were called for after a lot of valuable time had been lost in failing to get away with the open plays. But they were there many different ways with the stuff that rugby teams are made out of and before the season is over they should be a difficult proposition for any of the teams in their own class.

The T.C.S. fourteen had little difficulty in making away with the game the score being 41 to 16 when the play was concluded. And five points of the 16 registered for the P.C.I. were made by Smythe, who grabbed the ball just after the final whistle had blown and rushed it down to the touch line unopposed. As the ball was in play when the time was called the touch counted for the locals. On the other hand the T.C.S. earned every point, and while their opponents put up every kind of individual tactics to make their going hard, their superior condition and team work won the day for them. The wing line of the locals did not hold very well, and they were so tardy in getting the ball around behind their defence that the red and black squad had a chance to get through and hamper the manoeuvres. This they did time and time again. Besides that they showed a good front that allowed them to carry out their own plays, which were pulled off with snap and accuracy. Their long pass had the P.C.I. squad guessing nearly every time; in their tackling they were especially good, tackling low and like lightning; their offensive and defensive tactics while remining me of T.C.S. play of former years, was fast and worked out to perfection owing to the training and speed of the individual players. All these things contributed to their success. For a team of their weight the Port Hope boys showed splendid class.

It must be remembered that the P. C.I. team were playing their first real match and expected to be pitted against the second and not the first team from the Port Hope school. But even though outplayed during most o fthe game, they made a good showing. Before they can improve much though, their tackling will have to be remedied, only about half the team showing any signs of wanting to go after a man's legs as he rushed down the field. A little more practice ought to shake the kinks out of the team plays, which were fatally slow, and when those two things are done, the team will be in good form. Long did some fine kicking yesterday and led a good buck as well. Jobbit was the most effective man in getting a red and black runner, while McNeeley, Carmichael and Bartlett were difficult propositions for any of their opponents who sought to get away with an end run for the touch line. Knapman played a consistent game, and the whole scrimmage, especially Stevenson at centre, acquitted itself well during the whole game. Art Huycke was good at flying wing, and Cannift and Austin assisted materially at various stages when weight was needed. Smythe deserves a boost for the way he handled the T.C.S. kicks from upfield.

THE GAME.

The first few minutes of the game indicated that the College boys were to be the winners. The T. C. S. had the south goal and started proceedings with a rouge from a few yards out. Not many minutes after Ketchum took a long pass at the twenty-five yard line and scampered across without much opposition. This was the first intimation the locals got of the danger of the visitors' long pass. For some time the red and black crew were held safely, but in fifteen minutes Greey, the peppery little leader, on an end run took the ball behind the touch line once more. Thetford nearly repeated the process when Austin got the strangle hold on him and Long, arriving soon afterward, added the bear hug to the pressure and brought the runner to the ground.

The P.C.I fourteen at different times showed signs of breaking away, particularly after a good buck, but it was not long before Hogg had the old goose h ideonce more behind the pillars. Taylor converted. Before the half had been closed Thetford succeeded in getting another touch and Taylor again converted. Score at half time: T.C.S. 23, P.C.I. 0.

Second Half.

The red and black line took the aftensive in the second half. But with the ball only about twenty yards from the locals touch line, Knapman broke through the Port Hopers' defence, getting away before they could get a man in front of him. In the most spectacular dash of the game he carried the ball three-quarters the length of the field and scored the first P.C.I. touch. Long converted. The visitors came back with two touches and one convert before the locals could register again. This time they got within three yards of the line on their first down. An end run by Smythe failed. A buck on the second down did not make a foot. But the third time, leading a good buck, Long carried the ball across for the second P. C. I. touch. The play netted the T. C. S. squad one more touch and a convert before full time was called. When the whistle blew the ball was in play and Smythe rushed it down to the end of the field for another touch, making the score 41 to 16 in favour of T.C.S

DAVIS ASPIRES TO BE ANOTHER MATHEWSON

George Davis, pitcher for the Boston Braves, is beyond doubt the most interesting figure developed during the year of sport. His story is one that proves all the old theories of the reward of diligence, perseverance and conscientious effort.

Davis was not a strong youth. He was handicapped by physical unfitness but he had set his heart upon being another Matherwson. He did not confide his ambition to anyone for fear that he would ridiculed, but he never relimquished that thought.

He went to Williams College. Instead of reporting to the baseball squad he went to work to develop himself. He had never played a game of baseball and his knowledge of the game was confined to theory. In the gymnasium he commenced working with a baseball, throwing at a padded surface and studying every ball he threw.

It was not long before he discovered a kindred spirit, a young fellow who aspired to be a catcher, but who would not go out with squad for fear of ridicule.

The strange pair worked together, studying out theoretical pitching and catching and figuring how to stop batters like Cobb, Wagner and Jackson.

Before they had finished their college course the coach discovered that there was a pitched working in the gym who knew more about pitching than any of the regulars' did, and Davis was allowed to join the squad and pitch. There were many things he did not know but his theories worked out, and he became a college pitcher.

Recommended by himself he went to the New York Yankees. There it developed he did not know enough of the major league system of pitching. He failed and was sent back. It seemed as if theory had failed. He was studying law at Harvard and became pitcher for the Harvard law school. The Supreme Court could not reverse any of his rulings on pitching. He knew how.

Manager George Stallings had known of Davis and he watched him. He grabbed him and together they studied the system of pitching.

Last spring Stallings told me he had a great pitcher—Davis. I hunted the record and wondered what had become of Stallings' phenom.

He did not show in the early season; he failed to get his name into the box scores in mid-season. All the time he was studying the system of pitching to major league batters, and all the time Stallings was working with him to put a plus mark of ability behind his theory.

Then one day theory plus practice came to the front, and Davis became one of the big question marks in the world's series. He has studied Mack's batters, and if he gets a chance look out for him.

SCRAPS OF WAR NEWS

ZEPPELIN GOES TO FRONT.

LONDON, Oct. 2.—In a despatch from Amsterdam the correspondent of the Reuter Telegram Company says, information has reached that city from Germany to the effect that Count Zeppelin has passed through Essen on his way to the front to supervise the management of the Zeppelin dirigibles.

FAMOUS MOVIE MAN KILLED.

ROME, Oct. 2 — A report from Berlin says that Max Linder, the leading comedian of the Pathe Freres moving picture studios in Paris, has been killed in the battle of the Aisne, where he was fighting on the French side.

FINDERS, KEEPERS.

There are times when differences in rank do not count, and an Irish soldier who was in one of our wars chanced upon one of them.

It was a time when Tim should have been in active service that he was discovered by his sergeant in a hole, well out of the way of even a stray bullet.

"Get out of that hole!" commanded the sergeant sternly. "Get out of it immediately!"

The usually good-natured Irish face looked up at him with stubborn resistance written on every feature.

"You may be me superior officer," he answered boldly, "but all the same Oi'm the one that found this hole first."

AN ERRATIC BULLET.

Sergeant E. W. Turner, of the Royal West Kent Regiment, who was severely injured at Mons, in a letter to his fiancee, says that after he was wounded he lay in the trenches for nine hours.

The bullet that wounded me went into one breast pocket and came out of the other, and in its course it passed through your photo, making a hole in the breast. What a strange coincidence! It then passed through my watch and struck a large clasp knife, smashing it to pieces and driving it through my pocket.

FIRED THE DOCTOR.

During the occupation of Pretoria by the British in the Boer War Kitchener observed a soldier digging in a trench. After a while he sent for him and asked him if he wasn't ill. The soldier replied that he was; that he felt quite bad. "Then why don't you report sick?" demanded the General. "I did," replied replied the soldier, "but the doctor said I was fit for duty." Lord Kitchener sent for the young surgeon, ordered him to make an examination, found the soldier was suffering from typhoid fever, and sent him to the hospital. Then he said to the doctor, "You can apply for your leave home. I have no use here for the sort of doctor you are."

STORY OF KITCHENER.

A lady whom Kitchener had known from her childhood married an officer. When he met her he said: "I had always hoped my little girl would not marry a soldier." "Why?" asked the lady. "Because," he replied, "war is long drawn out torture for a soldier's wife. Do you realize you'll have to play second fiddle to your husband?" "Yes," answered the lady, "I know that, but after all, he loves me best." "True enough," said Kitchener, "he loves you, but in the event of war he'll have to leave you. War is his profession, and he'll have to follow it."

HE HAD TRIED IT.

One day Kitchener and some friends were at Colchester, and all the party ate heartily of greengages. The General took one of the ladies to task, and said, "Don't you eat another one of those." "Why?" asked the lady. "Because you'll get the stomach ache," he replied, gravely. "So will you," answered the lady, "for you have eaten quite as many as I." "I know that," he replied, "for I've got it already. That's why I'm trying to save you."

FRENCH WOMAN'S REGRET.

As a sample of the patriotic spirit of the whole French nation, the following extract from a letter written by an unmarried French lady will be hard to beat: "My only regret now is that I did not do my duty to my country when I was young, and marry, so that now I might have sons of my own fighting for France. That I did not now gives me poignant shame."

WAR VERSES.

Lo, in morning, sunlight flashing,
O'er the hilltops wildly dashing,
Or, some men, in thunder clashing,
On for life, they come.
Men of England, rouse from slumber.
See! Our foes increase in number.
Shall the Germans o'er encumber,
Our Dear English Home?

Round about its sacred border,
Let us heed the sacred order—
Up, and fight, for Truth and Right,
And God be our rewarder.
From our rock-bound land forever.
Men of Germany, would ye sever?
Hearts, that daily echo, "Never," England shall be Free."

—(Mrs.) Herbert Hinchcliffe.

Those Dear Girls.

"Jack tried hard to kiss me last night."
"That's queer."
"Why, what's queer about it?"
"That he had to try hard."

A Paradoxical Situation.

"Somebody told me that the barbers are preparing to take advantage of the situation—that even shaves are going up."
"Why, I thought barbers always charged cut prices."

WHAT IS GERMAN MILITARISM? WHY DID ENGLAND DRAW THE SWORD?

In Brilliant Sermon Yesterday Morning Rev. R. Pogue Justifies Great Britain's Participation in The Struggle.

CHURCH HAS NOT FAILED

Yesterday morning the Rev. R. Pogue preached a brilliant sermon on the "Transformation of the Sword." His discourse is given in part below:

"And He shall be the judge of nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."—Isaiah 2-4.

Needless to say this prophecy has not yet found fulfilment, but every believer in the religion of Christ can say that it shall yet find fulfilment. We believe in the final triumph of right. We believe in the onward march of the forces of righteousness. We believe that evil yet shall die, and man at last be free crowned with thoughts of his high destiny. We believe just because God lives and reigns, and because Jesus Christ died for the sins of men that brute force shall yet come to an end among the peoples of the earth, and that reason, goodwill, love and brotherhood shall take its place. We believe that the day will come when nations shall no longer fly at each others throats on the slightest provocation; that they shall take their cases to Zion for arbitration.

The president of the great Republic to the south of us has proclaimed that to-day shall be observed as a day of intercession for peace among the waring nations of Europe. In all the pulpits of the United States to-day peace will be discussed and earnest prayer shall ascend to God that this war may be brought to a speedy termination.

As we are part of the British Empire, and as we are directly concerned in the struggle going on, it seems fitting that we should direct our thoughts to-day to the subject of peace, and that we should join our brothers to the south in beseeching Almighty God so to move upon the hearts of men that peace and goodwill shall once more prevail among us.

But though we speak to-day upon the subject of peace, there is one thing we must always remember, and that is that it is not the will of God that the human family should have peace at any price. God would not have His children submit to sin and to sin's audacious rule. He would not have them remain silent or stand idly by while wrong is being done to others. Surely it must be right, if it can not be done in any other way, to fight to free men from slavery; to fight to deliver an oppressed people; to fight to remove the stain from a nation's moral life; to fight in defence of the principles of brotherhood, and love, and liberty, and goodwill.

Now I do not suppose that Britain has ever engaged in a war before when her people were so united in the belief, and so assured in the conviction that the war in which she is engaged is a righteous one. Some of her great statesmen and some of her great citizens, before actual hostilities began, felt that Britain was not justified in drawing the sword; but when the full facts became known, there was a unanimity of feeling and belief throughout the whole of the British Empire that there was only one thing that Britain could do. There was no more eloquent advocate of peace before the war than Dr. John Clifford, the great Baptist preacher and statesman of the Old Land. Just before the war broke out, he was in Germany attending the Peace Conference. On his way home he wrote a letter in which he said that Britain's position ought to be one of complete neutrality. He tells of his great astonishment when he reached Holland to find that Britain had declared war. Then he began an examination of the documents, and of the reasons for the stand that she took, with the result that he came to the conclusion after weighing every item of evidence though with utmost reluctance that Britain was justified in what she did. He saw that Britain had no other choice, and that she was driven to defend from the most menacing attack ever made, the most precious ideas and principles, not merely of British and European, but of all human well being.

It has been said again and again that the thing we are fighting is German Militarism. But what is German Militarism? It is hardly necessary to give an answer to that question. If you have been reading the papers carefully—and who has not?—you will have as clear an idea of what it is as I could give you. The best way to judge of a thing is by its fruits. You have the fruits of German Militarism in the long list of atrocities committed by the German soldiers in Belgium and in France, in the slaughter of innocent little children and defenceless women, in the muttiating of wounded soldiers and Red Cross nurses on the battlefield, in the wanton distruction on the most beautiful works of sacred art, and sacred buildings dedicated to the worship of Almighty God. You have the fruits of it in the words of the German Emperor to the soldiers when sent to the relief of Peking. He said, "When you come into contact with the enemy, strike him down. Quarter is not to be given. Prisoners are not to be made. Whoever falls into your hands is into your hands delivered. Just as a thousand years ago, the Huns, under their King Attila, made themselves a name which still appears imposing i ntradition, so may the German name be known in China in such a way that never again will a Chinaman dare to look askance at a German. The blessing of the Lord be with you. Give proof of your courage, and the Divine blessing will be attached to your colours." You have it again in the utter disregard of truth and honour of German statesmen in their dealings with other nations. You have it in the accepted maxims of its military officers. "Might is right." "Nothing is true. Everything is permitted to the strong." "Necessity knows no law." "War is a biological necessity." You have it in the autocracy which makes war and hesitates at nothing, and regards the treaty which guarantees the neutrality of another nation as but a "scrap of paper."

That is German Militarism, and that is what we are fighting. And back of German Militarism there is a philosophy, an atheism, of which Militarism is but a fruit. We are fighting that philosophy, that atheism. And what is that? you ask. You have it in the works of two German Philosophers—and made popular in a book by one of her soldiers, F. Van Bernhardi. All three or them teach that Germany is destined to rule the world, and that there should be no rest upon the part of Germans until Germany in her shining armour assumes the dominion of the world. Everything should be put down that stands in the way. She must walk over men and nations, rough shod, if need be, to attain her goal. Bernhardi teaches that peace is but petrification and stagnation. "The maintenance of peace never can or may be the goal of a policy. The inevitableness, the idealism, and the blessings of war, as an indespensable and stimulating law of development must be repeatedly emphasized." And so to carry out such a programme it logically follows that the Ten Commandments must be brushed aside. The State is not bound by the laws of morality. Christianity must go. It offers an obstruction to the realization of such hopes. Not only its doctrines but its ethics must be rejected. Christ must be dethroned, morality, public and private, must be discarded as so much useless lumber. Honesty, truth, generosity, pity, mercy—are all antiquated, superstitions.

Now brethren, in view of what I have said, you will understand why Britain drew the sword, and why she declares, through her statesmen, she is in this thing until the bitter end; in it until German militarism is crushed, never to rise again. And in view of what I have said you will understand, too, the task that lies before Britain and the Empire. We believe in peace. We are met to-day to pray for peace. But if our cause is right, then I believe there can be no peace until German Militarism is dead.

AUSPICIOUS COMMENCEMENT OF ST. JAMES CHURCH REVIVAL SERVICES

Rev. H. T. Crossley Renders Introductory Address to the Congregation Yesterday Programme For the Week.

The evangelistic services at St. James' Methodist Church commenced auspiciously yesterday under the direction of the Rev. H. T. Crossley of Toronto. The Reverend Evangelist will stay until the 20th, and in the meantime he expects at least two hundred and fifty conversions. That this is not too much to expect he explained, is evident since there are now nearly three hundred members in the Church. If, therefore, each member would bring another, his ambition would be realized. He apparently views music as an important factor in impressing converts, for music appropriate to the occasion was rendered, and the Evangelist himself rendered the sacred song "He Liftseth Me" in a capable manner.

The following will be the subject of addresses to be rendered during the services of the ensuing week:

Monday, "Seven Great Big Blunders".

Tuesday, "Seven Crowns in Song Sermon."

Wednesday "Wrong Views of God."

Thursday, Song Sermon on "The Highways to Heaven."

Friday, "Seven Life Maxims." A grand rally of young men and women and all of youthful spirit.

As a preacher, his style is bright and attractive, apparently viewing a spice of mirth as by no means untoward. Thus during his sermon on the miracle of the loaves and fishes he appealed to the congregation's imagination when he referred to the loaves as a repast for two men and a good square meal for one boy.

The speaker compared the distribution of the loaves and fishes to the spreading of the Gospel.

If Christ thought so much, he said, of the spiritual needs of those around us, how much more should we think of the spiritual neds of those around us. As Christ used the loaves, so also he needs to use us for the purpose of saving souls. You admit that the greatest privilege a person can have is to save souls over to Him, yet that privilege is given to you and to me. Even the angels had not the chance we have for they were never lost. How great, therefore, should our appreciation of the privilege be. Some say they are not so able as others to do the work, but do not let us make that our excuse. If of ourselves we have great talents we are liable to think ourselves capable of standing alone and in consequence, achieve nothing, while on the other hand, perseverance will do more. Success depends more on concentration than upon talent. As the disciples distributed the loaves, so also should we spread the word. Nor should all the work be left to the preachers, for forty-nine out of fifty are saved through individual effort.

At this juncture the speaker referred to his own experience. It was not until the age of seventeen years, he said, that any one asked him to join a Church. At the age of twenty he was engaged as a school teacher, when one day after hearing an address by Dr. Palmer, he determined to try and induce others to join the Church. He met with success and had continued in that capacity ever since.

In earlier days, he continued, it was not often that the children were gathered in at the Church, but he was glad to see that the children were well represented at the revival.

He concluded by citing the example of the little Parish of Rosneath, which last June yielded one hundred and eighty-one conversions, and he thought that to expect two hundred and fifty from St. James' was not too much.

Germans Know How To Use Their Machine Guns

Wounded Lieutenant of Zouaves Tells Interesting Story—Tells When Every Man's a Coward.

"That is the story, without any retouching of my pen, of a young lieutenant of Zouaves whom I met after the battle of Meaux, with blood still splashed upon his uniform," says Philip Gibbs of the New York Times-London Chronicle war service in a dispatch from Creil.

Said this Zouave, who was put out of action by a piece of shell:

"They did good things, those Zouaves of mine, but it wasn't pleasant work. We fought from village to village, very close fighting, so that sometimes we could look into our enemy's eyes. The Moroccans were with us. The native troops are unlike my boys, who are Frenchmen, and they were like demons with their bayonet work.

"Our gunners were shelling Germans from pillar to post, as it were, and strewing the ground with their dead. It was across and among these dead bodies that we infantry had to charge.

Quick Firers' Clever Style.

"The enemy's quick firers were marvellous. They always manoeuvre them in the same style, and a very clever style it is. First of all, they mask them with infantry. Then when the French charge they reveal them and put up to the test under the most withering fire. It is almost impossible to stand against it, and in this case we had to retire after each rush for about 250 metres. Then quick as lightning the Germans got their mitrailleuses across the ground which he had yielded to them and waited for us to come on again, when they repeated the same operation.

"It is quite untrue to say that the Germans have a greater number of mitrailleuses than the French. I believe that the proportion is exactly the same to each division, but they handle them more cleverly, and their fire is much more effective than ours.

"The German aeroplanes are really wonderful in the way they search out the positions of our guns. We always know that within half a hour of observation by aeroplane shells will begin to fall above gunners unless they have altered their position.

"For four days this hunting among the villages on the left bank of the Ourcq went on all the time, and we were not very happy with ourselves. The truth was we had no water and were four days thirsty. The heat was terrific during the day, and some of use were almost mad with thirst. Our tongues were blistered and swollen, our eyes had a silly kind of look in them and at night we had horrid dreams. It was intolerable agony.

Tortured That Horses Might Drink.

"I have said we were four days without drink, and that was because we used our last water for our horses. A gentleman has to do that, you will agree. Even then the horses had to go without a drop of water for two days, and I'm not ashamed to say, I wept salt tears to see the sufferings of those poor innocent creatures who did not understand the meaning of all this bloody business and who wondered at our cruelty.

"The nights were dreadful. All around us were burning villages and at every faint puff of wind sparks floated about them like falling stars.

"But other fires were burning. Under the cover of darkness the Germans had piled the dead into great heaps and had covered them with straw and paraffin, then they had set a torch to these funeral pyres.

"Carrion crows were about in the dawn that followed. One of my own comrades lay very badly wounded, and when he wakened out of his unconsciousness one of these beastly birds was hitting on his chest waiting for him to die. That is war.

"When Every Man Is a Coward."

"The German shells were terrifying. I confess to you that there were times when my nerves were absolutely gone. I crouched down with my men (we were in open formation) and ducked my head at the sound of the bursting shell, and I trembled in every limb as though I had a fit of ague.

"It is true that in reality the German shells are not very effective. Only about one in four explodes nicely, but it is a bad thing when, as happened to me, the shells pooped around in a diametre of fifty metres. One hears the zip-zip of bullets, the boom of the great guns, the ste-tang of our French artillery, and in all this infernal experience of noise and stench the screams at times of dying horses and men joined with the fury of gun fire and rising shrill above it, no man may boast of his courage. There were moments when I was a coward with all of them.

"But one gets used to it, as to all things. My ague did not last long. Soon I was shouting and cheering. Again we cleared the enemy out of the village of Bregy, and that was where I fell, wounded in the arm pretty badly by a bit of shell."

A Championship Ploughing Match By Ploughmen's Association

Splendid List of Prizes Should Excite Keen Competition Among The Members.

TO BE HELD OCTOBER 28

At a meeting of the Directors of the Peterborough County Plowmen's Association, held in the office of the Farm and Dairy, who had been appointed for the plowing match for the championship of the County of Peterborough, which it is proposed to hold on Wednesday, October 28. The farm on which the match will be held has not been definitely decided upon, but will be selected within the course of the next few days.

The Committee has decided to have four classes and to offer liberal prizes. The 1st class will be open to all and will be held in stubble. The third class will be open to boys under 21, and will be held in sod. The 4th class will be open to boys under 18, and will be held in stubble. Any kind of single furrow plow will be allowed to be used. Four prizes will be offered in each class.

A committee composed of ex-Warden Garbutt and H. B. Cowan of arm and Dairy, who had been appointed to see what prize list could be arranged, reported on Saturday that practically all the prizes had been secured.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., has donated a cup worth $50.00 to the Peterborough County Council for permanent competition. This will be offered as the first prize in the first class. The party winning it will have his name engraved on the cup and can hold it for one year, when it will be returned to the County Council. With the cup each year will be given a bronze medal which will become the permanent property of the party winning it. In this way the names of the champion plowmen from year to year, will be recorded for all time on this cup, which, when not in the hands of the competitors, will be kept in the County Council building. The second prize in this class will amount to $20 in cash, and has been donated by Mr. R. R. Hall, ex-M. P. The third prize in this class will be $15.00 in cash, and has been donated by Mr. F. D. Kerr.

First prize in the men's class in stubble will be $16.00 in cash, and has been donated by Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A. The second prize will be $12.00 in cash and has been donated by the Peter Hamilton Co. The first prize for the boys class in sod will be $16.00 and has been donated by Mr. E. A. Peck, ex-M. L. A. The first prize in the boys' class in stubble will be $15.00 and has been given by Mr. G. N. Gordon. The second and third prizes in this class of $12.00 and $8.00 respectively, have been given by Farm and Dairy, and the fourth prize of $5.00, by Mr. Vincent Eastwood. The other prizes will be announced later as also will the rules governing the match. Other contributors to the prize list include Mr. R. J. Soden, Mr. Travers of the Bank of Montreal, and Mr. Pennefather of the Union Bank.

As it is over twenty years since there has been a plowing match in Peterborough County, it is believed that great interest will be taken in this match. Winners in the different the Provincial plowing match, which classes will be eligible to compete in will be held early in November, probably near Toronto.

The German War Machine; Its Meaning

The chorus of admiring comment that has gone up over the completeness of the Kaiser's preparations for the present struggle in Europe has signally failed to emphasize the broad meaning of it all. To anyone who stops to think about the technical side of such things in the same way that one thinks about building a railroad, the German mobilization has proved beyond the shadow of a doubt: First, the dominance of the war party in that country; second their long-framed plans to strike for the mastery of Europe. It is obvious that all the resources of Germany—men, money, and wealth of every sort have been prepared and put utterly at the disposal of the military authorities. History shows no other case of a nation so entirely enlisted and massed for war. The detailed completeness of it is absolute. We read of gigantic stocks of new shoes, new clothes, countless aeroplanes, mobilization posters printed two years ago, gigantic siege guns of novel construction, and so on without end. All these technical details point to one sole purpose; aggressive war. The autocrats of Berlin summoned their countrymen, not to defend Germany, but to crush France through Belgium. It was a scheme of such destructive arrogance that no diplomatic arrangements were possible. The Foreign Office was unable to keep up with the General Staff, and failed either to get Italy into the war or to keep England out. But the struggle had to go forward nevertheless. To say that it was caused by this or that incident is precisely like saying that the Panama Canal was built because the foreman blew the starting whistle. The tragic side of it is that this exhibition of military tryranny is applauded by the German people as a whole. They are willing and eager to take the chance of empire. They believe that a nation which has not yet developed constitutional government is fitted to rule all Europe; that the other races of civilized mankind are to be subjected to the "culture" that has no toleration for the Poles of Posen or the French of Alsace. —Colliers.

MUSIC AND MATRIMONY

Composers Invariably Marry But Happy Unions Are Said to Be In the Minority

It has been said, and not without truth, that amongst the various arts it is music which finds matrimony least repugnant. It is not difficult to see how amongst the great artists of al ltimes and nationalities, the musicians are those who have been most prone to join the life of a woman to their own and to found a family; fgom Verdi to Wager, from Mozart to Mendelssohn, Gluck to Weber; Haydn to Berlioz.

To-day the best known composers have wives and families. But not always can one say that the married lives of musicians have been happy. Rather must one say generally the contrary.

An exception is Mozart. He married early and appears to have been happy, though he was not equally happy in his liberty of choice. The reason he gave for his precocious and obstinate desire to marry was a very practical one—that he needed someone to look after his linen!

At 15 years of age he fell violently in love with the daughter of a theatrical copyist, a certain Weber, uncle of the celebrated author of the "Freischutz." The girl of 15, Aloysia, was not only pretty—which alone might have sufficed— but also clever and fond of music.

Mozart gave her lessons in singing, and she gave him her heart. The young man wrote to the father, exalting the virtues of the maiden and asking permission to marry her. But the father was obdurate and would not give his consent, and the disconsolate lover had to leave for Paris and continue his studies. When he returned a year after, full of hope, he found that the charming Aloysia, who had in the meantime gone on the stage and made a success, would not now hear of marrying. So Mozart consoled himself by falling in love with her sister Constance. Also this time the father opposed the match, but Mozart held firm and married her. It was as was said, a happy marriage; the author of "Don Giovanni" was in love with his wife to the end—full of a love "which brought the sunshine into his life, even when all surroundinv him was dark." When Constance is ill, her husband never leaves the house without first leaving a note, saying, "Good morning my adored wife. I hope thou has slept well and will not rise too early, nor take cold nor tire yourself. I hope thou wilt not have to scold the maids; spare thyself all domestic tasks till I return. God guard thee from evil."

The matrimonial lot of Haydn has a strange resemblance to that of Mozart, but only at the point of departure; for afterwards the two ways separate and diverge always more, to finish at the Antipodes. He also married the sister of the woman he loved. He was some years over 20 when he fell in love with the younger daughter of a certain Keller, a barber, who had done much for him and been almost a father to him. But Keller used to say: "Haydn, you should marry my eldest daughter."

Haydn obeyed, more for duty than from love, and married Anna Maria, the eldest daughter. He was then 27 and she was 32. It was a most unhappy marriage; there was not any reciprocity either of affection or tastes between husband and wife. The world proclaimed Haydn a genius, but Anna Maria thought differently; for her there was little difference between an artist and a cobbler, and she tranquilly used her husband's manuscripts as curl-papers for her hair.

And her gay humour! When her husband was absent she wrote to him in these pleasant terms: "If you should die some day or other, we would not have enough money in the house to bury you." Or she communicated to him this affectionate idea: "I have seen a pretty little house which I would like very much. Please sent me 2000 florins to buy it, so that I may have a refuge when I am a widow."

To the first Haydn responded without upsetting himself greatly. "If I should die, take my MSS. to the editor—you will have enough to pay my funeral expenses." As for the house, he bought it, but it served for him as a widower.

Unhappy he was in his marriage, yes; but one must acknowledge that he looked for, and found some comfort—much comfort, outside the married state—when one remembers the names Shaw, Hodges, Shrootter, Billington.

The conjugal and extra-conjugal doings of Berlioz are better known. It would appear that he lived in an ever-fresh condition of being in love. Once while in Italy, he learned that a celebrated Parisian beauty, who had too often already drained his slender purse, was about to marry. Immediately he laid hands on his pistols and rushed headlong to Paris. He tried to pass the frontier disguised as a woman, but was arrested. When he finally reached Paris he was already so calm and cooled down that he did not know what to do with the pistols. Later on, he became enamoured of Henrietta Smithson, an Irish tragedy artist, who had already made several lose their heads over her, and this time he was desperately smitten.

The superb interpreter of Shakespeare did not fail or even vacillate, and it was not until much later, when she was poor, and, in addition, ailing, that she unbent to Berlioz, who generously offered not only to pay her debts, but to marry her.

It was a most unhappy union, seeing the domineering and "difficult" character of the woman, and led naturally to a speedy separation.

Splendidly Equipped Hindu Army Gets Warm Reception

Indian Troops Trained in Modern Methods and Equipped With Most Approved Machinery of War

The censor having at last permitted publication, Douglas Crawford, the Daily Chronicle's correspondent at Marseilles, telegraphs this interesting story of the arrival of the Indian troops in France:

"With undisguised delight flashing from their eyes as of burning coal, the Indian troops landed here. From the little Ghurkas and his winning smile, through the ranks of Bengal Lancers, the Punjabi and the Baluchi, to the giant Sikh, they were magnificent specimens of martial manhood. Every one was vying with realizes the reasons for the greatest of the King and Emperor and his allies.

"Let us put the doubters right. Not an Indian has set foot in France but realizes the reasons for the greatest war of all time, and the motto of these troops now, as a thousand years ago, is 'Death'.

Troops Leap Ashore.

"In almost as short space of time as it takes to tell the decks of the ships of the fleet were alive with soldiers, and in a few hours the trying work of disembarkation was completed without a slip or accident to the troops, who literally leaped ashore, fighting men to the last ounce. They were hard and fit, ready to go straight from the quay to the fighting line. Not a few of the Sikhs, lithe, black-beared giants, were deeply concerned to know if I thought the war would be over before they would get at grips with the enemy.

"Never has the port of Marseilles witnessed a scene so kaleidoscopic as that presented by the defiling of the thousands after thousands of soldiers down the seemingly numberless gangways along the quays lit up by the brilliant sunshine.

"Here were Sikhs, there sturdy little Ghurkas—the finest infantry in the world; the darker Hindoo with a merry smile lurking in his distinctly Mongolian eyes. They at once captured the hearts of the French soldiers. A wondering crowd warmly shook hands with the Ghurkas and wished them the best of luck in the exercise of their prowess against the Germans, urther removed were the warlike Baluchis, while at another quay the Punjaubis were busily engaged in grooming their mounts.

Al lthe troops were in khaki with a green or white interwoven band in their headdress to distinguish one caste from the other. The turban, of course, is worn by all Hindoos and Mussulmen.

"The white officers in command are the highest type of soldier, drawn from the best families of Great Britain. In them the men have implicit faith. One important fact that must not be lost sight of is that this great expeditionary force from the Orient isn't only an army in name but an enemy in being, thoroughly trained according to the most modern ideas and equipped with all the first class machinery of war.

"Everything has been brought from India. Cannon, rifles, intrenching implements, sleeping rugs, tents and a hundred and one necessaries of the Indian army, down to the praying mat.

"The scene here at noon when the troops marched through to the different camping grounds was one not to be forgotten. Every man, woman and child in Marseilels turned out. The numbers were swelled by people from the surrounding country districts. The streets were seething masses of highly excited humanity. The excitement of the highstrung Latins rapidly spread to the Indians, and it was a unique experience to see hundreds of martial warriors, from bearded men whose hair was shot with grey, to beardless youth, jump a yard high for sheer joy.

OCTOBER LILAC BLOOM

Mr. Walter Scott, 548 Charlotte Street, on Saturday left with the Examiner a beautiful bloom of lilac, one of five or six similar plucked from a roadside lilac bush at Henderson's Corners, fourth line of Smith, on Friday, October 2nd. The shrub grew on a hill side and the leaves were as green as in June. The oldest inhabitant" can't recollect a season when full-blown lilac bloom appeared in October.

FIT FOR LOWEST LEVELS OF HELL IS MINE LAYING AND BOMB DROPPING

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., October 5.—Declaring that there could be no such thing as "civilized warfare," William O. Stillman, of Albany, N.Y., opened the four days' session of the American Humane Association to-day. "I feel that we may denounce that method of warfare which sends aircraft over sleeping cities and drop bombs," said Stillman. "Equally to be condemned is the floating of mines in the ocean track of neutral commerce. If only fifty per cent. of these reports are true, they would be fit only for the lowest levels of hell."

A WONDERFUL BEAUTY

Last summer there was a long, unexpected wait, at an uncomfortable, lonely little station, nestled in among mountains. Peaks rose up on every side, so close and so high, that one felt shut in, confined, and it seemed as if there were no way out. At the same time the heart of the weary traveller was depressed and discouraged. Life seemed to hold so many sorrows, troubles and problems and seemingly there was no way from which comfort and gladness and help would come. On every side, whichever way she looked in the life trials, there also seemed no way out.

Suddenly tired of looking around, she looked up, and there, one of the lofty peaks was shining and gleaming in the radiant light of the setting sun. In a few seconds the next peak was aglow, and on and on until all were alight, and her own heart throbbed and exulted, at the sight of that wonderful beauty.

It was as if God Himself had sent a special message. What if in the valleys it was gloomy and confined, yet her God had control of all the grandeur and beauty and space.

Into her bruised heart shone the thought, that the Maker of all had planned her life. Out of the sorrow would come strength and joy when He thought best. She would have patience and trust to wait and work in the valley of suffering, and would not look and search for the way out. Strengthened by that beautiful sight, she realized as never before the grandeur of Paul's words: "We glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience. And patience experience; and experience hope."—Romans v., 3-4.—J. H. N.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN NOTES

Henry Gibson, Stoatsburg

The period when plants are removed from the garden to the house is a trying one for plants. Out of doors they have been accustomed to fresh air, moisture, and so forth, and not very high temperature. In the house conditions are greatly changed; the air will be dry, and there will be heat of an enervating character because of the lack of moisture in it.

Leave the windows open, and shower the plants every morning if the weather is pleasant. Use no fire heat unless it is quite cold, and then only sufficient to take away the chill. By a little care in this respect your plants will get accustomed to the new conditions by such easy stages that by the time the cold weather arrives they will not mind it so much, especially if one is careful to admit plenty of fresh air during the middle of the day.

MUSICIANS ARE VICTIMS OF WAR

France's Pianists Playing in Cafes To Make Their Living—Some Have Lost Fortunes Through the Outbreak of War

LONDON, Oct. 4.—The Standard has the following despatch from its correspondent at Copenhagen:

The fact that Fritz Kreisler, the famous violinist, who is a lieutenant of the Austrian army, has been wounded, makes it interesting to know how other celebrities in the world of music are occupying themselves during this period of enforced inactivity caused by the war.

Ignaz Friedman, a noted pianist, who had been guaranteed $87,500 for a concert tour through Germany and Russia, will now go to Italy and try his luck as a composer. His wife is a Russian of the Tolstoi family, and he will not expose her to a longer stay in the German capital.

Loses $50,000.

Busoni, the pianist and composer, is in despair. He shut himself up in his rooms in Berlin, declaring he would not see anybody. He had engagements for the coming season worth $50,000, which were all cancelled.

Lisenberger, who fled from Belgium, where he earned a fortune as a teacher of music, has left everything behind him, and is now earning about $15 a month by playing every night at a small restaurant in Berlin. He was arrested as a Russian spy and was detained several days because he had not his papers with him.

Godowsky, who recently purchased and furnished a castle near Brussels, fled almost penniless. Zador, the baritone, who made about $75,000 in the United States last winter, is on the safe side in Berlin. He has, unlike many of his colleagues, invested his money safely. Joseph Weiss, one of Germany's best pianists, is playing at a third rate music hall to get a living.

Little Chance For Peace If This Be True

Until France and her allies admit that France has been beaten by Germany the last named country will continue to fight. This statement is credited by the New York Times to Herr H. von Eckhardt, the newly appointed German minister in Mexico. He said that the admission by France that she had been beaten was the first condition of peace, so far as the German government was concerned.

Herr von Eckhardt told of a conversation he had with the Kaiser two days before he left Berlin for New York. The Kaiser, he said, displayed the keenest desire that the world should understand that it was Russia and France and not Germany that had started the war and that it was Russia and France who had thrust the sword into Germany's hands.

"The emperor," said Herr von Eckhardt, "insisted that he had done all that was in his power to maintain peace in Europe. He was deeply serious. However, the Kaiser is not alarmed. He is confident that victory will be with German arms.

"The German army was in Brussels at the time when I had this talk with the Kaiser, yet he was not carried away by that fact. Instead he insisted that the situation was very serious and he told me that everything he had done was with the thouht of peace in mind and that, while he was working with this end in view, Russia mobilized and France had begun hostilities at Nuremberg and bombs had been thrown. He holds Russia and France responsible for this conflict, and the reason those two countries wanted war was because they did not wish Germany to play a too important role in the world."

With reference to the atrocities that have been blamed on the Germans, Herr von Eckhardt said he had seen no proofs of them.

"What about the possibility of an early peace in Europe?" he was asked.

"It is the wish of Germany, as well as of the whole world" he replied, "that there shall be peace. But it must come, and this I assure you, with honourable conditions for the German Empire. First and foremost, the most important condition of peace must be the acknowledgment that we are victorious in France, that we have won in France. Until it is admitted that Germany has defeated France, Germany will continue to fight.

"Furthermore, when peace is restored it must be with the guarantee that never will more wars come."

PREMIER HEARST AND THE MACHINE IN TORONTO PRESS

Toronto World, Conservative—

"This is the great day for the liberal party in Ontario. The Conservatives have deliberately thrown away their advantage, disgusted their members, by submitting to the dictation of outside agencies and failing to insist upon a caucus for the choice of a new leader. Ottawa sent down word what it wanted and the thing was put through in approved Kaiser fashion. This overthrow of popular Government methods, this infringement of the rights of the members of the Legislature, this sweeping aside of all the honourable principles of Government, for which Sir James Whitney established a tradition in the Province, can only mean the decadence and ultimate break-up of the Conservative party. There are more than rumours that Mr. Cochrane wishes to have Ontario Government business harmonize with the designs of the Ottawa government. It is stated that he intends to find a putty man who can be moulded to the wishes of the Federal Government."

Toronto Telegram, Conservative:

"If it were given to the people of Ontario to choose Sir James Whitney's successor, there is no doubt whatever that they would declare by an overwhelming majority in favour of Sir Adam Beck. Whether Hon. Frank Cochrane is busy himself here as Czar, or only a courier from the Czar his gratuitious advice should not be allowed to count in favour of one candidate or against another. Surely the members of the Ontario Legislature are big enough to preserve their atonomy and resent meddling from Ottawa. Particularly is Hon. Frank Cochrane not the man to act as a king-maker in this Province. At Ottawa he has been more of a hindrance than a help to the Hydro-Electric policy. If Cochrane had his way the Conservative Government in Ontario would have no more stable foundation than petty politics. Unless the Conservative party wishes to throw away all the advantages of an era of public service, it will not tolerate hole-and-corner methods but will demand as its new leader a man in whose hands the future of Sir Adam Beck's work will be absolutely safe."

Toronto News, Conservative—

"Sir James Whitney always regarded the Conservative party of Ontario as part of a national organization. Indeed the "Whitney tradition" sanctions and requires intimate association with Mr. Borden and his colleagues. If the leaders of the Conservative party in the Legislature consult with Mr. Cochrane they only follow the example of Sir James Whitney."

Toronto Globe—

"That interference (from Ottawa) is not from Sir Robert Borden. It is Hon. Frank Cochrane in Ontario, as it is Hon. Robert Rogers in Manitoba. In both cases it is for the lowest ends of organized machine politics. Under such domination from Ottawa Sir Adam Beck knows what to expect. In a Hearst Government under the Cochrane domination the Beck policy has no chance. Mr. Hearst begins his race both heavily weighted and hamstrung. 'Kaiser Cochrane' and the 'putty Premier' are to be introduced as characters in a political opera by W. F. McLean, with incidental music by the Editor of The Telegram."

Toronto Star—

"The new Premier of Ontario, like the new King of Albania, seems to have been selected by the powers. It was feared, we suppose, that a legislative caucus if called might give trouble.xxThe only safe and democratic way is to allow the majority upon the death of their leader, to elect his successor."

FUNERAL OF THE LATE MRS. MATCHETT

Took Place Yesterday Afternoon —Largely Attended

The funeral of the late Mrs. R. M. Matchett took place on Sunday afternoon from the family residence, 394 Mark Street, to the Little Lake Cemetery. The funeral, which was a large one, testified to the high esteem in which the deceased was held.

The services at the house and grave were conducted by Rev. F. A. Conners of Park Street Baptist church.

The bearers were the deceased's three sons, Messrs. M. W., Stanley and Oscar S. Matchett, and three of her nephews, Messrs. George William and James Savigny.

THE LIFE OF A WATCH

It should be cleaned and oiled once a year. Many dirt particles are always in the watch, causing it to run slow and stop. The oil is thin and evaporates in a short time, so it must be renewed to keep the watch running as much as a new watch should run. The old saying "A stitch in time saves nine" holds good.

LOUVAIN IS A NEW POMPEII DECLARES PROFESSOR OF THE CITY'S UNIVERSITY

Only Open Space Where the City Used to Stand--The Old City of the Dukes of Brabant Exists No Longer--Men and Officers Looted Buildings Like Highwaymen --Another Contribution of German "Culture."

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 5. — A graphic description of the wreck and desolation of the ancient city of Louvain, Belgium, is given by Professor E. Gilson, of the University of Louvain, in a letter to the Belgian Minister of Justice, Mr. Henry Carton de Wiart, one of the Belgian high commissioners who recently presented a statement of Belgium's case to President Wilson. The letter says:

"I enter the city, coming from Tervueren. Beginning at Berthem, I see numerous burnt and crumbling houses; the nearer you come to the gloomy and silent city the more their number. I pass through the St. Esprit street, the St. Jacques square and Brussels Street, here only few houses are in ruins, although most of them are sacked and pilaged.

"At the Sept Coins, Louvain reveals itself to my eyes like a luminous panorama in the glade of a forest. The centre of the city is a smoking heap of ruins. Houses are caved in, nothing remains but smoking ruins and a mass of brick. It is a veritable Pompeii. But how much more tragic and vivid is the sight of this new Pompeii! An oppressive silence everywhere. Everybody had fled; at the windows of cellars I see frightened faces and at the street corners Prussian sentinels, stolid, immovable and silent.

St. Peter's Silhouette.

"In the centre stand the walls of St. Peter's now a grinning silhouette — roof and belfry gone, the walls blackened and caved in. In front stands the Hotel de Ville, dominating everything and almost intact. Further on the ramparts of Les Halles, entirely destroyed, except for the facade of the pillars of the Salle des pas Perdus. The library and its treasures are entirely gone.

"Entering St. Peter's by the Rue de Malines. I find what was the big bell, among the ruins. The vaults are for the most part caved in; there is a continuous stream of stones falling, so that we could not enter it without danger. Everything is burnt. If the paintings by Boest and Vander Wegne have not been saved in time, they must have perished. The jubilee in the choir is standing.

"I walk all over the open space where the city used to stand. At the Sept. Coins everything is lying on the ground. The Rue des Sommers is burnt; to the right the Audience is burnt; the upper part of the Rue du Canal is burnt, including the house of the dean and the students' house. The Rue de Diest up to St. Peter's is a heap of ruins, bricks, scrap iron and charred beams, no trace of a sidewalk is visible and from the ruins the most disgusting odours are rising and enveloping everything. Rue de la Station is entirely burnt; but the fronts of the modern houses have resisted the fire and the sight is not as tragic there as elsewhere.

"I approach the statue of Juste Lipse; everything burnt. The house of David Fishbach and the house of Mr. Deuscher have fallen to pieces, and in the Petite Rue Louis Melahs everything is destroyed. At the foot of the statue in a flower bed all tramped under foot there is an irregular hillock covered with a few dead leaves. An old woman, recognising me, comes out of her cellar and tells me, 'Monsieur, this is the grave of Monsieur David and his son, the best people that ever lived.' She cries. They were killed by shrapnel fired upon them as they were leaving their house.

"The Capuchin brothers buried the dead and made temporary graves for them. Graves were found nearly everywhere. In front of the statue, near a house, I find traces of fire. 'In this place,' the old woman tells me, 'the Prussians burnt a body after soaking it in petroleum. Some men buried the charred remains.' I pick up a key, which must have belonged to the dead man—a memento of this monstrous incident.

"The greater part of Rue Leopold is burned, the houses of Van Geluchten, Lemaire, Debaisieux and many others among them. In the Place du People everything is burned, except one house, which is riddled with bullets. At the Marche Aux Grains, the house of Mr. Gilbert, is destroyed, as well as the first houses to the right, toward Roels. The lower part of the Rue de Tirlemont is also razed to the ground, the military hospital and the pharmacy of Mr. Rauwes are reduced to ashes. A section of the Rue de la Monnaie, the whole block facing Les Halles, the House of Mr. Van Grindelbeck, the epicier; the book store of Mr. Peeters, etc., and the whole Vieux Marche (except the college of the Jesuites) form an entangled mass of ruins of many shapes.

"In the Rue de Namur, above Les Halles, nothing is burned, but everything is pillaged. The avenues of Diest and Tirlemont are destroyed.

"In the centre the sight is extraordinarily picturesque— gloomy, abominable, and more so in the evening. When the full moon is shining over the mass of ruins it is really fantastic, diabolical to look at.

"The centre of old Louvain, the old city of the Dukes of Brabant, exists no longer; a new city will have to be built in the centre of the quarters spared by the torch.

"However, that is not yet the end. The big avenues converging in the centre have also greatly suffered; the roads leading into the adjacent cities are burnt wherever the barbarians passed through. Thus, for instance, on the Route de Malines everything is in ashes, right and left, and within a circumference of eleven kilometres— that is, as far as Campenhout, where the shrapnel of the Belgians scrubbed the torch of the incendiary villains—everything is laid bare. The village of Herent has been particularly the object of attacks; it is half burnt; sixteen persons were shot and a number of men sent into captivity, including the old priest and his two vicars and the old retired priest.

"These two observations I made in the course of my exploration of this modern Pompeii:

"First— The aspect of the ruins leaves no doubt that the incendiary operations were carried out systematically in a carefully thought out manner and beyond doubt by some one's order. Each house was set on fire separately. This fact is particularly noticeable on the Chaussee de Malines where a large number of small houses completely isolated, the dwellings of poor peasants, were set on fire out of sheer malice, one after the other. Poor, innocent wretches! The heavens are crying for revenge for such acts.

"A villager told me that the soldiers had two ways of setting fire to the houses. One was to break the windows of the first floor, throw petroleum on the floor and throw in torches of burning straw, while others were engaged in shooting at the upper story windows to prevent the inhabitants from throwing missiles on those setting fire to their homes. Sometimes they would fire special cartridges into the windows of the upper stories; it is believed they were explosive cartridges, some kind of rockets used during the night while fighting. Curtains and bedding and other inflammable matter immediately took fire. Some houses which had been spared by the fire bore this inscription: 'Diese haus zu schutzen' (This house is to be spared).

"Second—Another observation. I entered consecutively ten houses which had not been set on fire, but which had been pilaged. Among others I visited the house of Baron Descamps, and the impression which I gathered from my examination of the house immediately after the passage of the German troops is the following:

"Pillage, as well as incendiarism has been methodically carried on. It was not the work of a delirious drunken trooper, who all at once breaks from his bonds, but a careful, methodic and minute ransacking of houses from the cellar to the attic. Drawers were everywhere pulled out and their contents looted. Closets which had been left open were not broken, those that were found locked were ransacked and their contents strewn over the floor. Evidently the thieves had looked for valuables that would not be too bulky to carry easily. Clocks, for instance, which as a rule are rather bulky, are generally intact, and so are paintings and engravings of large size. In my house water colours were carefully cut from their frames and carried off. Valuables, jewelry, silverware and small art objects were especially looked for.

"It is proved that the Prussian officers were stealing, no less than their own men. As an example, on the Chaussee de Tervueren a villager noticed a carriage stopping in front of a house whose inhabitants he knew. Two officers entered the house and came out shortly afterward with packages and a clock, a small, but artistic and valuable piece of art, and worth about 800 francs. They packed everything into the carriage and ran off. It is the veriest highway robbery."

WINTER SERMONS COMMENCED YESTERDAY

The winter sermons commenced last evening in St. Peter's Cathedral and the Sacred Heart Church. In the former the Rev. Fr. McGuire of Douro preached an eloquent discourse and in the south end church the Rev. Fr. Fitzpatrick of Ennismore. Both chose for their subjects the Holy Rosary, explaining the various prayers in that devotion, and exhorting the congregation to an earnest use thereof.

If vegetables are overcooked their texture toughens; their flavour is somewhat destroyed, and they are not so digestible.

DRASTIC ACTION TAKEN.

Manufacturers of Underclothing Must Sell Supplies to Britain.

LONDON, Oct. 6. — According to The Yorkshire Post, the War Office is taking drastic measures to secure an adequate supply of hosiery, underclothes, gloves and other woollen goods for the army and navy. All the manufacturers in Leicester, the chief centre for the woollen industry, have been informed that their entire product of heavy woollen goods must be placed at the disposal of the War Office, and that if a single garment be withheld by a manufacturer, or is supplied to any firm whatever, the War Office will at once take over the factory at which it is made and run it, giving the firm a certain percentage of the profits.

Man Who Burned Louvain Taken.

LONDON, Oct. 6.—Among prisoners recently taken by the French is Major Von Manteuffel, who is said to have caused the destruction of Louvain. He was recognized by a Russian officer now with the French staff, who formerly knew him at Petrograd when he was stationed there.

KAISER DISCARDS HIS RIGHT BOWER

Gen. Helmuth Von Moltke Deposed is the Report From Berlin—Removal of Chief of Staff Shows Something Wrong.

VOIGHTSRHETZ SUCCEEDS

LONDON, Oct. 6.—Gen. Voightsrhetz has been appointed chief of the German general staff to succeed Gen. Helmuth Von Moltke, according to unofficial advices from Berlin.

The deposed general is the nephew of the great leader who directed Prussian operations in 1870 which resulted in the defeat of France. On Jan. 1, 1906, he was appointed chief of staff. The elevation took place over his protest, it being said that Von Moltke did not feel himself fully qualified for the high command. However, he is credited with being an excellent soldier and has done a great deal to increase the efficiency of the German soldier.

Gen. Voightsrhetz, who succeeds him, is almost unknown. His name appears in none of the usual reference works. He is the son of a well-known commander of 1870 who led a division and afterwards became governor of Hanover. When he died an infantry regiment was named after him.

The military expert of The Standard, commenting on the removal of Gen. Von Moltke, says:

"If this is true, it is news, indeed, for it will constitute a serious panic in high places. Even in minor affairs of the world, it is not often that the police know as 'swanning hunting while crossing a stream' is adopted.

LIEUT.-GENERAL VON MOLTKE.

"There must be something very gravely wrong indeed if the Germans find it necessary to get rid of the man who originated and directed the whole of the strategy of their campaign, and that at a vitally critical moment.

"Only cannot, for instance, believe that Von Moltke of his own initiative and free will withdrew troops from France at a moment when they were urgently needed to secure a decisive result in that area of war. Having withdrawn them, one cannot imagine Von Moltke sending them on a useless errand to East Prussia, when their presence in Galicia might have saved the Austrian army from disaster.

"But if he was responsible for such a fatuous policy, then supersession is not sufficient punishment. He should be sent to take a landsturm division into action."

PRINCE GOT AWAY.

Most Fatal Fish Ever Fought For Wedding Capture.

PARIS, Oct. 6.—When the German troops occupied Coulommiers they took the chief officials of the town as hostages for an indemnity of $20,000. The officials protested that it was impossible to provide this, as all the wealthy inhabitants had left. The German general threatened to have the hostages shot, but in the midst of this scene a tall young officer entered. Gen. Von Kluk clicked his heels and saluted. Then followed a short colloquy with the unknown officer, to whom the general showed an extraordinary deference. The hostages were led out into the street and placed with their backs against a wall while twelve soldiers covered them with rifles. For nearly twenty minutes the hostages faced the muzzles of the rifles, not knowing when the officer's sabre would fall, giving the signal for their death.

Suddenly from above came the drone of an aeroplane. The aviator descended. He brought bad news. The British forces were approaching in great strength. The Germans, forgetting their prisoners, made a dash for their quarters, and half an hour later they evacuated the town in something like a panic. One of the first to leave was the tall young officer to whom Von Kluk had shown such great deference. Mounted on a fine horse, and striking to the left and right with his sabre, he forced his way through the terrified infantry. According to stories of German stragglers whom the British took prisoners, this young man who was in a hurry was Prince Eitel Friedrich, the Kaiser's second son.

HELPING THE BELGIANS.

British Troops Share In Defence of Antwerp.

LONDON, Oct. 6.—British troops are assisting in the defence of Antwerp. Yesterday they fought shoulder to shoulder with the Belgians in the trenches along the north bank of the River Nethe.

The Daily Mail received from its correspondent confirmation of reports that a British force has reached the city and is actively co-operating in its defence. The correspondent of The Morning Post in Antwerp sends the following:

"The Belgian field artillery is co-operating effectually with our heavy artillery. Our infantry is entrenched on the near bank of the Nethe, opposite the main German forces. Two German attempts to cross the river have been smothered by our artillery."

Official Inquiry Under Way.

LONDON, Oct. 6.—An official investigation is being made regarding the movements of a number of vessels which left American ports, carrying coal, predominably bound for ports which have not been reached. While there is no disposition on the part of the British Government to question the efforts of the United States Government to prevent the coaling of German warships by vessels from American ports, it is explained that every effort is being exerted to forestall a repetition of the coaling of the German cruiser Karlsruhe.

TURPINITE MOST DEADLY

Will Exterminate All Life Within a Radius of 400 Yards —Writer Doubts its Use by French Up to the Present —Held a Big Card.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—(By Mail to New York)—Whether the French are really using Turpinite, the newest war terror, reported to be in possession of England's ally, is a matter of great speculation in England. This new explosive, which has aroused the greatest discussion throughout the world, is declared to be so deadly in its effect that all life is exterminated within a radius of 400 yards of one exploding shells. Regiments of Germans are reported to have been found dead in their trenches, their rifles still in their hands, not a mark on their bodies, but with the long line of corpses standing as though in life.

The Daily Express declares that a man known to the editor for years and who is generally well informed, has written as follows concerning turpinite:

"The new explosive was invented two years ago by M. Turpin, the 'parent' inventor of melinite and lyddite, is undoubtedly the most terrific and most widely death dealing high power explosives ever known. So lethal in its effect is the new shell on explosion, that should its use become widespread whole armies, indeed, entire nations, would be completely exterminated in the course of a few weeks. For this reason its use is probably prohibited by articles of war, by the international Hague convention, though M. Turpin himself boldly claims this is not the case."

After telling of M. Turpin's dislike of the French war office methods and his grievance following the government's acceptance of melinite and lyddite, the informant of the Express tells how Turpin set to work upon a new explosive which he endeavoured to perfect so that as compared to it melinite and lyddite would be practically useless. He worked for years, had a gun made himself, the parts being constructed at different points and then assembled and directed the making of the shells.

"The merest chance enabled me to witness the early trials of the new explosive," the writer continues. "On a stretch of sand 300 yards from high water level, a temporary sheep fold had been erected, about 400 yards apart, and railed off with wooden hurdles. In this space a dozen sheep and a couple of aged and worn out horses.

"One of the horses was contentedly munching away at some hay and the other was rubbing himself against one of the hurdles, while the sheep were huddled together in one corner.

"This was what I saw through my glasses when, from a ridge some 2,500 yards away there came a sharp, loud thud and the shrieking of a small shell, just as though somebody had been munching hay lay on his torn it in two.

"There was an explosion in the open space in the middle of the improvised sheep pen. The sheep were still huddled in the corner, one of the old horses was apparently leaning up against the railing. The one that had been munching hay lay on his side.

"When 10 minutes later I reached the pen the sheep looked for all the world as if they had been petrified. They were mostly standing up, one against the other. Three or four were lying down, but all were dead, with thir eyes open and lips hanging. It was absolutely ghastly. Yet of all the animals, only the old horse that had been munching hay was hit by a fragment of the shell. The other horse was half falling, half leaning against the fence, his forelegs stretched out forward, his hind feet doubled up on the sand beneath him. Both had been killed instantly.

"There was a faint odour in the air which I can only describe as that given off by methylated spirits, yet mixed with a pungent smell of menthol. Later the experiments were repeated on a much larger scale at the French permanent camps of Chalons and Mailly.

"For special reasons which it would be unfair for me to divulge at the present moment, I am strongly of the opinion that these shells have not been used to any extent by the French armies in the field. Probably an actual test under battle conditions has been made once or twice, but no more.

"That this terrific explosive will, however, be used in case of such an eventuality as an attempt to take Paris by storm, I have no doubt. But I am convinced, despite the thousands of bombs now prepared and the special apparatus that are being cast, this explosive, a single 50-pound shell of which is able to kill and—so to speak—'petrify' every living thing in a space of 400 square yards, will not be used unless under very desperate circumstances and only with the full consent of France's allies."

To clean brass flower pots or trays, rub them with a piece of lemon; then pour boiling water over them, and finally polish with a soft dry cloth.

Tea or Coffe Hurt You?

No need to get mad now, tear up the paper, or shout "nonsense, good tea or coffee never hurt anyone."

You know better than that, for you can point out all around you folks who are the worse for their slugging.

Think over a few tea or coffee drinking friends and casually enquire if they are entirely and perfectly well and just how tea or coffee treats them.

If it hurts others isn't it just possible—?

Catch the drift, don't you?

In fact after having studied the matter a bit it will become plain that if you are a tea or coffee-drinker the chances are that some form of incipient or perhaps fixed organic disease due to tea or coffee has set in, headache, biliousness, constipation, nervousness, sleeplessness, heart flutter or others of the well-proven tea and coffee ills. One can refuse to look the thing squarely in the face and peg along with the tea or coffee.

Some day Nature will haul him up short.

It's a Poor Bargain to swap health and a clear, business-like head for a few cups of tea or coffee each day.

Every tea or coffee toper tries to wiggle round and charge his aches and ills to weather, overwork, to much or too little food, this, that or the other thing, but how he hates to admit that the real enemy is his Master, tea or coffee.

A Sure Personal Test

will locate the exact cause of your steady destruction of health, if that cause be tea or coffee. It's worth knowing the plain, sober fact before organic heart trouble or other disease sets in, which perhaps cannot be cured.

The test is pleasant, accurate and satisfying—

Quit both tea and coffee absolutely for ten days and in their place use POSTUM.

Postum now comes in two forms. Regular Postum must be boiled. Instant Postum — soluble form made in the cup instantly, with hot water. Both kinds of this famous food-drink have a delightful flavour and are absolutely free from caffeine (the drug in tea and coffee) or any injurious substance.

If in a few days you begin to sleep soundly at night, digest your food better, stomach and bowels show signs of recovery, or the old feeling of weakness at the heart leaves, or head works clearer, (the ails of tea and coffee drugging are multitudinous) the facts will be before you, and

Von Kluk Made Some Progress

Administered Temporary Check to the Allies' Turning Movement —Silence Over Proceedings

ALLIES GIVE GROUND

LONDON, Oct. 6.—Gen. Von Kluk has at last delivered a successful attack, and the German right wing yesterday gained ground. The points lost by the allies are not known, but it is believed that the principal assault took place in the region between Roye and Arras, where both sides are reported to have massed great bodies of troops in the past few days.

The French official statement yesterday afternoon acknowledged a temporary check on the left wing of the allies. It is worded as follows:

"On the left wing, to the north of the Oise, the battle continues with great violence. The result remains indecisive. We have been obliged, at certain points, to cede ground.

"Along the remainder of the front there has been no change.

"In Russia, after a battle which lasted ten days, the German army which was operating along the eastern Prussian front and the Niemen river has been driven along the entire line and made its retreat, abandoning a considerable quantity of war material.

"This army has evacuated completely the territory of the Russian provinces of Suwalki and Lonja."

This change in the situation comes after several days of desperate fighting on the part of the allies, endeavoring to pierce the line of German communications and complete the enveloping movement begun on the Marne. This line centres at Aix-la-Chapelle and Cologne, extending northeast from Compeigne through Tergnier, St. Quintin, Maubouge, Liege, and thence to the two first-named points. The allies have taken and held a railway line running from Amiens to Arras, where it diverges east and cut into the territory held by the Germans. This line has proved of immense value in bringing troops to vital points.

The town of Douai reappears constantly in reports from the front. It is said that heavy reinforcements have been rushed to that town, and that the fighting in the vicinity is of the most sanguinary character. Douai is situated 15 miles northeast of Arras, midway between that town and Valenciennes, on the railroad route to Mons. This indicates a progressive advance north. The allies are in touch with Belgian troops in the southwestern section of that country, and by means of a branch road, which runs from Arras via Douai and thence to Lille, Courtrai and Ghent, will be able to push ahead.

The opinion is held that a severe blow to the German lines of communication would completely tie up the German defensive. For this reason Von Boehm and Von Kluk are making superhuman efforts to turn back their enemies, which they have done with some success. Until the points lost are made public, no conclusion can be given as to the true situation.

Both in London and in Paris there is the greatest confidence, although some surprise is displayed at the success of the Germans in preventing the outflanking movement. There is a feeling, however, that the Germans cannot extend their line much further north without weakening it at some point.

Naturally progress by either side must be extremely slow, for after every advance, no matter how slight, the troops making it must entrench themselves for protection against the shells from the enemy's guns posted in strong positions from one end of the line to the other.

The Daily Mail's correspondent in France reports fighting in and around Douai, and considers that if the French have reached Douai in force that the situation of the German general, Von Kluk, must be desperate.

"Gen. Von Kluk," the correspondent says, "has had all the reinforcements which could be spared him and yet finds himself outnumbered at every point. There are many indications from German prisoners, from French officers and from members of the British transport service, the combined testimony of whom it is difficult to disbelieve, that the German army is becoming demoralized.

"The timidity of the German outposts, who surrender when surprised is strong evidence of their demoralization."

BYE-ELECTION ON OCT. 28.

Liberals Will Not Oppose Return of Hon. Mr. Macdonald.

TORONTO, Oct. 6—Hon. Finlay G. Macdiarmid, the new Provincial Minister of Public Works, will go before his constituents for endorsation on Oct. 28. The nomination meeting has been arranged for the 21st instant and the writs are now being issued by the Government.

It is not expected that much of a contest, if any, will take place in his riding of West Elgin as the majorities which returned Mr. Macdiarmid of late years have been very substantial.

Premier Hearst intimated last evening that other contests are not likely for some time. He said he had not been able thus far to consider the situation in the riding of Dundas, vacated through the death of Sir James Whitney.

Britain Using Pressure?

ROME, Oct. 6.—(Via London.)—The German press, according to communications received here, thinks that Great Britain is using pressure to induce the Scandinavian countries, particularly Denmark, to abandon their neutrality and participate in the war against Germany.

The Deutsch Tage Zeitung of Berlin says it is rumored that many hostile ships have been seen in the Skagerrak and the Cattegat, adding, if these ships are British, it shows an intention to make threatening demonstrations against the Scandinavian states, particularly Denmark.

Essad Pasha Gets His Desire.

PARIS, Oct. 6.—A Havas despatch from Durazzo dated Oct. 4, says that the Senate has named Essad Pasha, president of the provisional government of Albania. His 10,000 Albanian troops occupy strategical positions in the city.

Essad Pasha was formerly Albanian Minister of War and was also commander-in-chief of the Turkish forces at Scutari in the Balkan war. He was opposed to the rule of Prince William of Wied, who was appointed to the Albanian throne by the powers.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

"He's a hard nut, eh? And won't stand for us—is that it?" He turned to the patriarch. "This Kamrou you're talking about doesn't want us, or our ideas, or anything? Well, see here. There's no use beating around the bush, now. This thing's going through, this plan of ours. And if Kamrou or anybody else gets in the way of it—good-bye for him!"

"You mean war?"

"War! And I know who'll win! And now, father, you get these men here to work again, or there'll be some sudden deaths around here!"

"Hearken, O my son! Already the feast of welcome to Kamrou is beginning, around the flame. See now, the boat of his messenger is close at hand, bidding all those in this party to hasten in, for homage. Kamrou will not endure divided power. Trust me now and I can save you yet. For the present, yield to him, or seem to, and—"

"Yield nothing!" fairly roared the engineer, angrier than he had ever been in his whole life. "This is my affair now! Nobody else butts in on it at all! To shore with these boats, you hear? or I begin shooting again! And if I do—"

"Allan!" cried the girl.

"Not a word! Only get your gun ready, that's all. We've got to handle this situation sharp, or it's all off! Come, father," he delivered his ultimatum to the patriarch; "come, order them ashore!"

The old man, anguished and tremulous, spoke a few words. Answers arose, here, there. He called something to the standing figure in the despatch boat, which slackened, stopped, turned and headed for the distant beach.

With some confusion the oarsmen of the fleet took up their task again. And now, in a grim silence, more disconcerting even than the previous uproar, the boats made way toward land.

Ten minutes later—minutes during which the two Americans kept their revolvers ready for instant action—the aeroplane began to drag on the bottom. Despite the crowd now gathered on the beach, very near at hand and ominously silent, Stern would not let the machine lie even here, in shallow water, where it could easily have been recovered at any time. Like a bulldog with its jaws set on an object, he clung to his original plan of landing the Pauillac at once.

And, standing up in the boat with his pistol levelled, he commanded them, through the mediumship of the patriarch, to shorten the ropes and paddle in still closer.

When the beach was only a few rods distant he gave orders that all should land, carrying the ropes with them. He himself was one of the first to wade ashore, with Beatrice.

Ignoring the silent, expectant crowd and the tall figure of Kamrou's messenger—who now stood, arms crossed, amazed, indignant, almost at the water's edge—he gave quick commands.

"Now, clear these boats away on both sides! Make a free space, here—so, that's right. Now, all you men get hold of the ropes—all of you, here, take hold, you! Ready, now! Give way, then! Out she comes! Out with her!"

The patriarch, standing in fear and keen anxiety beside him, transmitted the orders. Truly the old man's plight was hard, torn as he was between loyalty to the newcomers and terror of the implacable Kamrou. But Stern had no time to think of aught but the machine and his work.

For now already the great ungainly wings of the machine were wallowing up, up, out of the jetty waters; and now the body, now the engine showed, weed-festooned, smeared with mud and slime, a strange and awesome apparition in that blue and ghastly torch-flare, as the toiling men hauled it slowly, foot by foot, up the long slope of the beach.

Dense silence held the waiting throng; silence and awe, in face of this incomprehensible, tremendous thing.

Even the messenger spoke not a word. He had lost somewhat of his assurance, his pride and overbearing haughtiness. Perhaps he had already heard some tales of these interlopers' terrible weapons.

Stern saw the man's eyes follow the revolver, as he gestured with it; the high-lights gleaming along the barrel seemed to fascinate the tall barbarian. But still he drew no step backward. Still in silence, with crossed arms, he waited, watched and took counsel only with himself.

"Thank God, it's out at last!" exclaimed the engineer, and heaved a sigh of genuine, heartfelt relief. "See, Beatrice, there's our old machine again—and except for that broken rudder, this wing, here, bent, and the rent where the grapple tore the leather covering of the starboard plane, I can't see that it's taken any damage. Provided the engine's intact, the rest will be easy. Plenty of chance for metal-work, here, and—"

"Going to take it right up to the village, now?" queried she, anxiously glancing at the crowd of white and silent faces, all eagerly staring—staring like so many wraiths in a strange dream.

He shrugged his shoulders.

"That depends," he answered. He seemed already to have forgotten Kamrou and the threatening peril in the village, near the great flame. Even the sound of distant chanting and the thudding of dull drums stirred him not. Fascinated, he was walking all round the great mechanical bird, which now lay wounded, weed-covered, sodden and dripping, yet eloquent of infinite possibilities, there on that black, unearthly beach.

All at once he spoke.

"Up to the village with it!" he commanded, waving his pistol-hand toward the causeway and the fortified gates. "I can't risk leaving it here. Come, father, speak to them! It's got to go into the village right now!"

Then Kamrou's messenger, grasping the sense if not the words of the command, strode forward—a tall, lithe figure of a man, well-knit and hard of face. Under the torchlight the dilated pupils of his pinkish eyes seemed to shine as phosphorescent as a cat's.

Crying out something unintelligible to Stern, he blocked the way. Stern heard the name "Kamrou! Kamrou!"

"Well, what do you want now?" shouted the engineer, a huge and sudden anger seizing him. Already superexcited by the labours of the day and by the nervous strain of having recovered the sunken biplane, all this talk of Kamrou, all this persistent opposition just at the most inauspicious moment worked powerfully upon his irritated nerves.

Cool reason would have dictated diplomacy, parley, and, if possible, truce. But Stern could not believe the Folk, for so long apparently loyal to him and dominated by his influence, could work against their vital interest, and his own by deserting him now.

And, all his saner judgement failing him, heeding nothing of the patriarch's entreaties or of the girl's remonstrance as she caught his arm and tried to hold him back, he faced this cooly insolent barbarian.

"You, d——n you, what d'you want?" he cried again, his finger itching on the trigger of the automatic. "Think I'm going to quit for you, or Kamrou, or anybody? Quit, now?

"Think a civilized white man, sweating his heart out to save your people here, is going to knuckle under to any savage that happens to blow in and try to boss this job? If so, you've got another guess coming! Stand back, you, or you'll get cold lead in just one minute!"

Quick words passed from the old man to the messenger and back again. The patriarch cried again to him, and for a moment Stern saw the barbarian's eyes flicker uneasily toward the revolver. But the calm and cruel face never changed, nor did the savage take one step backward.

"All right, then!" shouted Stern, "seeing red" in his overpowering rage. "You want it—you'll get it—take it, so!"

Up he jerked the automatic, fair at the big barbarian's heart—a splendid target by the torchlight, not ten feet distant; a sure shot.

But before he could pull the trigger the strange two-pronged torch was tossed on high by somebody behind the messenger, and through the dull and foggy gloom a wild, fierce, penetrant cry wailed piercingly.

Came a shooting, numbing pain in Stern's right elbow. The arm dropped, helpless. The boulder which, flung with accurate aim, had destroyed his aim, rolled at his feet. The pistol clattered over the wet, shining stones.

Stern, cursing madly, leaped and snatched for it with the other hand.

Before he could even reach it a swift foot tripped him powerfully. Headlong he fell. And in a second one of the very ropes that had been used to drag the Pauillac from the depths was lashed about his wrists, his ankles, his struggling, fighting body.

"Beatrice! Shoot! Kill!" he shouted. "Help here! Help! The machine—they'll wreck it! Everything—lost! Help!"

His speech died in a choking mumble, stifled by the wet and sodden gag they forced into his mouth.

About him the mob seethed. Through his brain a quick anguish thrilled, the thought of Beatrice unaided and alone. Then came a wonder when the death-stroke would fall—a frightful, sick despair that on the very eve of triumph, of salvation for this Folk and for the world as well as for Beatrice and himself, this unforeseen catastrophe should have befallen.

He struggled still to catch some glimpse of Beatrice, to cry aloud to her, to shield her; but, alone against five hundred, he was powerless.

Nowhere could he catch even a glimpse of the girl. In that shoving, pushing, shouting, horde, nothing could be made out. He knew not even whether civil war had blazed or whether all alike had owned the rule of Kamrou the Terrible.

Like buoys tossing upon the surface of a raging sea, the flaring torches pitched and danced, rose and fell. And from a multitude of throats, from beach and causeway, walls and town, strange shouts rang up into the all-embracing, vague, enshrouding vapour.

Still striving to fight, bound as he was, he felt a great force driving him along, on, on, up the beach and toward the village.

Mute, desperate, stark mad, he knew the Folk were half carrying, half dragging him up the causeway.

As in a dark dream, he vaguely saw the great fortified gate with its huge, torch-lighted monolithic lintel. Even upon this some of the Folk were crowded now to watch the strange, incredible spectacle of the man who had once turned the tide of battle against the Lanskaarn and had saved all their lives, now halted like a criminal back into the community he had rescued in its hour of sorest need.

His mind leaped to their first entry into the village—it seemed months ago—also as prisoners. In a flash he recalled all that had happened srince and bitterly he mocked himself for having dared to dream that their influence had really altered these strange, barbarous souls or uplifted them, or taught them anything at all.

"Now, now just as the rescue of these people was at hand, just as the machine might have carried us and them back into the world, slowly, one by one—now comes defeat and death!"

An exceeding great bitterness filled his soul once more at this harsh, cynic turn of fate. But most of all he yearned toward Beatrice. That he should die mattered nothing; but the thought of this girl perishing at their hands there in the lost Abyss was dreadful as the pangs of all the fabled hells.

Again he fought to hold back, to try for some sight, even a fleeting glimpse of Beatrice; but the Folk with harsh cries drove him roughly forward.

He could not even see the patriarch. All was confusion, glare, smoke, noise, as he was thrust through the fortified gate, out into the thronged plaza.

Everywhere rose cries, shouts, vociferations, among which he could distinguish only one a thousand times repeated: "Kamrou! Kamrou!"

And through all his rage and bitter bafflement and pain, a sudden great desire welled up in him to see this chief of the Folk, at last—to lay eyes on this formidable, this terrible one—to stand face to face with him in whose hand now lay everything, Kamrou!

Across the dim, fog-covered expanse of the plaza he saw the blue-green shimmer of the great flame.

Thither, toward that strange, eternal fire and the ghastly circle of the headless skeletons the Folk were drifting now. Thither his captors were dragging him.

And there, he knew, Kamrou awaited Beatrice and him. There doom was to be dealt out to them. There, and at once!

Thicker the press became. The flame was very near now, its droning roar almost drowning the great and growing babel of cries.

On, on the Folk bore him. All at once he saw again that two-pronged torch raised before him, going ahead; and a way cleared through the press.

Along this way he was carried, no longer struggling, but eager now to know the end, to meet it bravely and with calm philosophy, "as nis a man."

And quite at once he found himself in sight of the many dangling skeletons. Now the quivering jet of flame grew visible. Now, suddenly, he was thrust forward into a smooth and open space. Silence fell.

Before him he saw Kamrou, Kamrou the Terrible, at last.

HOW THIN PEOPLE CAN PUT ON FLESH

A New Discovery

Thin men and women—that big, hearty filling dinner you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation, are sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.

Cut out the foolish foods and fussy pawdust diets. Omit the flesh cream rub-ons. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating now and eat with every one of them a single Sargol tablet. In two weeks note the difference. Five to eight good solid pounds of healthy "stay there" fat should be the net result. Sargol charges your weak, stagnant blood with millions of fresh new red blood corpuscles—gives the blood the carrying power to deliver every ounce of fat-making material in your food to every part of your body. Sargol, too, mixes with your food and prepares it for the blood in easily assimilated form. Thin people gain all the way from 10 to 25 pounds a month while taking Sargol, and the new flesh stays put. Sargol tablets are a scientific combination of six of the best flesh-producing elements known to chemistry. They come 40 tablets to a package, are pleasant, harmless and inexpensive, and all druggists sell them, this to an absolute guarantee of weight increase or money back.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

"An apple each day keeps the doctor away." At least that is what some people tell us. Without a doubt the apple is a wholesome food, easily prepared, attractive, and because of its keeping qualities many are enabled to take advantage of its food value.

For preserving, the tart apples are best. In the fall and early winter apples are, of course, at their best, but on later in the year, if spices are added when preserving, the flavor is much improved.

There are many different ways of preparing apples for serving. Some months ago the Northumberland and Durham Apple Growers' Association issued a small pamphlet containing 100 apple recipes. Of course, it is possible for us to publish only a few of these splendid recipes in our limited space.

APPLE COBBLER.

Pare and quarter enough tart apples to fill a baking dish three-fourths full. Cover with a rich baking powder biscuit dough made soft enough to stir, spread over the apples without rolling. Make several cuts in centre to allow steam to escape. Bake three-quarters of an hour. Serve when hot with sugar and cream.

APPLES STUFFED WITH FIGS.

Pare and core large apples; fill the centres with chopped figs, cover with sugar, place in a deep baking dish, and add a little water; bake, basting frequently. Serve cold with cream.

APPLES IN MAPLE SYRUP.

Cut eight apples in halves and remove the cores with a teaspoon, put into a baking pan with one cup of maple syrup and one and one-half cups water and two tablespoons of butter. Bake until the syrup is thick, and serve with whipped cream.

SAUSAGES AND FRIED APPLES.

Prick the sausages well with a fork. Place in a deep frying pan, pour in enough boiling water to cover the bottom; cover and cook over a moderate fire. When the water evaporates, remove the cover and turn several times, that they may be nicely browned. Turn on to a platter. Core a number of large tart apples, cut in rings an inch thick, and fry in the sausage fat.

Makes good baking a certainty instead of a matter of luck. No guesswork cooking with

MOOSE HUNT TO ORDER

HOW VAN HORNE FURNISHED SPORT TO TWO WRITERS.

He Didn't Know Where to Find a Moose, But He Warned Them Not to Make a Slaughter — Turned Them Over to Pat Murphy and Patrick Did the Rest—Five Moose Just On the Railway Track!

Sir William Van Horne, of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, once told Mr. J. E. Barrett how he furnished Julian Ralph and the late Frederick Remington a complete moose hunt, which was duly described and depicted in Harper's Magazine, a few years ago. Then the moose were theirs, were shot, and photographed, but how they happened to be there is another story. Mr. Barrett quotes Sir William as follows in The Lumberman (Minneapolis):

I was sitting in the office one day when two cards were brought in bearing the names of Julian Ralph and Frederick Remington. I knew the names and told my secretary to show the gentlemen in. They came, and presented a letter from Harper's Magazine, from which it appeared that they had been sent, the one to write and the other to illustrate a Canadian moose hunt. The editor of Harper's Magazine asked me to show them any courtesies which would assist them in their object.

Now I hadn't a notion whether there was a single blest moose along the whole line of the Canadian Pacific, but I wasn't going to say so to two men from New York. So—

"I understand, gentlemen," I said, "that you have come here to shoot moose." They said that was the case.

"Well, now," I continued, "I suppose that I can take it for granted that you are gentlemen and have the proper sporting instinct. If I turn you loose you are not going to go slaughtering our moose and filling the woods with blood?"

No, no, no; they wouldn't think of such a thing.

"You don't propose to decimate our herds of these noble animals?"

"Why, certainly not."

"I presume that one good bull moose apiece would satisfy you?" And their eyes glistened as they said that indeed it would. "On that understanding," I said, "I'll give you a letter to one agent at Mattawa."

The reason why I chose him was because if there was a moose to be found in Canada Pat Murphy was the man to find it when told to. If there wasn't a moose in the country, I knew he could take a joke. So I wrote:

Dear Murphy:—This will introduce to you Frederick Remington, the well-known artist, and Julian Ralph, the equally well-known writer, who have come in the interest of Harper's Magazine to describe and illustrate a moose hunt. They have promised not to kill too many of the noble animals, but will be content with getting one good bull moose apiece. I trust to you to see that they get them. Yours, etc.

Now it was up to Murphy.

I had forgotten all about the matter in the press of business, when a couple of weeks or so later, the same two cards were brought to me again and once more I met Mr. Ralph and Mr. Remington. They were delighted. Had they got their mooses, or meese, or whatever it is? Of course they had. They had had a simply glorious time, and couldn't say enough in thanks to me or in praise of Murphy. In due course, the article appeared in Harper's. One of them sent me a copy, and a rattling good article it was, pictures and all. But what puzzled me was how it had all happened. Murphy told me some time later.

When they arrived with my letter he didn't know whether there was a moose within five hundred miles. He hadn't heard of one for ten years, but he wasn't going to give us away to any New Yorkers any more than I was. Besides, I had said that he was to see that these men got their moose, and he proposed to do it.

He made excuse that his best hunters happened to be away for a few days and it would be necessary to wait till they came back. Then he sent out runners. He sent them to every point of the compass to start the Indians beating the woods towards Mattawa. Seldom does how

SALTS FINE FOR ACHING KIDNEYS

We Eat Too Much Meat Which Clogs Kidneys, Then the Back Hurts

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless in flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

many Indians and others he got to work, but they beat for all that was in them. From somewhere up in the Arctic regions, from east to west, the entire population of the country came converging toward Mattawa, with a distinct understanding all along the line that any man who let a moose through would be shot out of hand.

It took six days, but they got 'em. By the evening of the sixth day, men came in and told Murphy that they had five moose, two bulls and three cows, safely cornered ten miles off in the woods. So Murphy announced that his hunters had come back, and would be ready to go out next day.

They went. The skill those men showed in reading the moose signs impressed Ralph and Remington as simply marvellous. Within a few hours they were on the track of a herd of five, and early next morning one of the ambitions of the lives of both was realised, for each had shot with his own rifle a good Canadian bull moose.

Within a few miles of the line of the railroad, to strike off at random into the woods and pick up moose as if they were prairie-chickens—what a paradise for hunters!

ROYAL ETIQUETTE IN JAPAN.

A Member of the Imperial Family Can Die Only in Tokyo.

Surely there never was a more grim journey made than that of the dowager empress of Japan when she came for the last time to Tokyo.

She had died in her palace in the country. But the Japanese hold that a member of the imperial family can die nowhere except in Tokyo. Therefore the dead empress, theoretically still alive, journeyed from her country place to the palace in Tokyo with all the ceremonial that attended her movements when living.

She traveled in the royal railway car and was driven through the streets to the palace in a court carriage with the blinds closely drawn. The ministers and high state officials who greeted the train at the station as usual and aboard it in no way that on this occasion they were meeting the corpse of the empress.

Troops lined the streets and presented arms as she passed. Only the great crowds in the streets, parading in silence instead of loudly cheering, betrayed the fact that the imperial carriage contained a dead woman.—New York Sun.

Willing Hands Well.

An interesting example of a man writing himself well is that of "Orlando" Walton. The thing was the work of a moment. He had been reading Cicero's "De Oratore," and some passage suggested to him the expediency of making the improvement of his health his study. "I rose from my book," he writes, "stood bolt upright and determined to be well. In pursuance of my resolution I tried many extremes, was guilty of many absurdities and committed many errors amid the remonstrances and ridicule of those around me. I persevered, nevertheless, and it is now, I believe, full eighteen years since I have had any medical advice or taken any medicine or anything whatever by way of medicine."—London Chronicle.

Swam Too Long.

The attorneys for the prosecution and defense had been allowed fifteen minutes each to argue the case. The attorney for the defense had commenced his argument with an allusion to the swimming hole of his boyhood days. He told in flowery oratory of the balmy air, the singing birds, the joy of youth, the delights of the cool water. And in the midst of it he was interrupted by the drawling voice of the judge. "Come out, Chauncey," he said, "and put on your clothes. Your fifteen minutes are up."

BECOMING A BRITON.

Easy For Aliens to Acquire Citizenship in England.

A large number of aliens become British subjects every year by taking advantage of the naturalisation act. The process of taking out naturalisation papers in England is delightfully simple. An application can be put through in a couple of weeks if good and sufficient reasons can be shown, while the average time elapsing between application for a certificate of naturalization and the granting of permission to file the oath of allegiance to the king with the home office, which automatically confers British citizenship, is only about eight weeks.

The naturalisation act of 1870 requires that the applicant shall have resided in the United Kingdom at least five years and shall intend, when naturalised, to continue to reside here.

The lease of a house or an apartment is sufficient to establish legal residence. The landlord's word is taken as sufficient proof. The applicant has merely to fill in a blank with the details of his residence and other information and have the facts as to his residence verified by one British subject, while the applicant's respectability and loyalty must be vouched for by others. He then files the application with a £1 fee at the home office.

A special Scotland Yard detective is assigned to inquire into the case and examine all the statements on the applicant's memorial. Three months is allowed him, in which to make his report, but a few weeks usually suffice. If the application is passed another fee of £2 is required. The applicant then has permission to file his oath of allegiance, which concludes the process.—London Tit-Bits.

CUT THE ARMY RED TAPE.

Willich Knew His Men and They Knew Him and That Settled It.

There are times when the so called "red tape" of the army gives way under the stress of circumstances. At the battle of Chickamauga General Willich, who was commanding a brigade, incurred the displeasure of General Rosecrans, the commanding general, by some slight omission. General Willich was sent for and informed by the general commanding that he must consider himself under arrest for the present.

"You may leave your sword here," added Rosecrans, "until your case is tried."

"Yes, general, I will consider myself under arrest," was the reply, "and just as soon as this engagement is over, I'll come and fix up the matter."

"But, sir," said the astounded Rosecrans, "I want you to consider yourself under arrest now."

"Of course I do," responded Willich promptly, "and just as soon as this fight is over I'll see that the matter is arranged."

"But, sir," expostulated the commanding general, "I can't let you go into this fight. You are under arrest. I will assign an officer to your brigade."

"You send an officer to command my boys!" cried Willich indignantly. "He can't command them! They don't know him! They know me—I can teach them. None of my boys would know how to fight or what to do unless I was with them. My boys belong to me. Yes, me, General Willich! I command the brigade, and I must fight the brigade!"

General Rosecrans gave it up. General Willich was requested to return "and fight his boys," which he did most successfully. And that was the end of the matter.—Washington Star.

A Puritan Jury.

That the Puritan fashion of nomenclature produced some very odd results is very generally known. The London Chronicle recalls that James Brome, in his "Travels Over England, Scotland and Wales," published in 1700, gives a copy of a "Jury Return, Made at Rye, Sussex, in the Late Rebellious Troublesome Times."

The names of the twelve good men and true were: Meek Brewer, Graceful Harding, Elisha Pimple, Earth Adams, Weepnot Billing, More Fruit Fowler, Hope-for Bending, Return Spelman, Fly Debate Roberts, Stand Fast on High Stringer, Be Faithful Joiner and Fight the Good Fight of Faith White.

Tax on Hats.

Not only have hats at various times been subject to taxation, but have even been made the subject of special laws. Thus in Henry VII.'s reign none was allowed to sell hats at a larger price than 20 pence or caps for more than 2s. 8d.

Some compensation, however, for this interference with free trade could be found in the fact that in 1571 on Sundays and holidays every one above seven years of age was required to wear a cap of wool of English make under penalty of 3 farthings' tithe for every day's neglect.—London Chronicle.

How To Get Rid of a Bad Cough

A Home-Made Remedy that Will Do It Quickly. Cheap and Easily Made

If you have a bad cough or chest cold which refuses to yield to ordinary remedies, get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth), pour into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Start taking a teaspoonful every hour or two. In 24 hours your cough will be conquered or very nearly so. Even whooping cough is greatly relieved in this way.

The above mixture makes 16 ounces—a family supply—of the finest cough syrup that money could buy—at a cost of only 54 cents. Easily prepared in 5 minutes. Full directions with Pinex.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup preparation takes right hold of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough in a way that is really remarkable. It also quickly heals the inflamed membranes which accompany a painful cough, and stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough. Excellent for bronchitis, spasmodic croup and winter coughs. Keeps perfectly and tastes good—children like it.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the mucous membranes.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex,"—do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

An Army Court Martial

There Was Not Much in It at First, but a Good Deal in the End

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Colonel Auchincloss of the United States army was a stickler for army etiquette, discipline and other such matters as pertain to military life. He was in the artillery, and a colonel of artillery in the regular army is a very big man. Then, too, Colonel Auchincloss commanded a big fort on the Atlantic coast, and that made him a bigger man still. Outside the fort was a collection of hotels used by persons from all over the United States as recreation resorts, all of whom looked up to the colonel commanding the fort as a sovereign.

One day when dress parade was taking place inside the fort, witnessed by flocks of persons from the hotels outside—principally young ladies—the colonel left his office to go to his domestic quarters. As he was passing the line the band "beat off," marching before the men, turning and marching back again, what for no one knows except that it has been a part of the ceremony of dress parade for an indefinitely long period.

A MINOR FLY LET ON THE ORGAN.

Lieutenant Bob Phillips was adjutant of the post. Now, the adjutant is an important man at all military ceremonies, especially dress parade. As Colonel Auchincloss passed Lieutenant Phillips was standing, like all the rest, stiff as a ramrod, while the band was marching back and forth. Lieutenant Phillips was suffering at the time from a sore spot on the tip of his nose. It so happened that a hungry fly lit on the organ and, finding such sustenance in the sore spot as especially suited its taste, began to pull lustily.

There are nerves in noses, especially on the under side. The agony endured by the adjutant was excruciating. Nevertheless, owing to the important part he took in the military ceremony he was the last man on the ground who should infringe upon military discipline by raising his hand to shoo away the fly. Such a breach of uniformity would be especially noticeable in every one and if made by the adjutant would constitute a frightful example to the rest of the corps on parade.

Furthermore, it was expected that every man would be at "eyes front." Phillips held his eyes in that position rigidly. Consequently he did not see the approach of his commander on his right. Just before the colonel came within his range of vision Phillips' agony had passed the limit of human endurance, and his hand went up to brush off the fly.

Colonel Auchincloss stopped, cast a terrible glance at the transgressor and passed on. Phillips saw him and knew that he was doomed. He was then preparing for examination for his promotion to be captain and felt sure that such a flagrant breach of discipline as raising a hand to brush a fly from a sore spot on his nose would be a great detriment to his attaining the rank to which he aspired.

The next day Phillips was obliged to read on parade an order relieving himself of the duties of adjutant of the post and appointing another in his place. After the ceremony he went to his quarters wishing that he might be permitted to challenge the colonel and run him through to the hilt. Persons suffer by their mistakes, their misfortunes, and injustice. It is only in the last of these cases that rebellion can possibly be advisable, and even then to grin and bear it is usually the best policy. Lieutenant Phillips was in a sense obliged to do this, but a spirit of animosity toward the colonel was engendered in him which promised to burst into a flame and bring on an army scandal.

Now, it happened that Colonel Auchincloss, who, notwithstanding his age, was a bachelor, and Lieutenant Phillips unknown to each other had intentions with regard to a young lady who was stopping at one of the hotels outside the military reservation. What a fly had started a woman developed. Miss Marjory Dressler was much flattered at the attentions of the mighty commander and much pleased with those of his subordinate. As soon as it became evident to both officers that they were rivals the fire burned hotter in the breast of the younger, and the older drew a tighter rein in his official intercourse with his inferior.

Then came Lieutenant Phillips' examination for promotion, and, owing partly to his being absorbed by love rather than his studies and partly from the breach of discipline for which his colonel had reduced him from the position of adjutant, he was denied a captain's commission.

The young man, conceiving that this deprivation was the result of the colonel's animosity toward him, preferred charges against him for tyrannical treatment.

The commander of the department in which all this happened was an uncle of Miss Marjory Dressler. His official position prevented his expressing any opinion in the matter, but his wife, not being similarly handicapped, took a secret part in the proceedings. Miss Dressler was her sister's child, and the young lady, inasmuch as she was in doubt whether she would marry the colonel or the lieutenant, would one day influence her aunt toward the defendant, the next toward the plaintiff. The former being a prominent artillery officer, that arm of the service took great interest in the trial, some siding with and some against their comrade of the big guns.

Of course the officers' families took great interest in the trial, and, as there is intercourse between the different corps, the trouble spread to the infantry, cavalry and the staff corps. Thus by the time the court was ready to try the case the whole army was involved.

The members assembled in full uniform. The first proceeding was the reading of the charge, which was tyranny, and the specifications, which were very numerous. The first specification began thus:

"In this, that on or about the —th day of —, 19—, the said plaintiff being on dress parade, a fly lighted on his nose, the organ being very sore and painfully tender"—

At this point the president of the court interposed.

"Whoever drew that specification should be cashiered. Lieutenant Phillips is not being tried because a fly lighted on his nose. Colonel Auchincloss is being tried on a charge of tyranny."

It was explained to the president, who was so much of a soldier that he could not be anything of a lawyer, that this incident of a fly lighting on the adjutant's nose was the beginning of the trouble, whereupon he was satisfied, and the reading proceeded.

There was one matter that could not be introduced into the trial. That was the rivalry between plaintiff and defendant for the hand of Miss Dressler. But everybody knew that this had added fuel to the flame till the fly that had lighted on the adjutant's nose had been put entirely in the background. When the trial began and all through the army the question was asked, "What's this rumpus between Colonel Auchincloss and Phillips?" the reply was invariably, "Why, you see, a fly lit on Phillips' nose when he was on dress parade," etc. But after awhile when the question was asked the reply would be, "No one knows, but if you want to get at the bottom of the matter you'll have to look for a woman in the case."

It was found necessary to bring witnesses (at government expense) from the uttermost points of the world, and when a witness was summoned it was necessary to wait for his or her arrival. So the case dragged and was very expensive till at last it was found necessary to ask congress for a special appropriation to carry it on. The matter was then taken up by the secretary of war, who sent for the judge advocate of the court and asked him to give the facts. The judge advocate began:

"Why, you see, Mr. Secretary, when Lieutenant Phillips was on dress parade a fly lit on a sore spot on the end of his nose."

"I haven't time for that!" snapped the secretary. "Give me the gist of it."

"There's no gist to it."

"Isn't there some way of getting rid of it?"

"That depends."

"On what?"

"A woman."

The secretary was informed that the rancor was kept up by a niece of the commander of the department who couldn't make up her mind whether she wished to marry the colonel or the lieutenant.

"Go tell her to come to me—that I have something nice for her."

Miss Dressler answered the summons in person and expectantly.

"What is your ambition?" asked the secretary.

"To be the wife of a military attache at a foreign court."

"Name the man you wish for a husband and he shall be appointed."

"Lieutenant Bob Phillips."

"That will do. Good morning."

The next day Lieutenant Phillips withdrew his charges against Colonel Auchincloss, and an order was published promoting him and relieving the military attache on duty at Paris and appointing Captain Phillips in his stead.

There are those who give Mrs. Phillips' part in this celebrated army case a deeper import than appears on the surface. These persons maintain that she had some sort of an ax to grind, and if not from the first at least from the moment it appeared that the trial was a burden to the government she put the ax on the grindstone. Be this as it may, it is always dangerous for a woman to discover that she holds the balance of power.

When accused of this the lady smiles and says, "Let those laugh who laugh last."

THE BATTLE OF MARATHON.

And the Mound Under Which the Ole Grecian Heroes Rest.

A great Grecian landmark is the Soros, the mound erected over the graves of 192 Athenians who fell in the battle of Marathon, Aug. 12, 490 B. C. The mound is about forty feet high and 200 yards in circumference. Underneath the mound lie the heroes who died in this most decisive victory which prevented the Persians from invading Europe.

The battle had hardly begun when the Persians in immensely superior force, doubtless ten to one, pulled themselves together and by sheer mass broke through the Greek center. But this had been calculated upon beforehand. Miltiades employed strategy, making his line weak at the center, and allowed the Persians to break in. Then, with his heavy masses at the ends, he ground the Persian wings to pieces and fell upon their center. The most stubborn fighting, apart from the battle at the ships, was probably at this spot, half a mile from the shore. Six thousand four hundred Persians lay on this plain and along the shore, while 192 men of Marathon lay wrapped in glory on the field.

It was long suspected that the heroes of Marathon were buried under the mound, but Mr. Stais, one of the Greek ephori of antiquities, studying the plain, came to the conclusion that the surface of the soil had been raised by alluvial deposits eight to ten feet above the level of 490 B. C. In 1890 he drove a trench with a downward slant into the center of the mound and found the bones of the heroes with their weapons beside them.—Strand Magazine.

A WEAK HEART

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use flood the system with rich, red vitalizing blood. This is Nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to secure lasting benefits.

SINKING SHIPS.

If Completely Submerged They Must Go to the Bottom.

Answering a correspondent who writes: "I am very anxious to find out whether a ship will sink if the bottom of the ocean is at great depth or, at least, at such depth that the weight of the water would be greater than the weight of the ship. It is the opinion of many that at a certain depth the ship would remain suspended instead of sinking to the bottom. Please explain the exact truth of the matter," Edgar Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

"Any mass that will entirely sink below the surface of the ocean will sink to the bottom of any sea or ocean on earth. This is because water is almost incompressible.

"Enormous pressure in hydraulic presses has been made upon distilled and also upon sea water, and the diminution of volume—that is, increase of density—is only 0.0044 for every water for each atmosphere, i. e., each addition of fifteen pounds to each square inch. Then water soaked wood would be increased in density by very nearly the same amount.

"Hence if all of the wood in a wood en ship sinks below the surface it must go to the bottom. The question of reaching the bottom of the ocean is decided for any kind of matter of any ship or boat by its behavior at the surface. If all of the material of the boat sinks at all below the surface, then it will fall to the bottom of any sea, there being such a slight increase in density of water at the bottom of the deepest ocean."

Getting Results.

"I've tried to make the housemaid pay for what she breaks. But it does not seem to do any good."

"Try my plan."

"What is it?"

"I offered mine a bonus for what she doesn't break."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

ORIGIN OF METALS

Varied Theories as to How the Ores Are Formed.

NATURE HIDES THE SECRET.

Science Has For Centuries Tried to Wrest It From Her, but Geologists and Mineralogists Are as Yet Unable to Agree Upon the Process.

You have read of that legendary Indian who while chasing game on a Bolivian mountain side seized a bush to prevent himself from falling, and, the bush being pulled loose from its scanty hold on the rocks, he saw its crooked roots grasping masses of gleaming white ore and thus became the discoverer of the famous silver mines of Potosi.

You have also read, perhaps with itching fingers, of prospectors picking up nuggets of gold worth a thousand dollars each or opening veins of quartz all shot through with heavy threads of the yellow metal.

You know that ores of gold and silver or of any other precious or useful metal are not to be found in everybody's back yard, but must be sought for in certain favored parts of the earth.

But has your intelligent curiosity ever led you to inquire how those ores came to be where they are and nowhere else? Have you ever wondered what makes a gold nugget?

Possibly you think that gold and other metals grow somewhat as fruits do—in soils and climates that are specially suited to them. Well, there is considerable truth in that idea, and the word "grew" is, in one sense, surprisingly applicable to such deposits.

But there is a great deal more in the matter than you would imagine, and as no subject has science fought more battles royal than on this of the origin of metallic ores. I think that there are some geologists who would rather find out this secret to the very bottom than discover the richest lode that the ribs of the earth contain. If they could do both that would be perfection, and we must not forget that knowledge is power.

Until about 400 years ago everybody who thought about it at all believed that veins of precious ore were distributed under the influence of the planets. At that time astrology held the place of science.

Finally George Agricola, a German mineralogist, who lived about the time when the gold and silver of Mexico and Peru were making Spain the temporary mistress of the world, hit upon a theory which came in substance very near the truth. He taught that water, penetrating into the earth and becoming heated, took up scattered minerals in solution and afterward deposited them as ores in cavities in the rocks. The mineral solutions he called the earth's "juices."

A couple of hundred years later the German geologist Werner set forth a view that became very famous under the name of the "Neptunist theory," from Neptune, the god of the sea. Werner's idea was that as the earth cooled down from the primeval nebula out of which it was formed it was enveloped in a universal hot ocean, holding in solution all kinds of minerals, and that when the rocky crust was formed the water leaking down into it deposited its metallic contents by chemical precipitation in veins and lodes wherever the circumstances were favorable.

But a hundred years ago the Neptunist theory, which had swept everything before it in the minds of men of science, met its Waterloo at the hands of Hutton, the Scottish geologist, with his "Plutonic" theory (from Pluto, the god of the infernal regions). Hutton's idea was that the materials which fill the metallic veins were melted by heat and forcibly injected into the clefts and fissures of the strata from below.

The "Neptunists" and "Plutonists" had a hard fight, with the latter holding the upper hand, until their theory had assumed a kind of compromise form, with water again playing the principal role. The American geologist, Van Hise, is the author of one of the latest theories, according to which meteoric water (condensed atmospheric vapor) penetrates deep into the earth's crust, and, with steadily increasing temperature, takes up mineral matter into solution. Spreading, as it gets deeper, the water reaches larger openings in the rocky crust, in which it accumbs, with decreasing temperature and pressure.

There it deposits the ores, whose materials it has collected in its wanderings and carried along in solution.

But this is not the last word, and in recent years there has been a partial reaction toward the Plutonist theory. Besides, a great deal seems to depend upon the nature of the ore whose origin is in question.—Garrett P. Serviss in New York Journal.

"When I began this treatment I could not rest in bed, except by sitting upright, on account of the dreadful pains about the heart and the quick, loud beating. The change which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has made in my condition is wonderful. It has entirely overcome these symptoms, and is making me strong and well. If this statement will help to relieve the suffering of others, you are at liberty to use it."

GILLETT'S LYE EATS DIRT

ENGINEER TOOK SUBMARINE.

Left Note With Italian Builders That He Had Gone To Aid Russia.

ROME, Oct. 6.—The shipbuilding firm of Sangiorgio Shezia has informed the Italian Government that one of its engineers, accompanied by 15 workmen has seized a submarine being constructed for Russian and disappeared leaving a note saying they desire to fight in Russia's behalf.

The Government has sent a torpedo boat in chase of the submarine, but the pursuit has so far been ineffectual.

The submarine lacks stores. It has a tonnage of 200, and a speed maximum of 13 knots an hour.

Despite the secrecy which was attempted it has become known that the submarine disappeared Sunday afternoon, on the pretext that it was leaving to conduct wireless experiments. It cost about $75,000.

The task of conducting an official inquiry has been intrusted to Vice-Admiral Nicastro.

When the Liver Gets Torpid

There is Nothing Like Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to Set it Right.

Mrs. C. L. Cook, 240 Tenth street, Brandon, Man., writes:—"I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for the last four years for liver trouble, and can say that I have had great satisfaction and help from them. I find that I do not need any doctor if I use them when the liver gets torpid, and believe that they are exactly suited for my case. My husband has used them for kidney trouble with good results, and my daughter in Winnipeg has been helped a great deal by the use of these pills. We say we can't keep house without them, and have cheated the doctors here out of a good many visits. I think Dr. Chase's medicines are just the thing, and have recommended them to many people who have used them with good results."

By keeping the liver active and the bowels regular Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills prevent and cure such disorders as biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and headache. One pill a dose, 25c a box, 5 for $1.00; all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co. Limited, Toronto.

FIGHTING IN AFRICA.

East Indian Soldiers Assist In Repulsing German Raids.

LONDON, Oct. 6. — Successes of British forces in Africa over Germans are told in an official announcement made yesterday afternoon by the War Office. The announcement is as follows:

"During September a number of engagements took place on the Anglo-German boundary of the East African Protectorate. The activity has been due to the efforts of the Germans to raid the British territory and to cut the Uganda Railway. With the exception of one important frontier station by a small party of the enemy, the entry of which it was inexpedient to oppose, all the attempts at invasion by the Germans have been repulsed.

"The normal garrisons of the East African Uganda Protectorate have been strengthened by powerful bodies of Indian troops and by mounted and unmounted volunteers, raised locally.

"One of the earliest moves of the enemy was an attempt to blow up the Uganda Railway at Maungu. The invading party was broken up before it did any damage. Their dynamite was captured after a hot engagement.

"An engagement occurred on Sept. 6, at Taave, in which the enemy was severely handled and eventually repulsed. The Indian troops showed conspicuous bravery.

"A second German force of 400, including 50 Europeans, occupied Kisii on Sept. 11. A British column engaged the Germans the next day, but was compelled to retire.

"Germans abandoned Kisii on Sept. 13, and retired to Karungu, which they later evacuated.

"Activities were recommenced in the Taave region on Sept. 20. The Germans attacked at dawn, but were beaten after two hours exchange of rifle fire. The conduct of the King's African Rifles was splendid.

"The Germans attacked the British outposts at Majoreni on Sept. 23 and were repulsed. Further fighting occurred on Sept. 28.

"In engagements near Magadi and at Msima on Sept. 26 the enemy was repulsed with heavy loss."

THE VALUE OF THE NAVY.

Supremacy of the British Fleet Has Justified Itself.

Public opinion in Great Britain is beginning to realize the enormous value of the services rendered already in the war by the British Navy. The Naval and Military Record remarks on the fearful anticipations which in the few days before the war began filled all the United Kingdom that British shipping would be ruined and supplies of food and raw materials cut off. "The most careful inquiry, said the Naval and Military Record, "tended to confirm this anticipation. It was felt that we dare not—so great were the risks—be optimistic. In the months immediately preceding the outbreak of hostilities a sub-committee of the Committee of Imperial Defence considered in every detail the problem of how the people of the United Kingdom were to be fed during war time. With the most expert evidence at their command, they came to the conclusion that the peril was a real one, and that the Government ought to take precautionary measures in order to minimize it. One of the first acts of Mr. Asquith's Administration, when war was inevitable, was to announce that the Government itself would take 80 per cent. of the risk which shipping would run under the war conditions which were then developing. A war risk office was immediately opened and a rate of five per cent. quoted. Day by day followed, and though it was known that several German cruisers were still at large, no news was received of any loss. Gradually the confidence of shipowners and shippers was re-established. Private firms showed no hesitation in undertaking war risks, the premium fell from five to four guineas, and eventually it was brought down to three guineas. Even at this figure underwriters were prepared to undercut the Government office. British shipping, which was at first disorganized by the dramatic circumstances under which war occurred, has since been resuming its normal course. As a nation we may congratulate ourselves on the astounding victory which a supreme fleet won in insuring to us ample supplies of food and raw material without striking a blow. Never was so remarkable a demonstration given of the vital importance of sea power to a people who live by and on the sea. The navy opened up a pathway for British trade, and at the same time and by the same process strangled the overseas trade of Germany."

A Link of Empire.

Another link in the bonds of Empire was forged the other day when the Tasmanian Government presented a gold watch, suitably inscribed to Constable Walter Lygo, who, while on duty in London, some months ago found a young Tasmanian seaman named George Johansen in a starving condition and assisted him with both food and money. The people on the West Coast of Tasmania, where Johansen's parents lived, desired to make some recognition of Constable Lygo's kindness and opened a subscription for the purchase of a testimonial.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Oct 5.—Severe drought in Australia had much to do today with making the wheat market ascend. The outcome was a firm close at ⅝c to ¾c above Saturday night's level. Corn left ⅝c to ⅞c net; oats finished ¼c off, and provisions irregular, varying from 27½c decline to a rise of 3½c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 5.—A bull market, with a good demand for all grades of grain and a fair export trade, marked the opening of the week. Wheat prices opened ¼c to ⅝c higher. There was a heavy decrease in world's shipments from last year—bad news from Australia and Argentina, a heavy decrease in local receipts and a $65,000,000-bushel deficit in Europe—so the bulls came down with their horns on. Closing prices were ⅝c to 1⅛c higher for wheat, unchanged to ⅛c higher for oats, and 1⅛c to 2⅛c lower for flax.

Cash prices: Wheat—No. 1 northern, $1.07; No. 2 do., $1.05⅝; No. 3 do., 98½c; No. 4, 92c; No. 5, 87½c; No. 6, 83½c; feed, 77c.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Oct. 5.—Business in all lines of grain over the cable today was quiet owing to continued limited demand and the best bids from London for No. 1 northern wheat were 41s 3d. The local trade in oats is quiet, the demand being only for small lots to fill actual wants and as the offerings are fairly liberal, prices are lower all round. Argentine corn in car lots is selling at 68c per bushel ex-store. There is some demand for Ontario malting barley at a decline of 2c to 4c per bushel. The market for rolled oats is stronger in spite of the weakness in the raw material, and prices have advanced 40c per barrel.

In winter wheat flour the feeling is weaker and prices have declined 25c per barrel owing to more liberal offerings. Spring wheat flour is very quiet for both export and domestic account. The trade in millfeed is also slow as buyers are well supplied.

The butter market is quiet, finest creamery at the auction sale selling at 26¾c. Demand for cheese from over the cable was quieter, but the tone of the local market is firmer in sympathy with the higher prices paid in the country. Eggs steady under a fair demand.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 5.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.10; No. 1 northern, $1.08⅝ to $1.09; No. 2 do., $1.00⅝ to $1.08⅝; December, $1.01¼.

A DAY WITH THE KAISER

Plays the Game of War With Elaborate Detail—Is Not a Heroic Figure—No Ceremony Omitted, Even Near the Front.

NEW YORK, Oct. 5.—A cable from Amsterdam to the Tribune says: A typical day with the Kaiser is thus described by an eye-witness—

"Rid yourself first of all of the idea that the Emperor is a heroic figure. He is a man, not exactly of small stature, but distinctly below the average height and rather stout.

"Moreover, his left arm is about ten inches shorter than his right, and partially paralysed. This deformity strikes the eye unpleasantly, though one cannot withhold admiration for the energy which enabled the Kaiser to become a good shot and passable rider in spite of his tremendous handicap.

"On this particular occasion the Kaiser had ben sleeping in a French chateau, but not without elaborate precautions against a surprise attack.

Special Shield.

"The French chateau was fortified against aerial attacks. Sacks are piled on the roof and a protective shield of metal network is erected whenever the Kaiser moves his quarters. A samll army of military engineers precedes him to carry out these defensive measures before his arrival. Of course they are withdrawn from the fighting line, but the Kaiser believes that his person is of as much value to the cause of Germany as an army corps.

"Around the chateau were men of his special bodyguard, a detachment outside his bedroom door, another in the hall, another at the front door and two more detachments in the rooms immediately above and beneath his own room. Three unbroken lines of sentries surrounded the house and a whole battalion of infantry and several squadrons of cavalry encamped in the parks. This was some 30 miles from the front, and the chateau was connected by a field telegraph with the headquarters of the nearest army, so that any sudden retreat of the German legions should not place the Kaiser in danger.

Emerges Hat Jove

"Soon after sunrise the Kaiser emerged from the chateau and greeted his soldiers with his customary 'Good morning, soldiers,' to which all of them in the immediate vicinity replied in unison, 'Good morning, your Majesty.' A motor car was in readiness, and the Kaiser whirled swiftly toward the front, while the troops who guarded him stood rigidly at attention, and ten drummers of the bodyguard beat their drums by way of salute.

"The Imperial standard was conveyed in a second motor car, and the officers of the Imperial suite followed in others. The cavalry of the bodyguard preceded the monarch to the place where he left the motor car to mount a horse. As he was helped into the saddle troopers saluted with their swords and another set of drummers beat their drums. So ceremony may be omitted, even at the front.

Keeps Safe Distance.

"The Kaiser rode off with his mounted guard thickly clustered around him. The standard bearer, riding immediately behind him, bore the Imperial flag. Then followed a spectacular progress from point to point in the rear of the fighting line—a safe distance to the rear, I may add, because the supreme war lord must not be exposed to a stray bullet or shrapnel.

"But large bodies of reserves had bivouacked in those parts, and fresh troops were marching up from the direction of the frontier. The Kaiser halted and addressed a fervently patriotic oration to one regiment and another to a second regiment as he rode from place to place, and during the morning delivered no fewer than nine speeches.

"Luncheon was taken in the open air at a table in front of a certain general's tent. Wine and food commandeered from the residence of a French country gentleman supplied the Kaiser with a splendid meal, prepared by his own cook and served by his servants garbed, of course, in the Imperial uniform.

"None of the ceremonial of the imperial court is abandoned at the front. More visits were paid to the troops and more speeches delivered in the afternoon, and then back by automobile to the chateau for dinner. At no moment during the day had the Kaiser been within range of the enemy's fire."

TURKISH TOWNS SHAKEN.

Twenty-Five Hundred Persons Killed In Asia Minor.

SMYRNA, Asiatic Turkey, Oct. 6. —(Via London.)—The towns of Ineasta (population about 20,000), and Burdur (population about 12,000) in the Province of Konia, were severely damaged by an earthquake Saturday night. The shocks made themselves felt at midnight. The loss of life was very heavy. These two towns are centres of the carpet industry.

About 2,500 Killed.

LONDON, Oct. 6.—An official message from Constantinople, transmitted from Amsterdam to the Central News, says that the victims of the earthquake in the Province of Konia, Asia Minor, are estimated at 2,500.

Austrian Miner Murdered.

QUESNEL, B.C., Oct. 6.—An Austrian, 40 years of age, a worker in a construction camp, was found clubbed to death just across the river from here. Four Servians with whom he had been over a few hours before, are under arrest. It is believed the tragedy is an outcome of a quarrel over the war.

One Result of The War Is Certain

CANADA must Manufacture for part of the World now involved in War.

Europe can no longer supply the Export Markets.

If you are proud of Canada, you want to see our Factories hum, our Stores alive with Business, and our Offices piled with Orders.

Let Peterborough enlist in this movement to boom Canadian Made Goods.

Let Peterborough Manufacturers get on the job, and let us read, mark and hear more of "Made in Peterborough" Goods.

How many good-going factories in Peterborough never tell our own Citizens what they manufacture.

And if they don't tell, how can they expect to sell.

Much of the European trade that was exported into Canada should now become our own. Who but our own Manufacturers should now make the Foodstuffs, the Hosiery, the Underwear, the Toys, and much of the Chemicals, Dye-stuffs, and other things Germany has supplied us?

Advertising will soon reveal which of our industrial enterprises are most worthy and best prepared to profit by Europe's need. The Firms first to advertise for this business will be the first to profit.

Who, among our manufacturers, is willing to be left out in the cold? Who, among such Firms, will fail to Advertise?

GERMANS MOVE NORTHWARD TOWARDS COAST

THE ENEMY'S CAVALRY SIGHTED NEAR LILLE

THE GENERAL SITUATION STILL UNCHANGED

FIGHTING OF THE MOST DESPERATE CHARACTER, WITH LITTLE CHANGE

French Official Statement Indicates a Movement of the Enemy to the North--Cavalry Signalled in the Neighborhood of Lille--German Attack on Lassigny is Repulsed

ALLIES PROGRESS NORTH OF SOISSONS

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, October 6.—That the Germans are moving northward towards the coast and from Belgium westward was indicated in to-day's official three o'clock statement, which announced that the Germany cavalry is now signalled in the vicinity of Lille. Fighting of the most desperate character continues it is stated in the communique, with practically no real change in the general situation. In the vicinity of Arras it is stated there has been a very slight change, while the fighting continues with increasing feropity. Between the Somme and the Oise the alternative advances and retirements continue as the pressure increases or decreases at the various points of the line. The Germans are declared to have attempted an attack in force on the French line which is holding Lassigny but failed to gain the slightest advantage. The French, it is declared, are making progress to the north of Soissons and in the region of Berry-Au-Bac.

ANTWERP, October 6.—Rumours are current that some of the forts have been badly damaged, but the war office maintains that resistance is well maintained by the Belgian and British troops. The official statement issued to-day said,—"The Germans continue their bombardment of the outer ring of forts. They have utterly failed however in their attempts to gain a foothold at any point. In a series of sorties the garrison have inflicted great damage on the enemy who has now abandoned all efforts to carry our positions by storm. Every single fort and redoubt is holding out."

PARIS, October 6. — The reinforced German line continues its efforts to break through the encircling movement of the allies. It has gained slightly at new points, only to be thrust back violently at others. It is officially announced this morning that the fighting continues with unabated vigour but that at no point has the allies left been penetrated. The general flanking movement continues to be extended northward, while fresh troops are being sent into action at points on the line where the greatest German pressure is apparent.

LONDON, October 6.—The situation in France is causing great anxiety in non-military circles. The optimistic attitude of the war office during the latter part of last week aroused great expectations. It was said that the long drawn out battle of the Aisne was ending in complete victory. Now with the acknowledgment that the Germans are themselves extending their lines there are fears that the Government is withholding much of the actual truth concerning the situation.

The war office has nothing to say other than to repeat that the general situation remains good. There are no details of the fate of the British troops on the firing line. Even the location of the various units is withheld. It is admitted that the entire British expeditionary forces, the Indian contingent included, are in action. But where they are is left entirely to the imagination. The same condition holds good in reference to the Belgian situation and the theatre of war in the near east. The Russians are reported as attempting to cross the Dona Jec River in Galicia in their campaign against Cracow last Thursday, but to-day no claim that they have actually succeeded in crossing has been made.

THE UTILITIES COMMISSION TO MAKE OFFER

Will Seek to Buy the Out-of-town Distribution Plant of Peterboro' Light and Power Co.

WILL OFFER $4,450.00

At a meeting of the Utilities Commission at noon to-day it was decided to offer the Peterborough Light and Power Company $4,450.85 for their distributing system outside of the City. The power that goes to this portion of the plan has first to pass through the City's wires, so that under any conditions they would have to buy the power from the City.

The Commission also decided at to-day's meeting to purchase, if feasible, the distributing system of the Otonabee Power Company which serves sections of the City, not reached by the City's wires. The secretary was instructed to write the Company, asking them if they were willing to sell that portion of their system to the Commission.

The Commission decided to rent the Murray Street Power House if possible, and the secretary was instructed to write the Electric Power Company asking them if they own the base of the plant, and on what terms they would lease it to the Commission until such time as they have a new street lighting system installed.

POWER COMMITTEE'S REPORT TO COUNCIL

The Power Committee report was passed as follows at last night's meeting:

To the Council of the City of Peterborough.

Gentlemen,—Your Power Committee beg leave to report as follows:

1—That we authorized the Chairman of this Committee to have tile put in on Charlotte Street from George Street to Water Street, to receive underground wire for lighting purposes, if he deemed it advisable.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. J. Johnston, Chairman.

POST WILL HAVE TO BE MOVED

At the Council meeting last night a letter was received from the Grand Trunk Railway Company saying that before their siding on Bethune street, between Simcoe and Hunter streets could be moved an electric light post at the corner of Simcoe and Bathune streets would have to be moved. The matter was referred to the chairman of the Board of Works, to look into the matter and have the post moved if necessary.

WILL ERECT SIGN WITH NAMES OF LOCAL FACTORIES

At the Council meeting last night a letter was read from Mr. Breyfogle, of the De Laval Company, asking that the company be given permission to erect a large sign on the island just north of the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge. He suggested as an alternative that the city or Board of Trade might arrange for a large sign showing the names of several large local industries, each to pay a certain amount to have their name on the sign. This would pay for the cost of the sign, help to advertise the company and the city.

The matter was left with the chairman of the Property Committee to arrange for a sign with the Board of Trade. Permission was given at last night's meeting for the erection of such a sign.

PARENTS CAREFUL

South End Children Find Liberties Curtailed by Precautions Against Diphtheria—Two Deaths Reported

OFFICIALS ARE BUSY

Parents in the eastern section of the south ward have been recently alarmed by the number of cases of diphtheria which broke out in rapid succession. Several deaths from this disease have exterminated the feeling, and parents are exercising extreme precautions in "keeping their children off the streets." In the district south of the C.P.R. and east of Park Street vigilance is taking unusual forms.

"The wife has her hands full in keeping Bill in these nights." Note the impersonal touch of this husband. He's one of those youngsters that would keep a regiment of Uhlans busy watching him. His mother told him not to go out after supper, but believe me she has a busy time keeping him quiet."

Another woman said, "So-and-so has a sore throat and I have been worried to death about him. Jean is all right and so is Jack, but the other fellow needs watching. I've had them home from school with me."

Other parents say the kept children from school spend their spare hours of the day with companions at the usual play.

The parents in that section tell you of families that had "it" and did not know and "that's the way it got a start."

The Examiner has been informed that two deaths have resulted from the present epidemic which is, however, receiving full attention from the authorities.

COUNCIL TO CONSTRUCT SEWER

Dr. Park, representing the inhabitants of Bethune street north of Smith, waited upon the City Council last night to urge the building of a sewer in that section. He explained the difficulties that the residents of that part of the city were labouring under, which included some heavy items of expenditure that would be unnecessary were a sewer put in. It had been said that engineering difficulties had prevented the putting in of a sewer in the past, but they, he thought were rather imagined than real. The sewer could be made to serve ten houses, and would only be six or seven hundred feet in length. A largely signed petition in connection with the matter was, he said, to be presented to the Council.

The Mayor, on behalf of the Council promised that the matter would be attended to at once by the Chairman of the Board of Works and the City Engineer.

NEWS FROM TWO MAJORS

Peterboro' Officers Write From on Board Their Transport at Anchor in the Gulf of St. Lawrence

LOOK FOR COL. CLEGG

Major Eastwood has received letters from Major Bennett and Major Mills, written on their transport in the Gaspe Basin. The letters were addressed on Friday last and at that time there were eighteen transports and five warships composing the flotilla and others were on the way down the St. Lawrence. The two Majors of the 57th Regiment wrote that everything had been done to provide for the comfort of the officers and men. Each had a berth, the meals were good and the routine work was pleasant. First thing every morning is the bath. A large canvas tank has been erected on deck, and the men take full advantage of it. Admiral Weymiss had been aboard this particular transport, and there was a feeling that the anchors would soon be lifted. Major Bennett stated that he had no idea where Col. Clegg was, although he might be on the nearest transport, one hundred yards across the water of the Gulf. It may be that the vessels departed on Sunday, and if so, are not much more than in mid-Atlantic by this time. It is expected that they will disembark within a period of two days and will be ready to proceed to whatever destination the military authorities decide. Lieut. Ackerman is reported in excellent health, shewing a slight gain in weight.

BETTER BABY CONTEST OPENS

Handsome Display of Babies at Babies at Opening of the Examinations at Public Library Yesterday

The Better Baby Contest is now in full swing. No sooner had Dr. Jessie Bernie opened the doors in the Public Library at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon than the various rooms became full of life. Proud mothers, some in automobiles, and others with the more humble vehicle, the bassinette, lined the hall, and soon the physicians and nurses were busy examining as fine a company of babies as one could hope to see in one place.

The standing of each infant, in the examination, is to determine by means of score cards, physical and mental requirements are stated thereon and a fixed number of marks allotted to each. First, Mrs. Sutton and assistants, take the infant's entry in the hall, upon which the baby is taken into the first room for Test No. 1, mental and developmental, conducted by Kindergarten teachers. Test No. 2, measurements, is at present made by Dr. Morgan. Drs. Sutton and Hammond conduct test No. 3, Physical, and test No. 4, Oral and Dental. Test No. 5, eye, ear, nose and throat, is made by the specialists, Drs. McCullough and Buchanan.

In a further room are food in all stages of preparation for children and menu cards for the feeding of children from 3 to 12 years of age. The hall is being fitted up as a little theatre and every afternoon moving pictures will be exhibited and lectures delivered by Government officials. It behooves all mothers, therefore, to be present at these lectures in order to glean ideas for improvement.

Dr. McCullough, the Provincial Health Officer, and his district representative, are present at the contest.

SPOKE BEFORE BELMONT CLUB

The members of the Belmont Club held a dinner last evening in their club rooms, at which Rev. Mr. Bowers gave a very interesting talk on his trip abroad, that was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. Mr. Bowers' remarks were followed with rapt attention on the part of his hearers, and all went away pleased by the address that they had heard.

The chair was taken by the president, Mr. Will Cochrane, and Mr. Fred Cole was elected secretary to succeed Mr. Bob. Hall, who resigned. Dr. Frank was appointed on the executive.

Russians Threaten In Front And Flank

Have Driven Germans From the Neimen River District and are Moving to Flank Them From the South—Victors Have Captured Many German Cannon.

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, October 6.—The Russian armies in pursuit of the Germans who have been driven from the Neimen River region are now threatening the Germans on their front and flank. The Germans are reported here to be occupying their fortified positions along the border inside of the East Prussian frontier. The Russian forces, however, are moving to flank them from the south. The estimates of the German casualties in the series of battles that extended well down into Russian Poland continue to grow. They are now placed at 70,000. In addition the Russians have captured a large number of German cannon which became mired in the retreat and were abandoned.

FEARS FOR ANTWERP

LONDON, October 6.—Antwerp is reported as still holding out but it is known that the Germans are subjecting the city to a tremendous bombardment and that unless help comes soon the city may fall.

GERMAN CAVALRY NEAR LILLE

PARIS, October 6.—The Paris official statement says,—"On our left wing the front is becoming more and more extended. Some German cavalry forces of large size have been reported in the environs of Lille, advancing before forces of the enemy who are making a movement to the north of the line of Tourcoing.

CHURCHILL WITH BELGIAN KING

BORDEAUX, France, Oct. 6, 4 p.m.—The members of the government have put a very optimistic interpretation on the report that German cavalry have been seen at Lille. They say it indicates that the enemy has found it necessary to draw from its forces attacking Antwerp to reinforce the hard pressed German right wing in France. It is also stated in Bordeaux that Hon. Winston Churchill, the First Lord of the British Admiralty, is in Antwerp in conference with King Albert and the Belgian defenders in reference to the defence of that city.

TURKEY IS BECOMING ACTIVE

NEW YORK, October 6.—A despatch from Berlin to-day says the attempts of the Entente powers to force the opening of the Dardanelles have failed. The Russian ambassador at Constantinople is reported to be furious on acount of the embargo thus placed on Russia's grain export trade and her importation of arms. The increased Turkish navy is confidently expected here soon to sail against the Russians in Black Sea, while the Turkish troops it is believed here, will soon be attacking the English, on acount of England's suppresion of the Khedival rights in Egypt.

FLANK ATTACKS MAY CRUMPLE ENEMY'S LINES

TORONTO, October 6.—A special cable received here to-day from a London military expert, says,—

"The flank movements in France do not depend for their effectiveness on speed or surprise, but if the Russians win a great victory in the east the Germans will need to withdraw forces from their western armies, whereupon the flank attacks of the allies will crumple up the German lines. Which ever side can extend its lines farthest without weakening its front will win the battle of the Aisne."

ACTOR ON THE WAY TO JOIN THE ALLIES.

NEW YORK, Oct. 5.—Two steamships left here yesterday with recruits and prospective volunteers for the Allied armies in Europe.

Reginald McDougall, one would-be volunteer, left on board the Philadelphia, of the America Line. Mr. McDougall was one of the principal supporters of John Drew here last winter. Mr. Drew, his daughter Miss Louisa Drew, Miss Marjorie Woods, Ernest Lawford, and Thomas Louesbery, friends of the war-bound actor, were at the pier to see him off.

CHILDREN'S AID "TAG DAY."

Next Saturday is "Tag-Day," in the interests of giving the general public an opportunity to contribute to the funds of the Society. It may seem to some that, with the multiplicity of calls created by the war situation, the "tag-day" enterprise might be omitted this year. Yet there is more need of it than ever on account of the war. An official of the society informs the Examiner that unusual demand is made upon the society's funds to provide for children thrown upon their own, and belonging in some cases to those who have gone to the front, so that in contributing to the funds of the Children's Aid Society, one is virtually contributing to the Patriotic Fund. Besides, the Society on its merits deserves the strengthening of its funds. The general unemployment doubtless produces demoralizing as well as its distressing results. Children are necessarily neglected physically, and often morally, and become the natural wards of the Children's Aid Society. We should neither look the gift horse too closely in the mouth, nor study too critically the way the finger of duty points.

RARA AVIS.

Judging by some correspondence that has been recently published, ministers of the Gospel who would suffer a reduction of their salaries are to be classified with rara avis in terra. This, however, would be unjust. The Examiner learns that several ministers in Peterborough, when the war situation, with reduced wages in industrial operations, suggested the patriotism of a reduction of others salaries, voluntarily offered to the officials of the Church a reduction of their salaries—in one case a reduction of $300 per year was offered. That the officials did not entertain these proposals, meant that the ministers were considered worthy of their hire, though it may be admitted that their loyalty to their pastors was greater than their loyalty to patriotic considerations. The reduction of the ministers' salaries, if applied to the patriotic fund, would have shown that the congregations the officials represented, were prepared to emulate the self sacrifice of their ministers. In view of some disparaging suggestions that have been made it is a simple matter of justice and fair play to refer to these circumstances. While it might be more significant than respectful to apply the saying, "give the devil his due," to the circumstances under consideration, the application of its spirit, and not the letter, is what the ministers deserve, in view of the action mentioned and in view of the criticisms made and prone to be made by those hypercritical, not to say, hypocritical, persons, who seek to keep the beam in their own eye while pulling out the mote that is in their brother's eye—they, manifesting an interest in what is right, show it by unfairly criticising the ministers of religion, regarding them as legitimate targets for the shafts of shallow cynicism. Ministers are human, and have their faults; but if society in general and especially some warts in the face of society, were as good as our ministers, as a body, we should have an infinitely better world.

HOME RULE FOR ONTARIO.

The Toronto News, apropos of the cabinet reconstruction, has scattered through its editorial page black letter paragraphs glorifying Sir James Whitney. This is right in the abstract, but the application of these paragraphs to the present government lacks point. Sir James has ceased to be anything more than a moral power, a name, may be, to conjure with. But the actual government of the country, the real practical administration of provincial affairs has to be looked after by the reconstructed cabinet; reconstructed in opposition to the spirit of self government upon which the Confederation is founded. There has been stern fighting for many years, there has been even bloodshed in the struggle to win the position of self government. The strength of the Empire, as to her dominions, consists in the self government of her Dominions. Self government has metamorphosed the Boers of South Africa—made friends of foes. If Ontario has self-government, it has been denied in the reconstruction of the Ontario cabinet. The dominant majority representatives of the people have not chosen the leader. A leader has been foisted upon them, however by an outside influence which has no more right to overtly influence the selection of a premier of Ontario than the Ontario cabinet has to dictate reorganization of the Federal cabinet. If we are to be ruled from Ottawa then the logic of accepting the head of a government from Ottawa is understandable; but if Ontario is to enjoy the full fruits of autonomy; if Ontario is to have home rule—to be allowed, as the British North America Act provides, to manage her own affairs, mind her own business, then the injection of Ottawa influences into Ontario cabinet construction, or reconstruction, is an impudent intrusion, as well as unconstitutional and mischievous meddling. It is well enough for provincial and federal governments to have amicable and even sympathetic relations in the matter of public interests, but a partisan "combine" for the promotion of party interests at the expense of public welfare, is simply wrong.

BRITAIN'S STRENGTH.

Great Britain is in this war to win. To this end she needs soldiers, and she will get them. She entered the war with a regular army of only 235,000 men, including 75,000 East Indian regulars. A despatch received last night says that by the new year Great Britain can have, and will have, if they are needed, a total of a million and a half fighting men in France. All her peoples and subjects are with her. Britain's dusky legions from India, which the deluded and badly befooled Kaiser thought would rise in mutiny at the opening of the war, are in the battle line in France at this moment relieving the overworked British troops, and are splendidly filling their place. East Indian troops are cooperating with the British-Boer forces in Africa, another hope of the Kaiser, in stripping him of his colonial possessions, the apple of his imperial eye. Ireland, mother of the Kaiser's blasted hopes, is coming bravely to the fore with her contingents of the best fighting forces in the world. "Tay Pay" O'Connor, a colleague of Redmond, thus describes the change that has come over the Kaiser's dream of Irish rebellion—making Britain's necessity Ireland's opportunity—to raise a ruction. He says in support of the change of Irish heart:

"Irish recruiting goes rapidly on. Callan, a small town of 1,800 population, sent 72 recruits. Two families in Roscommon sent 25 between them. Dublin enlists at the rate of 1,000 a week. Irish of Great Britain, if anything, are keener. Out of 900 Irish (Home Rule) volunteers at Cardiff, 500 went to the front. One hundred members of the Irish League at Merthyr Tydvil enlisted. Liverpool longshoremen, mostly Irish Catholics, left by thousands. The 800 children of one Catholic school have 900 relatives at the front."

And so the game goes bravely on throughout the Empire, which with its hundreds of scattered dominions and colonies, is a mighty unit when its integrity is threatened and the precious liberties and privileges it represents are imperilled by the arch-enemy of all human freedom. The striking contrast is suggested. Britain, with her dominions and colonies flocking to her help, with all her peoples at home and abroad marching in step towards the ultimate triumph; German with her few colonies melting away from her sight, slipping from her grasp. Britain with all her sea paths open and her trade and commerce doing "business as usual"; Germany with her commercial shipping swept from the seas, her trade paralyzed, her supplies shut off from the outside, with domestic famine imminent—in the near future; her costly fleet bottled in home harbours; her modest war fleet as useless as a fleet of models. Britain's strength is not all in her floating ramparts of steel. Her real strength is the hearts of oak of her loyal subjects the world over, at home and overseas.

WHERE IS AUSTRIA'S BLUSTER?

The eagerness displayed by Austria to conciliate the government of Italy for the damage done to Italian ships by her floating mines is evidence of the remarkable change that has come over Vienna in the last few weeks. Two months ago Austria started out gaily upon a punitive and devastating expedition into Servia, refusing in her bluster to have anything to do with the conciliatory efforts of the powers. Backed up by Germany, she was afraid of no one, and would have her war regardless of anything.

Now, however, there is a difference. Instead of overrunning Servia, the war makers at Vienna have seen their own country invaded by the insignificant Servians, and have witnessed their own armies retreating before the Russians. And the promised support from the Kaiser has not come, for the simple reason that the Kaiser has had his hands full with his own quarrel.

And so Austria answers the protest of Italy by offering indemnity for the damage done, and agreeing to remove her mines from the Adriatic. She is apparently ready to cry "enough."—Ottawa Free Press.

WHO CAN DOUBT THE END?

The Dominions have given us of their best, lavishly freely, ungrudgingly. They too are making their answer to the German challenge. From the ends of the earth armies are gathering to write in letters of blood the doom of Kaiserism, and to banish its evil doctrines from the world for ever. Swarms of brave Frenchmen are striking a blow to-day for their beloved land. From afar we hear the irresistible tramp of Russia's myriads. Servia is thrusting forward into the country of her ancient foe; Belgium is stricken but indomitable. When the illimitable resources of the British Empire, our grand fleet, our unconquerable army, the flower of the manhood of these islands, our heroic kinsmen from overseas, our chivalrous Indian troops are all placed in the scale in this mighty struggle from which we will never flinch nor falter, who can doubt what the end will be?—London Times.

FIFTEEN MILLIONS IN GOLD.

Shipments of American gold continue to arrive in Ottawa. There have been several very large consignments recently and have brought the amount of Bank of England gold at Ottawa up to the splendid total of fifty million dollars.—Ottawa Free Press.

GERMAN GLORY.

With the Kaiser giving a nickel-plated and tinselled imitation of Napoleon, well behind the, firing line and with the Crown Prince acting like a common thief in stealing the household treasures of the Baroness de Baye, the German royal family is still adding lustre to German annals. —Montreal Herald Telegraph.

THE INVINCIBLE ALLIES.

So long as we hold the sea, we cannot be vitally struck; and Russia, owing to her vast area and giant reserves of men and horses, is almost equally impregnable. These two great Empires, ruled by perhaps the two most dogged of the European races, saved Europe a century ago, and must rise superior to all reverses in the effort to save it to-day.—London Chronicle.

VARENNES.

Varennes, mentioned in recent despatches as having been occupied by troops of the German left wing, is fast increasing in the present conflict the fame which it first acquired as the result of an incident of the French Revolution.

On June 20, 1791, Louis XVI., a prisoner to all intents and purposes, whose situation had become intolerably irksome, succeeded in quitting Paris in a travelling berlin, accompanied by his children. All were disguised.

They reached St. Menehould in safety, but there the King was recognized by Drouet, the son of the Postmaster, who, mounting his horse pursued the royal fugitives to Varennes, raised an alarm and caused them to be captured when they already thought themselves out of danger.

Louis XVI. was conducted back to Paris, maintained as a constitutional monarch for a while, and combined attacks upon the revolutionists of France by other nations of Europe were considerably delayed.

Once before, in the course of the war of 1914, Varennes has been in the hands of the Germans. At the time of the previous occupation the headquarters of the Crown Prince's army was established there.

The Grand Trunk System in Relation To Western Interests

Mr. E. J. Chamberlin, President of the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways, has returned to Montreal after a tour of inspection of the Companies' Lines. His trip extended as far as Prince Rupert, the terminal of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway in British Columbia.

"I found," said Mr. Chamberlin, "conditions in the West very satisfactory. While the crop generally will fall considerably below that of 1913, yet the quality is fairly good and the increased prices will do much to help in the shortage of yield. Taken all together, the people are very optimistic and are preparing for a very large acreage next season. The crop has been harvested at least three weeks earlier than usual so that a very large amount of fall ploughing has been done and this will be a great benefit to the crop of 1915. Under favourable conditions, I should think the 1915 crop will be far in excess of anything they have ever had in the Northwest, as the acreage will probably be increased at least 25 p.c."

"I found our line in British Columbia in much better condition than I expected, in fact, the work done is remarkable considering that 400 miles were graded and track laid in 12 months through the mountains of British Columbia. We now have a first class track as far west as Prince George, B.C. and at least half of the track between Prince George and Prince Rupert is fully finished and the balance of it has a first and much of it a second lift of ballast, and compares to-day very favourably with other railroad lines in the Northwest. There is a big force of men at work putting on the finishing touch and we expect before the close of the season the entire line will be in first class condition; we are now running a through sleeping car train twice a week between Edmonton and Prince Rupert connecting with the through trains to Winnipeg, and this is being well patronized and giving very good service to the people. We are also running freight regularly through to Prince Rupert."

"It has not generally been understood that this Company is building a very large and extensive dry dock and ship building plant at Prince Rupert. The dry dock being capable of floating a 20,000 ton battleship. It is now expected that this dry dock and shipyard will be fully complete and machinery installed ready for any class of work which may be offered by January 1st, 1915."

"This Company so far has not taken any action relative to steamship lines of their own on the Pacific Coast, deeming it advisable for the present to patronize the old established lines which are running between between the Pacific Coast and the Orient."

"The Grand Trunk Pacific line is British Columbia runs for something over 200 miles through the Fraser River Valley, which is a wide valley now heavily timbered. This timber will be marketed and taken east for consumption in the Prairie Provinces. The land where it has been cleared is very fertile and yields heavy crops to the acre. From Prince George to Hazelton the line runs through the valley of the Nechaco and the Bulkley rivers, which are also very wide with much open country and very lightly timbered. Settlers are now pouring in rapidly and within a very short time we will have a large population in that part of the country."

"The opening up of the G. T. P. will be a great boon to the Prairie Provinces as they will be able to have an all year round port for shipment if they desire and they are already getting— which has been very much needed—a supply of fresh fish from Prince Rupert. The British Columbia fisheries are located within two or three hours' run of Prince Rupert harbour and they are already making extensive shipments to the east from that port ,the fish going at the present time as far east as Winnipeg, St. Paul and Chicago, and probably shipments will soon be taken to Montreal and Toronto.

"I noticed in passing through Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta a very large increase in stock, which makes it apparent that the farmers are taking up heartily the question of mixed farming and I have no doubt but what this will be a great improvement for the Northwest. They also seem to be giving more careful attention to the cultivation of their land.

"Up to the present time the G.T.P. has handled about $5,000 carloads of grain more than they handled for the same period last year, but this is largely due to the earlier harvesting and we do not expect that that increase will be continued for the full season."

COCHRANE HAS CROWDED OUT SIR ADAM BECK

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, Oct. 6—Beck is out of the Cabinet—and the official explanation given by the new Government does not satisfactorily explain. It says that the Hon. I. B. Lucas takes the position on the Commission "that the Act requires to be filled by a member of the Executive Council"—that is, Lucas is said to take Beck's place as representative of the Cabinet. The statement, however, fails to add that until this change there were not one, but two, members of the Executive Council on the Hydro —Sir Adam Beck and Hon. J. S. Hendrie. Lucas could have succeeded Hendrie, and Beck still remain a member of the Cabinet.

The net result, therefore, is that not only is Sir Adam Beck (for whom the Toronto Telegram (Conservative), says there would be an overwhelming majority if it were given to the people to choose the Prime Minister) not the new Premier of Ontario, but now he is not even in the Cabinet. He is made a private member and his influence, therefore, is that much reduced.

The new Prime Minister, according to Conservative papers, is the nominee of Hon. Frank Cochrane, of whom the Toronto Telegram says: "At Ottawa he has been more of a hindrance than a help to the Hydro Electric policy." Just before the selection of a Prime Minister the Telegram said: "Unless the Conservative party wishes to throw away all the advantages of an era of public service, it will not tolerate hole-and-corner methods, but will demand as its new leader a man in whose hands the future of Sir Adam Beck's work will be absolutely safe."

C. P. R. Forwarding Labourers to Points Where They Are Required.

NO AUSTRIANS OR GERMANS

British Subjects Given Preference, Then the Allies, French and Russians.

Mr. C. H. Baillie, the employment agent of the C.P.R., at Montreal, states that he is busy forwarding groups of labourers to the various points along the C.P.R., where they are needed most. Many requests have come to him, for while, in all the districts there is a certain amount of unemployment, the idle material is not sufficient to meet the new demand, created by the decision of the C.P.R. executive to put on 6,000 men to give work at a time when work is so much desired by many deserving men, who have been thrown out of regular employment. Over 1,000 men have been taken on locally to work at the terminals; others are employed as they are wanted at a distance.

Mr. Baillie stated to The Gazette that the order was a god send to the idle men in the city of whom there were so many. "Of course, we do our best to sift them out a bit," said Mr. Baillie. "We give the preference to British subjects; after that, the Allies. Russians and Belgians; but no Germans or Austrians. The men are grateful for the chance. There are many fellows down on their luck who have been accustomed to different conditions, and duties, yet these are only too willing to take the job that offers.

"Of course, the C.P.R. has a lot of labouring work to do in any case, and it came in handy that the order should be given at such a time. It ought to make other corporations willing to find employment for men to do work—work which might not be absolutely necessary, and yet which would be of value, if not now, later on. The example of the C.P.R. is encouraging in this regard."

KAISER ON THE DEFENSIVE WILL LIKELY BE DANGEROUS

May Take a Long Time For Allies to Make Germany Feel a Weakness—A Few Incidents From the Front.

LONDON, Oct. 6.—The military expert of the Times writes as follows:

"However much we may head back the Germen right wing and relieve Antwerp; whatever confidence we have that the shock of the Russian masses in the East will prove decisive, we must not entertain the slight est illusion regarding the hard and trying condition which awaits all the Allies in the future in operating against Germany reduced to the defensive.

"Germany is still united. Her resources grow stop. All her might in arms, all her assistants are working at full pressure. Her fleet will strike when the hour comes, probably in co-operation with the army.

"The line of the Aisne, when forced, may prove to be only one of many similar lines prepared in the rear of it. It may take a very long time for the Allies to compel Germany to find a weakness. It therefore develves upon the Allies to look forward to a long war.

The official information bureau issued a brief account of some of the lighter incidents of the fighting in France, to which it appends certain letters taken from German prisoners. The recital, which is from an eye-witness but which bears no date, is in part as follows:

Toilet Under Difficulties.

"In the presentation of striking contrasts this war is no exception to the rule. Within sight of the spot where these words are being written the chauffeur of a motor car attached to the general staff is making his toilet in the open. After washing his face and hands in a saucepan, minus its handle, which he has balanced on an empty gasoline can, he carefully brushes his hair with an old nail brush, using the window of the car in which he has slept as a looking glass.

"From the backward sweep he gives his somewhat long locks, and judging by his well-made and clean shoes it is clear that he had once been a dandy, in spite of his khaki service jacket and trousers. He is in fact, a former public schoolboy, who has entroopship late yesterday afternon. Valcartier Camp became the peaceful place it had been before the greatest military camp in Canadian history was established there.

Less thaff a thousand men of the first gathering of 35,000 soldiers and workers now remains and these will be occupied for some time in clearing up the place. The last transport to leave was the one carrying Col. Victor A. Williams, adjutant-general of the militia, who will retain command of the contingent until its arrival on the other side.

It took forty trains to move the infantry and the baggage to Quebec, and the baggage of the contingent was transported in 75 box cars. The artillery was the first to move. The went by road, starting on Friday morning of last week. The first to leave camp was the second brigade of Field Artillery under ColonelA. J. Creelman of Montreal.

The cavalry followed. The Royal Canadian Dragoons and the Strathcona Horse, with all the mounted troops, covered the journey by road, as the artillery had done before them. The transports and water carts and ambulance waggons, were amongst them, several being brought in case o femergency. These now remain in the sheds on the river-front, the only tangible evidenpse of the activities of the past week.

Of the artillery, the 3rd Brigade, under Lieut.-Col. Citshall, of Toronto, were the last to [illegible] my," firing from the bushes and from houses, swept their trenches. This letter continues: "On my right and left wounded comrades were complaining bitterly that the enemy were shooting from houses.

"They found too easy a mark in us. If we assumed an upright position we were immediately fired upon. Soon the enemy's bullets began to get us from the right and after about an hour, during which time our company lost about twenty-five men, we were forced to retire. This brought our total strength down to eighty. We started with 251 men. We had no officers left.

"On the 12th, at half-past four o'clock in the morning we reached a village where we thought we would be able to rest, and so collected some straw. Before an hour had passed, however, the shrapnel had again found us out. We spent the afternoon in the village which was continuously under shell fire in spite of the fact that our guns were shelling the enemy's artillery. We heard our Colonel say that our guns could not cope at times of the enemy satisfactorily because the latter were so well concealed.

"Our condition is now really awful, for we have to sleep out in all weather. We are all looking forward to a speedy end. We are very badly off as regards food. Some of our regiments can muster only from three to four companies."

Another letter written during the retreat in front of the French from Montmirail, contains the following:

Ready to Drop.

"After a thirty-six hour march we had a rest and arrived just in time for the fight, or three days we did not have a hot meal, because our field kitchens were shot. We got a hot meal yesterday evening. Although we are all just ready to drop we must march on."

Here is another abstract from the same letter:

"We found great quantities of food but dreading poison we did not take possession of it until we had gotten hold of the proprietor of the house and compelled him to taste it first. We are near Rheims, after having gone through hard, bloody and most horrible days.

"Thank God I am still alive. Of our regiment of 3,000 men there are now only 1,600 left. Let us hope that this battle, which ought to be one of the greatest in history, will leave me safe and well and give us peace. I Regiment and the 1st Grena Guards, all of Montreal, left cartier.

As the ships were filled they m out. Some went a few miles stream, and some a few miles d stream, but all stayed near Que Many of the ships moved from t wharves at night, empty ships many cases replacing them to w for their share of the men and gu which they had to bear across ocean. In five days the work was f ished.

On the last day the troopshi formed a line in mid-stream belo Quebec, the Lapland leading. La at night the staff of the continge embarked on the Francomia. In t small hours of the morning sh steamed away, and by now h probably taken her place at the he of the line of ships.

Colonel Williams is in command o the contingent at present. With hi are Lieutenant-Colonel A. H. Mac Dowell, D.S.O.; Major E. De B. Pa st, Lieut.-Col. Gordon Hall, Majo Mitchell, Lieut.-Col. Those Charged With Assault.

ST. CATHARINES, Oct. 5.—Fred Person, Edmund McGrath, and Jas. Augerman, three youths of Merritton, accused of culpability in a brutal assault on John Marshall, a storekeeper on Sept. 4, with Antonio Delori, an Italian, were yesterday committed for trial.

HOW TO GET RID OF DYSPEPSIA

Don't Rely on Medicine; Don't Go on Fresh Diet; Cautious Eating and an Antacid Soundly Ab That Are Needed

"If you have dyspepsia, indigestion, sour stomach, belching, flatulency, stomach heartburn or any other stomach trouble due to hyperacidity (the usual cause of stomach troubles), you should take no medicine to set right the stomach itself. That is positively not the way to cure the trouble. Again, you should not half starve yourself by going without the nutritious food that you need to rebuild waste tissues. Some foods are not good for people often when in perfect health—very rich, sweet, highly seasoned dishes. Avoid these, but eat fairly substantial meals of plain foods. Eat slowly. Even if you drink nothing but water, you should not drink with meals. Drink before and after eating. Do not take pepsin or other artificial digestants. If you follow the foregoing simple instructions it is probable that you will not need any medicine at all; certainly, if you want to call it medicine, a little antacid after meals. The best antacid is ordinary bisurated magnesia, which can be purchased at any drug store. This is said to act upon the stomach but on the contents of the stomach. Judges At Baby Show Have Mothers To Deal With

It may be set down right now, before the Better Baby Contest has closed its second day, that the majority of the mothers are going to find some flaw or other in the arrangements and administration.

In the first place, it would be surprising if every eligible baby in the City were not entered. Probably there are no possible absentees from the list, for the average mother regards her own offspring as in a class by itself. She would enter her five-months' old with something akin to confidence that it would "clean up" the choicest prizes. Hence, with several hundred mothers deeply interested in the contest, the position of the judges becomes slightly apparent. Yesterday about fifty babies were examined and reports have come in that the wisdom of Solomon was not strikingly apparent.

"My baby cried all the time," said one mother. He was not accustomed to strangers and, of course, they gave him a demerit for not gurgling at the doctors. First, he was stripped and all his measurements were taken. With calipers they gauged the depth of his chest and head. How could any child feel delighted over that. Next they transferred him to another Doctor who weighed him, examined his teeth—he only has three and a half, the last one not being all out. I never heard him cry so hard and continuously. At that, it seemed all the babies were bent on bawling and, at times there was quite a din. They did not seem to appreciate my girl and I'm sure I took her up. I might have known that would shown fav. ouritism. They can't expect a wee baby to act as if it had sense. It missed me and being among strangers, of course, cried. I haven't given up hope of winning a prize, but they should not have taken off marks for her crying and, besides, I'm sure they showed favouritism.

CHICAGO GIRLS SEEM TO PREFER WORK TO MARRIAGE

CHICAGO, Oct. 6.—A few years ago when a girl left school she immediately began to hunt a husband. Getting married was her only outlook, and the best chance she had of getting a home. It's different now. When a Chicago girl leaves school these days she immediately hunts a job. Then, when she has demonstrated her ability to support herself—and, perhaps, contribute largely towards sisters—she leisurely looks over the sisters—she leisurely loks over the male of the species and selects one to suit her fancy.

All of this is indicated by the new school census, according to W. L. Bodine, superintendent of compulsory education. His figures show there are 739,776 males engaged in occupations in the city, compared with 555,815 in 1900, while 293,811 females hold positions now, against 149,867 in 1900. The men gained only 33 per cent. while the women gained 58 per cent.

"These statistics show that the women and girls are fast breaking away from economic dependence on men," said Bodine. "Girls are not now marrying to get a home. Statistics show that marriages are not increasing with the same precentage of gains as the population."

Some of the occupations in which women and girls of Chicago are engaged and the number employed, are as follows: stenographers, 21,669; dressmakers, 15,600; domestics, 34,075; physicians, 600; janitresses, 725; bookkeepers, 9,077; merchants, 3,875; telephone operators, 4,777; milliners, 5,461; teachers, 8,573.

PARENTS OF LOCAL MAN CELEBRATE THEIR FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Carr, of Cavan, Have Their Golden Anniversary.

THOSE PRESENT

"Hallow the fiftieth year," so Moses said;
For they for half a century have been led
By God's good hand along life's upward slope,
Reaching at length this golden crest of hope,
Full well may pause and glance a moment back
Then, thankful, take again the upward track.
"Hallow the fiftieth year," the year of gold,
By bards and prophets heralded of old!
Life's rosary of half a hundred years
Told, one by one, with joys and prayers—and tears,
Meet now in this, which clasps the whole chain,
And in this hour you live them all again!
"Hallow the fiftieth year," Servants of God,
Who life's long road together thus have trod.
Your children rise and honour you to-day,
Friends of this golden milestone mark your way.
So long a path for two to walk as one!
And yet but yesterday these years begun!
"Hallow the fiftieth year," God grant you still
Years with us yet to work His holy will.
The countless centuries in the land of bliss,
When God has given you all the joys of this!
There fifty years shall seem a moment's play—
For there a thousand years counts but one day.
—William E. Barton.

Fifty years married is the happy lot of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Carr, of Cavan, who celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on Monday, September 28th. The ceremony was witnessed by the family and the immediate relatives and friends, and was unique in many respects.

On Sept. 27th, 1864, Abraham Carr was united in marriage to Miss Eleanor Armstrong, of Janetville, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. Peck, of Lifford, and then, as now, the lady and gentleman were held in the highest esteem by their many friends. They were well known throughout the entire countryside, which was not so thickly settled as to-day, and they are at the present time enjoying a quiet, retired life in Cavan.

On the occasion of the marriage a sister of the bride acted as bridesmaid, and the same lady acted in the same capacity again on Monday, 28th, last, in the person of Mrs. Jos. Reynolds of Lindsay. The groomsman at the first marriage, Mr. Jos. Reynolds acting as groomsman on the anniversary event.

The anniversary of their fifty years of happy married life was fittingly celebrated. Rev. Mr. Clarry of Peterborough, a former pastor, being present to officiate at the ceremony, at the conclusion of which all partook of a sumptuous repast. The table was prettily decorated and heavily laden with good things, to which all proceeded to do ample justice. Short speeches and appropriate toasts were made, the various speakers eulogizing on the many good points in the characters of the honoured couple, and wishing them many more years of happy married life.

During the remainder of the evening games of various kinds were indulged in and recitations and musical selections enjoyed.

Family Present.

Among those in attendance were the following members of the family: Messrs. Robert Carr, of Peterborough, and Creighton Carr of Cavan, sons, with their wives. Daughters, Mrs. J. Keegan, Mrs. W. Pritchard and Mrs. L. Parnell, of Cavan, with their husbands. Brothers: Robt. Armstrong, of St. Catharines, and James and William Armstrong, of Janetville. Sisters: Mrs. Jos. Reynolds, of Lindsay, Mrs. D. Hunter of Cavan, a sister of Mr. Carr, was also present, as well as a number of friends and distant relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Carr received a number of beautiful presents, which were of the costly and expensive kind. —Lindsay Warder.

Caretaker of City Buildings Gets Increase

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Wm. Langford, Chairman.

George Street Epworth League

The meeting of the Epworth League of George Street Church on Monday evening, Oct. 5th, was in charge of the Christian Citizenship Department. The topic "The Purpose of Citizenship," was one that should interest all especially at present. It was very ably handled by Mr. H. R. Cowan, who compared the work being done by Socialists and that being done by the Christian Church, pointing out the duty of all citizens. After the address a vote of thanks, moved by Mr. Logan, and seconded by Mr. Tinker, was heartily endorsed by the League. During the evening Mr. Brown rendered a solo in his usual pleasing style.

An encouraging feature of the evening was the receiving into membership of twenty-five new Leaguers.

PRISONERS OF WAR SAY GERMANS USE THEM WELL

Official Report From Berlin Shows 196,000 of the Allies Have Been Captured.

BERLIN, (via Amsterdam) Oct. 5.—British, French, Belgian and Russian prisoners of war are unanimous in declaring that they have received good treatment at the hands of their German captors. The International News service correspondent was permitted to "visit" some of the prison camps on Sunday. He found that the prisoners were being well fed and given humane treatment.

From none of the prisoners could be secured any confirmation of the alleged atrocities that have been described in such harrowing details by the English, Belgian and French correspondents. They declared that the German soldiers at all times seemed to be under perfect discipline.

According to official lists that the correspondent was permitted to inspect the German armies in the western and eastern theatres have taken 196,000 prisoners since the war began. It is frankly admitted that errors may have been made in these lists as a result of duplications in the reports of various corps commanders, but it is asserted that the lists are correct in the main, this being shown in the immense quantities of supplies needed to provide the prisoners with food.

Russians—110,000.
French—62,000.
Belgians—18,000.
British—6,000.

The Germans have suffered heavy losses in the war. No attempt is made to conceal that fact. The lists already published show that nearly 100,000 have been killed, wounded or reported as missing.

Count Von Elsa, General of the Saxony infantry, has been seriously wounded. He was struck by fragments of a shell that also wounded his chief of staff Colonel Von Eulix. Prince Frederick William of Prussia was wounded while leading a charge by his men, but is expected to recover. He has received the iron cross.

A Transient Traders' Case

Another case of the contravention of the Transient Traders' Act came before Magistrate Dumble this morning. Chief Thompson stated that the defendant, Abraham Iinoff, came from Montreal some months ago, and opened a store on George Street, immediately below Charlotte Street. He informed defendant that he would have to take out a license, but up to the present no license had been applied for.

Mr. Goodwill, who appeared for the defendant, said that the defendant had no desire to evade the law, but was not in a position at present to pay the $100 fee.

His Worship said he had no alternative but to impose a fine of $20 and costs, but he would further adjudge that in the event of the defendant taking out a license within one week the fine should be applied to the account of the fee.

Well, I'll tell you all about it, said Duncan Garrow, when charged with drunkenness. I quit work yesterday and went for my money at 9 o'clock, when I was told to return at one. I did so, and was further asked to call at five, and by that time I was "full up."

Two dollars, said His Worship.

Howard McMaster paid a like fine for a similar offence.

CENTRAL SCHOOL GROUNDS ROLLED AND LEVELLED

The movement for better playgrounds in the City has taken form to a certain extent in the repairing and leveling of the extensive grounds behind the Central School. This playground, though a large one, has for years been in a very rough condition. As a baseball field it was impossible to have a satisfactory match as the unevenness of the ground made it very hard to field the ball.

But the Board of Education, a few months ago, considered favourably the prospect of turning these grounds into a very presentable condition. The City, which had previously hinted that any move the Board made in this direction would be supported by the Council, lent the steam roller for the purpose. As a result the grounds have been levelled and rolled and are now in spendid shape for baseball, Rugby or any other game.

The possibility of making a good rink for winter pastime is also increased. A little attention to keep the grounds in condition and the young blood of that locality will not lack a playgrounds in the future.

BASKETBALL FOR PUBLIC SCHOOL GIRLS

The girls of the local public schools are being encouraged to take a little interest in athletics and outdoor sports. In the schools of the city they have been organized for basketball games which will be played under the supervision of the teachers, and it is probable that a public school league, including a team from each of the six school will be formed.

Already the thing has been entered into with enthusiasm by the girls of several schools, and several basketball teams have been already formed. The game is played outdoors, and arrangements are being made to have suitable grounds commissioned at each of the schools for practicing and playing the game.

CHANGE IN BUSINESS

Having disposed of my Meat Business, 686 George St., to S. C. Kernaghan, owing to ill-health, and thanking my customers for past favours I can assure them the same courteous treatment as in the past. I have arranged for all my accounts to be paid here, and all accounts not settled by December 31st, 1914, will be handed to my solicitor for collection.

A Farmer On Credit Gobbling

Peterborough, Oct. 6th, 1914.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—A two-column article appears in the Times this morning, saying that Mr. Burnham has given a cup for the ploughing match, to be given in this county. This does not say anything of the half dozen other persons who have given prizes, four times in value of Mr. Burnham's prize.

Why the Times persists in garbling everything it prints, in order to give this man some political support, is beyond the understanding of a reasonable man.

However, the thing works out so that all the other persons who have given fairly substantial sums for prizes for this ploughing match, feel that Mr. Burnham and his friends have tried to gobble up the credit for the whole thing. When the prize list is shown, it will be seen that Mr. Burnham takes a very small place on it, and if it were not for the other persons who assisted in it, and had Mr. Burnham taken alone each there would have been no ploughing match.

Yours truly,
FARMER.

WILL FORM COMMITTEE

A meeting of citizens will be held in the City Council Chamber on Wednesday evening at eight o'clock to form a committee of the local branch of the Industrial Association of Ontario to carry on the work of the Provincial Association in this municipality of gathering information of the unemployed situation and devising ways and means of improving conditions. A large attendance and useful suggestions will be appreciated.

Allege Discrimination.

Now some of the Germans, although their own countrymen stand sponsors for the stand taken, allege to find in the policy unfair discrimination against their nationality, but as the Order is purely Canadian and American the vast majority of the members cannot see it that way. —Telegram.

VAL CARTIER CAMP NOW ABANDONED
TROOPS ALL AWAY IN FIVE DAYS

Last of the Twenty-seven Transports Sailed Friday for British Port.

EVERY PRECAUTION

QUEBEC, P.Q., Oct. 5.—With the departure of the twenty-seventh troopship late yesterday afternoon, Valcartier Camp became the peaceful place it had been before the greatest military camp in Canadian history was established there.

Less than a thousand men of the great gathering of 35,000 soldiers and workers now remains and these will be occupied for some time in clearing up the place. The last transport to leave was the one carrying Col. Victor A. Williams, adjutant-general of the militia, who will retain command of the contingent until its arrival on the other side.

It took forty trains to move the infantry and the baggage to Quebec, and the baggage of the contingent was transported in 75 box cars. The artillery was the first to move. The went by road, starting on Friday morning of last week. The first to leave camp was the second brigade of Field Artillery under Colonel A. J. Creelman of Montreal.

The cavalry followed. The Royal Canadian Dragoons and the Strathcona Horse, with all the mounted troops, covered the journey by road, as the artillery had done before them. The transports and water carts and ambulance waggons were amongst them, several being brought in case o femergency. These now remain in the sheds on the river-front, the only tangible evidences of the activities of the past week.

Of the artillery, the 3rd Brigade, under Lieut.-Col. Citzhell, of Toronto, were the last to leave. Next came the infantry, all of it by train. They were taken direct to the wharves just as passengers going to the liners have been taken in the past. They were brought beside the ships and there embarked. It was all done quietly, much of it by night, and military guards kept the crowd away.

There was scarcely an accident Thirty-three thousand troops had been mobilized and given training in seven weeks, and they left Canadian shores in five days.

Now there is only the camp and those who are dismantling it. Tents are disappearing before one's eyes, and by the beginning of next week there will be scant evidence at Valcartier of the mobilization of the contingent.

Montreal Corps Go on Board.

The infantry men and rifles from Montreal were among the last of the line regiments to leave camp.

The 14th battalion, under Lt.-Col. W. W. Burland, embarked on the last day of the movement from camp. So also did the 5th Royal Highlanders. The day previous, Lt.-Col. F. S. Meighen and the men from the 65th Regiment and the 1st Grenadier Guards, all of Montreal, left Valcartier.

As the ships were filled they moved out. Some went a few miles up stream, and some a few miles down stream, but all stayed near Quebec. Many of the ships moved from their wharves at night, empty ships in many cases replacing them to wait for their share of the men and guns which they had to bear across the ocean. In five days the work was finished.

On the last day the troopships formed a line in mid-stream below Quebec, the Lapland leading. Late at night the staff of the contingent embarked on the Franconia. In the small hours of the morning she steamed away, and by now has probably taken her place at the head of the line of ships.

Colonel Williams is in command of the contingent at present. With him are Lieutenant-Colonel A. H. MacDonell, D.S.O.; Major E. De B. Panet, Lieut.-Col. Gordon Hall, Major Mitchell, Lieut.-Col. Lamb, Capt. J. S. Brown, Capt. G. H. Hamilton, Capt. Legie Armstrong, Major F. Homer-Dixon, Major H. T. Hughes, Capt. G. Killam, Lieut. Williams Taylor, Lieut. W. Sifton, Lieut.-Col. J. W. Neil, veterinary officer; Col. J. Carleton Jones, Lieut.-Col. J. W. Bridges, Lieut.-Col. Nasmith of Toronto, Rev. Mr. Steacy, of Ottawa, and Rev. Father Jolicoeur.

Father Jolicoeur is parish priest of the Valcartier district, and has been given charge of the Roman Catholic chaplains of the contingent. Mr. Steacy is in command of the Church of England chaplains.

The camp at Valcartier is now under the command of Lieut.-Col. G. P. Murphy, of Ottawa. Major D. P. Papineau, of Montreal, is assistant adjutant-general; Captain MacDonald is veterinary officer; Major H. Ross Matthews senior officer. Others now at Valcartier are Lieut.-Col. R. Guay, district supply officer; Major L. J. Desrosiers, Captain E. Woods, Major Laveux, Captain J. Gilbert, Major Déroche of Ottawa, and Lieut. Irwin of Montreal.

CASE OF CROSS VS. DAVIDSON WAS ADJOURNED

The case of Cross vs. Davidson came before His Honour Judge Huycke in County Court this morning. In this action the plaintiffs, Henry T. Cross and Richard Cross, are claiming the sum of $286, which was made by the defendant through the sale of the plaintiff's house in Campbellford, costs of the costs of the case and damages in connection with the plaintiff's furniture which was in the house when it was sold.

It seems that Richard Cross, an engineer in Toronto, owned a house in Campbellford, and owed a sum of money to the defendant, Charles Davidson, who is a baker in Campbellford. To pay this debt Cross authorized Davidson to collect rent for the house. He was to keep the amount of the debt and return the remainder to the defendants. But a mortgage of $440 on the house fell due and was foreclosed. The house was sold and bought by Davidson for $510. Later he sold it at a profit of $285.

The plaintiffs claim that as Davidson was acting as their agent to collect the rent, and did not notify them of the sale of their house when the mortgage was foreclosed, that he had no right to buy and sell the house except as their agent. They therefore claim the profit on the transaction and the costs of the case.

The defendant, of course, denies any duplicity on his part and claims that he only collected $5 rent, and that the plaintiffs still owe him the rest of the money for which he was authorized to collect rent.

Mr. Geo. A. Payne of Campbellford, was solicitor for the defendant and Mr. D. J. Lynch of Campbellford, for the plaintiffs.

The case was adjourned until the December sittings of the County Court.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICE WAS WELL ATTENDED

Rev. H. T. Crossley, at St. James' Methodist Church, last night had an extra good congregation for the second night of a campaign. From 7:45 to 8 a few hymns were sung from the Book: "Make Christ King"; then Mr. Crossley sang "The Model Church." After responsively reading Ps. 130, and 1; and prayer being offered, Mr. Crossley sang "God Cares For the Sparrow," and gave his evening sermon on "The Seven Great Big Blunders." The "Gospel" he said, meant Good News; yet men were constantly making big blunders in misunderstanding or in misappropriating it. They did not give to children the place Jesus gave them in the kingdom. They often thought they were sceptical—a state less frequent than it was 20 years ago. Often it was nothing more than a temptation to doubt that assailed them; Again men often under conviction were deluded by waiting for feelings to take the place of Faith. Feelings, he interpreted, as moral perspiration; and made telling reference to Sam Jones' incident or the man standing by a tree, with axe in hand, waiting to sweat before he struck a blow. Backslider blundered awfully when he turned his back against God. According to Scripture, Backsliding was Spiritual Adultery. Secret profession of Christianity was as great a blunder as refusing to put up a banner when in the service of the King. The final blunder was when men are content to wish or hope to be a Christian when they may know that by accepting Jesus Christ as a Personal Saviour and King, he is a Christian. The meetings begin each night with a Song Service from 7:45 to 8:00. His Song-Sermon to-night is entitled "Seven Crowns." This should attract many to attend.

A smoky lamp is often the result of a clogged and dirty wick. Take the burner out of the lamp and soak it in a little strong washing soda and hot water, then dry thoroughly, and the lamp will burn much better.

Ald. Anderson Has Resigned

Alderman Anderson, Chairman of the Finance Committee, who has been appointed accountant on the staff of the new Hydro-Electric system in this city, tendered his resignation last night. It was accepted with regret on the motion of Aldermen Johnston and Green.

When the resignation was received Mayor Buller spoke of hte regret the Council felt at Alderman Anderson's resignation and said that he did not think any better alderman had ever sat in the Council. Alderman Anderson had been very attentive and painstaking in his work as an alderman.

Alderman Johnston said that Alderman Anderson had been an exceptionally good man and he congratulated the Commission on securing such a splendid man. Alderman Green in seconding the motion spoke eulogistically of Alderman Anderson's term and work in the Council, and Alderman Duncan spoke briefly too in praise of Alderman Anderson's services and regret at his leaving the Council.

In reply Alderman Anderson thanked his colleagues for their kind words in reference to him. He was glad to have had the confidence of the Council during the three years he had been chairman of the Finance Committee. In leaving the Council he could not fail to say a word for the kindness of the City Clerk, Mr. S. R. Armstrong, who had been unvaryingly helpful.

Ald. Johnston Is Appointed

After Ald. Anderson's resignation, last night, it was the Council's duty to elect a Chairman of the Finance Committee. Ald. Johnston was nominated for the position by Alds. Duncan and Green, and Ald. McIntyre was nominated by Ald. Saunders and Duffus. By a vote of five to four, Ald. Johnston was elected to the position, and from now on is the Chairman of the Finance Committee. The voting was as follows:

For Ald. McIntyre—Alds. Saunders, Duffus, Stratton and McIntyre. For Ald. Johnston—Alds. Duncan, Green, Dobbin, Langford and Johnston.

CAPTURED UHLAN SAID GERMAN WORKMEN WERE OPPOSED TO THE WAR

Would Not Fight the Belgians, Convinced That He Was Treacherous Invader of Friendly Country.

ANTWERP, September, (By Mail to New York), A contributor to the Antwerp Socialist paper, De Volkwagant, who is a soldier with the Belgian army in the field, writes the following remarkable story:

Last Thursday we succeeded in making 16 German Uhlans prisoners of war. I was one of those ordered to guard them and to escort them from the theatre of battle. First we did not speak to our captured enemies. They, too, were little inclined to talk. As I could understand and speak German, I was ordered to address the commands to the prisoners.

One, a smartly built fellow, not too big, but broad shouldered, of manly and proud bearing, began to whisper all sorts of questions to me. He asked me where we were, what would happen to them and whether the Belgian population were infuriated against the Germans.

At first I did not enter into any parley with the talkative Uhlan. Before answering any of his questions I asked him who he was, whence he came, and what had been his business in his own country. Imagine my amazement when he told me that he had been a paid official of a trade union in one of the largest towns in Prussia. Thus I stood face to face with a leading comrade in the labour movement.

It was now time for me to make myself known, and to listen to him. I shall now repeat as faithfully as possible what my captured comrade told me.

Socialists Against War.

"Our party," he began, "was fully occupied with an enthusiastic agitation against the war when we were being mobilised. Countless meetings, and even riotous demonstrations were taking place throughout the length and breadth of the country. Day by day our press published violent articles against the war. In the last resort, Vorwaerts even addressed an appeal to the Emperor to preserve the peace. It availed us nothing. The Junker clique was bent on war.

"I am fully convinced, that it is the Kaiser and his satellites that are the chief culprits in the European war.

"We then had hastily to make all preparations to march to the frontier. Wherever we came our army was enthusiastically cheered by the overheated population. This caused my colleagues to go into raptures, but it made me feel sad. In the town we heard nothing but 'Hochs' for the Kaiser and cries of 'To Paris,' and 'To St. Petersburgh.' Of our destination we had no knowledge. On arrival at Cologne our regiment was divided into two. We proceeded to Aix-la-Chapelle, where we remained for two days. I had a dread presentiment that we were going to march against the French. The report reached us there that Jaures had been murdered and that the revolution had broken out in Paris.

Uhlan Would Not Fight.

"With a feeling of great anguish I heard the news of Jaures' death. In secret I wept bitterly. We loved him dearly, our great Jaures. He was the darling of the German Social Democrats. He was the man who had drawn closer and closer the bond of fraternity between the German and French workers. They did not leave me much time to ponder over the great loss of the international. We had to advance, and to my horror—over the Belgian frontier.

"When that came clear to me, I finally settled it in my mind; I would not fight. Not that I am afraid, or a coward. Had I been sent to Russia I would have fought to my last breath against the paid soldiers of the Tsar. But now I was told to become a treacherous invader in a friendly country and to deal out murder among a brave and industrious people. It fairly galls, where the seat of the Socialist International is, in the country where Marx and Engels, driven from all lands, found a haven of refuge, in the country of the pioneers of the general strike—no never!" I have kept my word, comrade. Now I am your prisoner of war, they may do with me what they will, but I can rest content in this."

When we parted we grasped each others hands, and he said his most fervent wish was to see a speedy conclusion of the war, so that he might set to work again with the might in the organization of the working class.

11. That the matter of removing trees from Maude street be left with the Chairman and the City Engineer.

12. That the City Engineer notify the person who put rubbish in the drain on Edinburgh street to remove it.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Chairman.

COMRADESHIP IN THE FIELD

English newspapers which have been received contain a pleasant anecdote of the fighting at Mons. It comes from the French paper, the Liberte, and concerns a Scottish regiment which is not named. This regiment was occupying a trench, swept by violent rifle fire and artillery fire, when two privates noticed that a Frenchman attached to the battalion as interpreter, occupied the most exposed spot in the trench. One private said: 'The Frenchman is badly placed; let's widen his trench," and during a minute, paying no attention to the hail of bullets and shrapnel, the privates deepened the trench, and with the same calm resumed their places.

German Catholic Foresters Object To War Policy

Some adverse comment has been made by the German members of the Catholic Order of Foresters regarding the policy adopted by the High Court at Chicago in reference to members of the Order who have gone to war. Canadian Foresters, however, are one in upholding the decision of the supreme body in the Order. This is, in effect, that the beneficiaries of all Foresters going from Canada to fight for Great Britain or her allies shall be protected, but that any leaving the United States to fight for either side shall thereby surrender their membership in the Order.

Germans Are Strong.

There are many German-American Foresters; so strong are they, in fact, that in the official journal of the Order the minutes of the High Court are printed in the language of the Fatherland as well as in French and English.

The policy of the High Court was urged by Mr. M. F. Mogan, high trustee from Toronto, but it was adopted on the motion of two members of the court in which there are four members of German extraction, four French, four Irish, and one Pole.

Allege Discrimination.

Now some of the Germans, although their own countrymen stand sponsors for the stand taken, allege to find in the policy unfair discrimination against their nationality, but as the Order is purely Canadian and American the vast majority of the members cannot see it that way.—Telegram.

THE LIFE OF A WATCH

It should be cleaned and oiled once a year. Many dead watches are allowed to die without cleaning and oiling, and the result is the oil is entirely dried up, the pivots dig, become out of shape, and in many cases nearly as much new pivots need to put it in proper condition again. The old saying "A stitch in time saves nine" holds good.

"Fire Number One Torpedo Tube"—An exciting moment on board a British torpedo boat destroyer. The little vessel has crept up on a German auxiliary cruiser in the early mists of the morning and is about to send after her a death dealing torpedo. Some of the best men of the British naval service are aboard these scout ships of the fleet, and their work so far has shown the skill and darling of which the British Empire can well be proud.

PARIS AT BAY

The Tragic Week With the Germans at the Gates

You have ben told of the appearance of Paris—empty streets, miles of closed shops, with placards on the shutters—"Closed because the proprietor and personnel have been called to the colours"; no 'buses or trams, the few cabs piled with the luggage of those trying to get away, almost no way to traverse the city's splendid distances but to walk. In London it had seemed that we knew nothing of what was going on, but in Paris one knew less. Papers could not even be cried aloud on the streets, and the only news they had was the three or four blind sentences of the official communique and a word about some Servian or Russian victory in some unpronounceable region of the East. "France is a history, a life, an idea which has taken its place in the world, and the bit of earth from which that history, that life, that thought, has radiated, we cannot sacrifice without sealing the stone of the tomb over ourselves and our children and the generations to follow us." Thus George Clemenceau was writing in "L'Homme Libre," and the people knew that this was true. And yet in that ghastly silence of Paris, broken only by the constant flight of military automobiles, screaming through the streets on missions nobody understood, those left behind did not even know where the enemy was, where the defenders were, or what was being done to save Paris.

Watching a Hostile Zeppelin.

You must imagine that vast space, with the bridge and river and Invalides behind it, and beyond the light tracery of the Eiffel Tower, covered with little specks of people, all looking upward. Back along the boulevards, on roofs on both banks, all Paris, in fact, was similarly staring—"le nez en l'air." And straight over head, so far up that even the murmur of the motor was unheard, no more than a bird, indeed, against the pale sky, "Mr. Taube," circling indolently about, picking his moment, plotting our death.

I thought of the shudder of outraged horror that ran over Antwerp when the Zeppelin came in the night to slaughter a few women and helpless non-combatants. It seemed the last unnecessary stroke of brutality to a heroic people who had already stood so much. Very different was "Mr. Taube's" reception here. He might have been a holiday balloon or some particularly fancy piece of fireworks. Everywhere people were staring upward, looking through their closed fists, through opera glasses. Out of the arcades of the Hotel de Crillon one man in a bathrobe and another in a suit of purple underclothes came running, to gaze calmly into the zenith until the "von" had gone.

As the little speck drew straight overhead, these human specks scattered over the Place de la Concorde suddenly realized that they were in the line of fire, and scattered just as people run from a sudden shower. This was the most interesting part of "Mr. Taube's" visit—these helpless little humans scrambling away like ants or beetles to shelter, and that tiny Ancient bird sailing slowly far overhead. This was a bit of the modern war one reads about—it was a picture from some fanciful story of Mr. H. G. Wells. They scattered for the arcades, and some, quaintly enough, ran under the trees in the near-by Champs-Elysees. There was a "Bang!" but it was not a bomb as near as I could make out, only part of the absurd fusillade that now began. They were firing from the Eiffel Tower, whence they might possibly have hit something, and from roofs with ordinary guns and revolvers which could not possibly have hit anything at all.

The Spirit of the Paris Streets.

Descending, I turned into the Rue des Abbesses, crowded with vegetable carts and thrifty housewives. The grey air was filled with their bargaining, with the smell of vegetables and fruit, and in the midst of it, in front of two men playing violins, a girl in black was singing "Le Fusil de Bois"—about the little boy in an Alsatian village who was shot by the Prussians because he cried "Vive la France!" and pretended to be a soldier with his wooden gun.

True or not it was one of those things that get believed. Poems were written about it and pictures made of it all over Paris—presently it will be history. And this girl, true child of the Paris asphalt, was flinging it at them, holding the hearts of these broad-faced mothers in the hollow of her hand.

She would sing one verse, pause, and sell copies of the song, then put a hand to her hoarse throat and sing the next. The music was not sold with the song, and it was rather curious and difficult—a mournful sort of recitative with sudden shifts into a rhythm suggesting soldiers marching—and so the little semicircle of listeners sang the words over solemnly with her until after a time they had almost learned the tune. "You can imagine how a Frenchman—he was a young fellow who lived in a rear tenement over on the other side of Montmartre—would write that song. The little boy playing soldier, the Prussians marching into the village:

"Happily, he murmured, I am quite small,
But the day will come when I shall be a man,
Ardent,
Valiant,
Then, full of courage, I shall free
Down there, down there, all our brothers from Alsace!"

Then, after each verse, a pause, and very slowly and lower down, with the crowd joining in:

"Petit—enfant . . . little boy, close your big blue eyes, for the bandits are hideous and cruel, and they will kill you if they read what you are thinking . . . . ferment tes grands yeux bleus. . . ."

Down below them as they sang, Paris lay in her grey mist, and out beyond that somewhere the little soldiers in red breeches were fighting—it might have been the voice of Paris, herself, Paris of lost Alsace, and hopeless revanche, of ardor and charm crushed once, as they might be again, as the voice of that pale girl in black, with her air of coming from lights and cigarette smoke, and of these simple market women rose above the noise of the street, half dirge, half battle cry—for out behind the fog the Prussian avalanche was rolling down and the fate of Paris hanging in the balance that morning. — Rohl in Collier's.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY

An eminent scientist, the other day, gave his opinion that the most wonderful discovery of recent years was the discovery of Zam-Buk. Just think! As soon as a single thin layer of Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or a sore, such injury is insured against blood poison! Not one species of microbe has been found that Zam-Buk does not kill!

Then again! As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a sore, or a cut, or to skin disease, it stops the smarting. That is why children are such friends of Zam-Buk. They care nothing for the science of the thing. All they know is that Zam-Buk stops their pain. Mothers should never forget this.

Again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or to a diseased part, the cells beneath the skin's surface are so stimulated that new healthy tissue is quickly formed. This forming of fresh healthy tissue from below is Zam-Buk's secret of healing. The tissue thus formed is worked up to the surface and literally casts off the diseased tissues above it. This is why Zam-Buk cures are permanent.

Only the other day Mr. Marsh, of 101 Delorimier Avenue, Montreal, called upon the Zam-Buk Co. and told them that for over twenty-five years he had been a martyr to eczema. His hands were at one time so covered with sores that he had to sleep in gloves. Four years ago Zam-Buk was introduced to him, and in a few months it cured him. To-day—over three years after his cure of a disease he had for twenty-five years—he is still cured, and has had no trace of any return of the eczema!

All druggists sell Zam-Buk at 50c. box, or we will send free trial box if you send this advertisement and a 1c stamp (to pay return postage). Address Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

OFFICER'S LETTER DESCRIBES WORK OF FEEDING ARMY

German's Letter to His Mother Expresses Deep Hatred of the British—Wants Chance at Them

ADMITS BURNED TOWNS

ROTTERDAM, Oct. 5.—The following letter of a reserve officer to his mother, published in the Cologne Gazette on Sept. 16, throws an illuminating light on substantiate conditions in the German forces now in France. It is instructive also in a number of other respects:

"It is 4 this morning and we are busy digging trenches, and now the crash of artillery which kept up all morning is no longer heard. I am sitting under a tree, reading again and again your dear letter and the remainder of my mail. Indeed, dear mother, if it could be done I would telegraph you every day. But that is impossible; so now, while I have the time, I will write you as long a letter as possible. One never knows what the future will bring.

"This is a very idyllic spot. I am disturbed now and then in a most agreeable manner. Ripe plums fall from the tree—most conscientiously I eat them. I have breakfasted well, and the company barber gave me a shave—which was needed badly. In addition I have managed to get some washing done, and now I feel again like a gentleman.

"As I already told you, the commissary officer of our battalion and I went to the same college. I have been obliged to pay this happy coincidence with many a bite I needed myself. But yesterday he told me that he had managed to get two honest-to-goodness, real and otherwise bona fide hams. I lost no time accepting my share—it was fine and will last until to-night. To the great surprise of the captain I managed to get one-eighth of a pound of butter from a farm. Commissary bread, ham and butter—what a Lucullan feast I had last night. But there is nothing to smoke. Kindly send me a few cigarettes and some pipe tobacco.

"The owner of the farm where I got the butter is a woman, thirty-two years old and rather wealthy. She left the place, not because she feared the Germans, but the French, as her manager told me. I wish these people had sense enough to remain on their farms. We do them no injury and pay them for everything we take, while the property of those who run away is naturally without owner and thus not protected.

"There is no evidence here of 'volkskrieg' (war carried on by the population, as in Belgium). The people are rather afraid and do everything to get along with us. Everything is upside down nowadays, dear mother. Master alone is the soldier, right and wrong, as matters which the rules on, all power and responsibility has been placed on his shoulders.

"Most of the villages fired were set afire by artillery shells, and then they are burned down purposely, as is done because the inhabitants have fired upon our soldiers. In the villages of "——" and "——" no stone remains in place. Some of our hussars entered them and were treacherously shot down. The example has brought good results. We regretted that we had to do it, and now that the people have been brought to their senses, further measures of that sort have been prohibited.

"In the village of "——" I saw an old man sit in a house which had been destroyed. In front of the ruins of the venerable grey, old man—the priest who sacredly the remnant of his congregation with sorrow. I entered the village at the head of two battalions, and when the old priest saw me he looked at me in a way that cut into my very soul. Then with a sudden motion of fear he took off his hat and held it in his hand until the last man had passed him. I think he feared that a refusal to greet us would be taken as an offence. What went on in the mind of the old priest would be interesting to know. But this is war, and we did not want the indescribable misery which it has brought on.

Hear News of Victory.

"Last night at roll call we heard the news of the German victory over the English, French and Belgians. We especially appreciated the news concerning the English. Our hate for those perfidious fellows is universal and much greater than our feelings against the French. Everybody wants a chance to get at them, and God have mercy on them should they get before our rifles—from us they need expect none.

"At 7 in the evening we heard the news of the Russian defeat. I hope that the good tidings will be confirmed. We are advancing everywhere.

"It is a beautiful evening, and I will have to do field duty to-night. The entire village had prepared itself for defence, but in the last moment they lost heart. Just now they brought in a French soldier who had been in hiding five days in a chicken house.

"It my side the captain is cutting up a cucumber—oil and vinegar have been secured after a long search."

While the officer is on outpost duty he continues the letter.

"Well, I am out in the field. In front of us the territory occupied by the enemy. War is a terrible thing. This noon while I was inspecting the outposts, five French chasseurs on patrol work advanced towards our position. We were in the woods. Fire was opened on them at 200 metres. I regretted having to give the command. The officer, 26 years old and married two days before the mobilization, as I learned afterwards, was killed. The others were wounded and taken prisoners. We did not aim at the horses—they and the saddles are first class, and now five of us will ride. To have to do that sort of thing is distressing, but I have received mail twice so far, and every time the news arrives I invariably there is nothing like it. What is the letter. We are kept from human ken have no tents and are not permitted to make a fire. My meals so far have consisted of dry bread and I dreamt that my supper would be again dry bread, but, oh joy, one of my men arrives with a tremendous slice of bacon which he has found somewhere. My orderly has managed to get a few onions, and we have succeeded in gathering six cigarettes—what a glorious supper.

"The field kitchens are a fine institution. We officers get our food from them together with the men, and I have never had better. It is always well cooked. You would appreciate the field kitchens for there is nothing better and to eat than the contents of an field kitchen. Tomorrow there will be no sleeping, and I wish morning were here. All's well. Thousand kisses. OTTO."

THE WORLD OF SPORT

ATHLETICS CONFIDENT AS BIG SERIES DRAWS NEAR

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 6.— Should George Stallings' Braves win four straight games in the coming world's series, there will be an army of baseball experts who still will consider the Athletics the greatest baseball machine on earth. The reason is that in a man-for-man analysis, the Braves don't even compare.

Connie Mack can turn his batting order upside down; he can put McInis, who is hitting fifth, at the top; Bary, now in seventh position, second and trail with Schang and Baker and have a better attacking force than almost any other club in either league.

Shift 'em Anyway.

He can submerge Collins, Strunk, Murphy and Walsh and yet present a battle-front that will terrorize the pitchers of any league. Indeed, there is no rest for the pitcher who opposes the champions of Christendom; no let-up from the top to the bottom of the batting list.

The Athletics play the hit-and-run with every batter on the team, including their pitchers.

Bender and Plank.

Connie will use two veterans, Eddie Plank and Chief Bender, in preference.

In a seven-game series, the pitching is by all odds the biggest factor. A year ago Connie Mack uncovered Joe Bush at the psychological moment and Joe Bush beat the Giants, after Plank had failed in his first game. This year Connie has a big left-hander named Bressler, who has been wining regularly of late. He also has Wykoff, who has been primed for two years and is almost ready for a whirl in the big series, but it is to Bender and Plank that the Athletic players look for the sharpshooting which will land them the winners' end of the big purse next month. And Bender at least seems fit.

Winning Habit.

"Winning pennants is a chronic habit with me," says Cornelius (Connie Mack) McGillicuddy.

"It wasn't so in 1902, the year I won my first flag. The Athletics came to St. Louis that season four and one-half games in front. Jimmy McAleer's Browns gave us a tremendous scare by winning four straight. McAlear had Burkett, Heidrick, Wallace, Powell, Donahue, Dick Padden, Sugden and Kahoe. The Athletics cleaned up in Detroit.

"Jimmy Callahan's White Sox gave me a great fight in 1905 and George Stallings' New York Yankees fought the Athletics to a finish in 1910. The Giants whipped the Athletics in 1905. My men couldn't hit Mathewson or McGinnity. I think Matty shut us out three straight.

Not Worrying.

"All the prophets are predicting that the Boston Braves will clout our pitchers. Counting chickens before they are hatched. I'm not worrying about our twirling department. There are some hefty sluggers in the American League. Nevertheless our boxmen held 'em safe all year and I can't see Stallings' hitless wonders starting anything with the big stick.

Paste Up These Facts About The World Series Contestants

First two games, Oct. 9 and 10—at Shibe Park, Philadelphia.
Second two games, Oct. 12 and 13—at Fenway Park, Boston.
Fifth game, if necessary, Oct. 14—at Shibe Park, Philadelphia.
Sixth game, if necessary, Oct. 15—at Fenway Park, Boston.
Seventh game, if necessary, Oct. 16—at a place to be decided by toss.

If postponements are necessary because of weather conditions, dates not cities, will be shifted.

Teams must remain in either city until above scheduled obligations have been filled, and tie games count as postponements.

Players share in proceeds of the first four games, drawn verdicts to count.

Sixty per cent. of the remainder after th national commission has deducted 10 per cent. of the gross, will form the players' pool.

Winning team will divide among its eligible members 60 per cent. and losing team 40 per cent. of players' pool.

Seats in Boston range in price from 50 cents for rush seats, in centre field bleachers, to $5 for box seats. The $1 seats are non-reserved.

The price of seats at Shibe Park vary from $1 to $5. Dollar seats are not reserved.

Reserved seats in each city will be sold in serial form, which means each purchaser will have to buy for three games instead of for individual contests.

In case three games are not played in each city, national commission, which has full charge of world series tickets, will redeem unused coupons.

Robert E. McRoy, former secretary of the Boston Red Sox, has been selected as special representative of the national commission to superintend the distribution of reserved seats.

Umpires—Byron and Klem of the National League, and Dineen and Hildebrand of the American League.

The list of eligible players, as announced by Chairman August Herrmann, follows.

PHILADELPHIA—Connie Mack, manager; Baker, Barry, Bender, Bressler, Bush, Collins, Coombs, Davies, Kopf, Lapp, McAvoy, McInnis, Murphy, Oldring, Pennock, Plank, Schang Strunk, Thomas, Thompson, Walsh, Wychoff, and Shawkey.

BOSTON—George Stallings, manager; Cather, Cocreham, Connolly, Cottrell, Crutcher, Davis, Deal, Devore, Dugey, Evers, Gilbert, Gowdy, Hess, James, Maranville, Mann, Martin, Mitchell, Moran, Rudolph, Schmidt, Smith, Tyler, Whaling, Whitted, and Strand.

All games start at 2 p.m.

ANALYSIS OF THE BRAVES

The miracle of the Braves is answered in the main by two vital factors — the genius and courage of Stallings, as related before, and the finest defence in the game.

Boston reached the top in 1914 just as Fielder Jones did in 1906—with no great attack, but with a defence almost impregnable. Boston's batting average all the year has been below .250. Her runners have stolen fewer bases than any other rival. Her attack has never been powerful or consistent. But attached to wonderful pitching was wonderful fielding—and all of it at its best in the pinch. The Braves made few errors when an error counted. They had the faculty of rising to meet the occasion—whether it needed wonderful pitching, a wonderful stop or a double by Hank Gowdy down the left field line. And Gowdy, another Giant cast-off, furnished his share of these telling, timely blows. And if one man fell down, some one else took his place.

Which recalls another remarkable feature of the Brave miracle. In the closing days of the stretch, when the leaders were supposed to be on the dizzy verge of "cracking under the strain," they ripped their way to ten victories in a row. And in eight of these ten victories they came from behind, centered their rugged assault upon one inning and dashed on to victory. And in these ten straight contests at least seven different people played star roles, Connolly alone breaking up two tight battles with lusty blows that cleaned the bases.

For this reason Stallings refused to pick out any one or two men as the main stars. "I have never had a club with finer team play," he said. "It was a case of work together and pull together. Each man was for the other fellow and the team—but not for himself. Each man contributed his share. And they all understood that what I said on the bench in a tight game didn't go after the game was over. So there was no sulking and no loafing. It was hustle, work, and fight—through every inning of every day of every week. It was the gamest fight I've ever seen a ball club make—and I've been in the game for thirty years, or this reason I'd rather not pick out any one or two stars. One or two stars or four or five stars or nine or ten stars could never have done what my club accomplished—unless they were all working together—which stars do not always do. It was a case of team play—of twenty-five or thirty men all pulling in the same direction without a quitter, or a sulker or a loafer in the bunch."

Which was of all the more value in a year where so many on other clubs were defying discipline or loafing in the knowledge that another league was waiting to take them in.

The teachers of the King George school in East City have laid out a tennis court on the school grounds. Games were commenced yesterday afternoon and will be continued during the remainder of the season.

FOOTBALL.

The St. James J. F. C. invite Park St. J. F. C. to a friendly game to be played on the Exhibition Grounds next Saturday afternoon, Oct. 10. Kick-off at 2:30 p.m. A suitable referee will be on hand to take charge of the game. St. James boys would like some other junior teams to join in with them in a series of friendly games. St. James' team will be as follows: Goal, A. McLeish; backs, Smith and J. Houghton; half-backs, R. McLeish, Black and E. Houghton; forwards, Lether, Lee, Warmer, Hawthorn, Clelland.

SOME NEW FEATURES FOR ATHLETIC MEET

Some new features have been added to the athletic meet to be held at Riverside Park at 2 p.m. Thanksgiving Day.

One of the feature events of the day will be a public school relay race. Each of the public school of Peterborough is going to put in a team of ten boys, miking sixty boys in the one race. This is something new in this city and should be a big drawing card as all the children in their particular schools will be rooting for their team. This is not only a boom for athletics, but it should create a loyalty among the children for their respective schools. Dr. Morrison, chairman of the School Board, has offered a banner for the winning team. This banner will be perpetual, the school winning it will hold it for one year, and then it will be put up for competition again. Show your loyalty to your school by coming out and cheering your team.

Another feature of the sports will be an exhibition of hammer throwing by Dr. R. W. Frank. This is a very spectacular event, but because of the complicated co-ordinations in getting the turn necessary in order to throw the hammer, very few athletes take it up. It, however, should attract a great deal of attention, as Dr. Frank holds the Intercollegiate championship of Canada.

All men and boys entering the city championships, or the road race, should leave their entries at the Y. M. C. A. on or before Saturday, Oct. 10th. Only amateurs in good standing with the A.L.N.A. or the A.A.U. of C. can compete. If you are not a registered athlete call at once and see the Physical Director at the Y. M. C. A.

D. McDONALD AND W. COMMON WINNERS IN P. C. I. RACES

New Record Made in Junior Event by Common, Who Went the Course in 13 min. 10 sec's.

FIELD DAY FRIDAY

The senior and junior cross country College road races were run off yesterday afternoon shortly after four o'clock. Weather conditions were almost ideal and both races were close and run in good time.

The senior event was run over a course about four miles in length, and which takes the runner up hill and down hill, as well as through fields and over rough paths. Considering this the time (19.55) was good. The senior course is from the Collegiate out McDonnell Street to the Bonner-Worth plant, cross country to Smith, out Smith to Jackson Park, through the Park to the quarry, around paths and across sthe fields to the Chemong road, down the Chemong road to Reid Street to Smith Street, down Smith to Water, to McDonnel to the Collegiate.

The junior course is the same to Jackson Park, but the runners in the junior event return straight down Smith Street to Water and thence to the Collegiate.

Douglas McDonald was the winner in the senior event, finishing in 19 minutes and 55 seconds. He won handily and made a strong finish. A. Austin ran second, H. Lewis third, H. Carmichael fourth and W. Field fifth. McDonald won the race last year in the same time.

In the junior race W. Common made a new record, finishing in 13 minutes and 10 seconds, which is a minute and forty seconds under last year's time. G. O'Connell finished in second, and A. McLeod in third place. The junior race was a remarkably good one, all three competitors making a splendid showing. The junior event was won last year by Fred Soward.

Field Day Friday.

The annual Field Day of the Collegiate Institute will be held on Friday afternoon. The school will gt a half holiday for the occasion in accordance with the time-honoured customs in connection with the day, and good contests are looked for in every department. The jumps will be held tomorrow afternoon, after school.

South Africa Not Disloyal.

LONDON, Oct. 6.—The Cape Town correspondent of The Morning Post, says that despite the activities of German spies and rumor-mongers, there is no evidence to suspect active disloyalty in South Africa, Gen. De Wet and a number of the Hertzogites continue demonstrations against the Government, although the number of Hertzog's party are solid for Botha. The correspondent adds that the Boer commandos in German S. W. Africa, who have been raiding union police posts are not, as reported here on Saturday, led by a nephew of Gen. De Wet, but by an adventurer with an inglorious record from the Boer war.

J. JOHNSON'S BAIL BONDS.

$55,000 Forfeited, but There is Poor Chance of Collecting.

CHICAGO, Oct. 5—The $55,000 bail bonds of Jack Johnson, the prize fighter, were forfeited in the United States District Court, but the Government is said to have a poor chance of collecting. The bonds were provided by the late Mathew Baldwin, whose estate is insolvent, and Johnson's mother, who is also said to be unable to pay.

The bonds were furnished to guarantee Johnson's appearance to-day for re-trial on charges that he violated the Mann Act in transporting Belle Schreiber from Pittsburgh to Chicago. He was convicted on the first trial, but an error was discovered by the Court of Appeals.

BLOTTERS

Have Their Own Way of Indicating User's Character

Few people realize the true inwardness of blotting paper, particularly people who live in big towns and should know better. It is, for instance, a real pleasure to sit down to a large clean sheet of new pink blotting paper, and instead of its soiling one, to be the first to soil it. White blotting paper has to be very thick and absorbing to hold its own, while green blotting paper is suggestive of banks and business, and little soiled ends which are used for the week's books.

The blotting paper connoisseur changes his blotting paper with absolute recklessness. It becomes to him like the paper target which once marked with his prowess has fulfilled its function. It is a delight to tear the corner off a sheet of thick pink, and pick up as much as possible of the blot made by an overflowing pen. But the corner once away, the sheet loses its charm and should be replaced by another.

Blotting paper and ploting pad are indices of the household psychology. There is, for instance, the pad that, though not very much used, has grown shiny with use, and its acquired surface absolutely refuses to pick up any ink at all. There is the pad that has been over-used and has lost its absorbent power through the writing of many black and dashing notes. There is the neat pad which is always carefully tended and which suggests that the sooner all trace of writing be removed the better, and there is the blotting book, with its choice of half-dirtied leaves and its surface which by no possibe means can ever be used as level as blotting paper should be.

The ideal way of using blotting paper is to have two or three loose sheets of thickish white or pink, which can be thrown away, used or stolen with impunity. It is useful to be able to blot from above and the singleness of the sheet enables this to be done most efficaciously. Also it necessitates no fastidious scruples as to waste, and enables the writer to write straight ahead with comfort instead of dodging about his pages to avoid the pains of blotting.

FINE RASPBERRIES.

Mr. W. T. Arnott, R.F.D. 6, Otonabee, is enjoying a second crop of Columbian raspberries. Mr. Arnott brought to the Office a branch containing bunches of ripe, luscious fruit. He only planted these bushes this year and the crop yielded has been beyond all expectations.

NAME WAS OMITTED.

In the list of those who subscribed to the Patriotic Fund through Alderman Johnston's committee, which appeared in The Examiner the other night, the name of Mr. Wm. Outram was omitted. Mr. Outram very kindly contributed the sum of $5.00, and should have been credited with the amount in the list.

THANKSGIVING CONCERT.

Keep the date open and watch for programme to-morrow.

MILITARY UNIFORMS.

In many houses in the City there are uniforms, belts, some rifles, side arms and other equipment belonging to the 57th Regiment. These in some cases have been left by soldiers now out of the City. The equipment is urgently needed and will be called for if a card is sent to Capt. A. G. Carruthers, 169 Hunter Street.

Persons unlawfully having these articles in their possession are liable to a fine of $20.00. 6d-st-t-75

INTERESTING CURIOSITIES.

In the window of the Tait Optical Company is displayed a shrapnel shell which was fired at Petawawa Military Camp from a Canadian heavy field gun. This shell is fitted with a time fuse so that it can be set to explode after having travelled any given distance after leaving the gun. It has an effective fire at 6 1-2 miles. It is loaded with 360 lead bullets and weighs 60 lbs. The gun from which it was fired is now on its way to the front. There is also shown an old Persian flint lock pistol, 200 years old, which is a rare curiosity of itself.

Bargain In Electric Meters

At a meeting held at noon to-day the Utilities Commission authorized Mr. Mowse to purchase from the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission the C. G. E. and Westinghouse meters that are being taken out at Walkerville, and were of a sufficient capacity to be of use here.

The Walkerville authorities are installing a 25-cycle service now, to take the place of the 60-cycle power service which has been used to date. As a result they will have to take out the meters which have been used so far, and as Peterborough's service is a 25-cycle one, the local Commission is of the opinion that it would be good business to buy the meters taken out at Walkerville.

CANADIAN LEAGUE MEETING

TORONTO, Oct. 6—A meeting of the Canadian League was held yesterday afternoon at the Prince George Hotel to wind up the season's business. Three delegates were present: St. Thomas, J. H. Chatler; London, S. Stevely; Brantford, T. Nelson; Hamilton, F. Lynch; Peterborough, W. H. Denham; Toronto, George Lee, Erie, Geo. O'Neil. President Fitzgerald was in the chair.

The president was authorized to attend the National Association meeting at Omaha in November.

President Fitzgerald was instructed to prepare a constitution and by-laws for submission to the annual meeting.

Toronto's appeal against the decision of directors in the Toronto-Peterborough game on June 3rd was dismissed.

Messrs. Nelson and Stevely were reappointed auditors.

Although the season was not a prosperous one, and there has been some talk of changes, the circuit will remain as heretofore.

Two Little Children Die

Two deaths from diphtheria occurred at the Isolation Hospital last night, when within a few hours Reginal Wallace Watson and Tresia Finney, aged 9 and 10 respectively, passed away.

Reginald Wallace Watson was the young son of Mr. Wm. J. Watson of this City and had been ill for five weeks previous to his death. The funeral was held this afternoon to the Little Lake Cemetery.

Tresia Finney was the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Finney and passed away after an illness of only four days. The funeral was held this afternoon.

To both families the sincere sympathy of the community will go out in the loss of their children. Both Mr. Watson and Mr. Finney reside in the south of the city.

FOLKESTONE HAS BEEN PUT "ON THE MAP"

By the Landing of Wounded Soldiers Returning From French Fields

FOLKESTONE, England, Oct. 5.—Since British wounded and Belgian refugees began to arrive in England on every boat, this quaint old town on the coast has been put "on the map" known, for the first time, perhaps, to the world.

Folkestone slowly but surely is waking up to find itself famous. It is not at all certain that the town welcomes the idea, but it bears its unexpected honours with quiet dignity, for at each day of the war passes and the boats from the Continent arrive with victims of German barbarity Folkestone has to unbend and work as it probably never has done before. Suddenly it has developed from a typical English seaside resort into a huge convalescent. The number of French and Belgian refugees has grown into a very serious problem. All sorts and conditions of men, women, and children are there. Hotels and boarding houses are full, and the people are asking themselves, "What shall we do with the hundreds to come?"

Fortunately for Folkestone and the refugees themselves, the problem is being faced boldly and generously. Those with ready money or credit are finding the large hearts considerate and ready to help, and the less are crowded with smartly-dressed people, some of whom bear the hallmark of Paris and Brussels. The description "refugees" perhaps hardly applies to these people, but the serious faces and expressive gestures prove that they feel as much as do the poorer people what their country is suffering. Many of the arrivals are middle-class people, with moderate means, and these rarely stay more than a night or two in the large hotels and then they retire to the boarding houses and lodging houses and some of them will soon find themselves in sore straits.

The poor refugees are terribly poor, many of them having little or no luggage and their personal condition frequently necessitates the most careful examination. The authorities, both local and imperial, have, however, risen to the occasion nobly. The representatives of the Home Office and the Folkestone Relief Committee are there almost every hour of the day; so, too, are the Consuls, and between them these authorities house hundreds of homeless families and despatch hundreds of others to London. They have even found work for a few, but each boat adds to the problem.

All day long the pier has been thronged with crowds of people, not one a holidaymaker. It might seem as if the day had gone for ever when one would take a boat from Folkestone to make holiday on the Continent. Nor of the scores who are arriving from Ostend, Antwerp, Dieppe and Flushing, are any bent on pleasure. Each and all are flying before the devastating advance of the common enemy. To travel the few miles between London and this town brings the war infinitely nearer than would be imagined. In London we see soldiers and recruits; we attend patriotic demonstrations and read newspapers, but here one seems to be on the very fringe of action.

Six steamers have arrived in Folkestone in one day from the Continental ports above named. Between them they have brought nearly 12,000 refugees chiefly from Belgium. One would require to travel far indeed to see more varied groups than those which all day long have been crossing the gangways and climbing up the pier steps. Of the scores who have come ashore, many have found quarters in the town itself. Others, and in fact the majority, have filled the waiting train and gone to London. Among them all there is scarcely one who has not suffered. Every face wears an expression of sorrow. Some attempt to be gay and boisterous in spite of their circumstances, making a bold effort to conceal the grief which they cannot quench. Others are silent and morose. Some weep unrestrainedly.

The boats as they come in show a deck full of people clustered together—there are families innumerable, bereft of everything save a few essential belongings which they have been able hastily to tie up in a blanket. There are Belgian labourers, clad in corduroy and carpet slippers, carrying the very implements with which until recently they tilled the soil over which the Kaiser's soldiers have marched. Pathetic in the extreme is the sight presented by groups of little children, utterly ignorant of the significance of their sudden voyage to a foreign shore. There are people, obviously well-to-do, who appear to be suffering but a temporary inconvenience in the crowded steamer.

One vessel brought a large number of people from Malines. They were the poorest of the poor, travelling under the direction of their parish priest, whose bishop had charged him with their safe conduct. He told an appalling tale of the savagery of the German soldiers and the burning of his town. In fact some of the barbarities which he described cannot be reproduced in print. "For seven days Malines was shelled," he said, "and then the Germans advanced upon it. We had to flee at once, and we got together what things we could and loaded them on carts and waggons and any kind of vehicle that could be found. We set off for Antwerp and not long after our departure our town was in flames behind us. Somehow we got to Antwerp and the boat brought us here. It was a terrible thing the burning of our town, but Louvain was worse."

The people under his care were travelling to London. Many of the refugees had friends in London to whom they were going for help, but it is impossible to discover how the poorest classes will carry on their existence in this country.

One felt for them all, but in a picture lacking nothing in pathetic detail perhaps the most touching feature of all was the spectacle of a score of British soldiers back from the field of battle who, instead of their khaki uniforms, were wearing the cast-off clothing of Belgian peasants.

FROWNED ON AFFECTATION.

The lady tells another story about the great soldier, which, if not true, deserves to be. When he arrived in South Africa as Lord Robert's Chief of Staff the young officers realised that "soft snaps" were a thing of the past. They made no mistake. They were all put to work. One day Lord Kitchener saw a young officer sporting a monocle. "Does your eyesight require you to wear that?" he asked. "It does," replied the lieutenant. "Then report to-morrow morning to the line of communication," ordered the General. "I do not require men with poor eyesight at headquarters."

22,000 More Canadians For The Front

AN EYE WITNESS OF THE EMBARCATION OF THE CANADIAN ARMY

Mr. Charles F. Leonard has received a letter from his son, manager of the Bank of Toronto, Gaspe, under date of Oct. 4. The Examiner is kindly permitted to take the following extracts from it regarding the embarkation of the Canadian contingent:

During the last week we have seen our little bit of war here; last Tuesday several large ships anchored in the outside bay, off Douglastown and the report got about that it was some of the transports with the Canadian overseas contingent and a convoy of cruisers. This proved to be correct(and all week the transports kept arriving till yesterday, when they left, thirty-six vessels steamed out of the bay. There were 31 transports and 5 cruisers. To those that saw them it was a wonderful sight. They went out in one line, and it is estimated that there was about 15 miles between the first and last ships.

Yesterday I went to Douglastown by the S. S. "Lady of Gaspe" and saw all the ships there. There were 32 transports and cruisers there then; also one collier. It was a fine fight, all these monster ships there, with any number of small boats from the shore among them. On the "Lady of Gaspe" we passed quite close to the "Laurentic," the "Cassandra," the "Tunisian," the "Royal George" and the "Montezuma," and in the distance, that is about a mile from us, we saw the "Royal Edward," the "Lapland," the "Empress of Britain," the "Franconia" and many others that we could not identify. All were painted gray or black and looked very grim and business-like.

The cruiser convoy that was here with the transports was only a small one, five small cruisers, among them the "Diana" (the flag ship), the "Talbot," the "Canada" and a couple of others.

The "Lady of Gaspe" passed close enough to the "Laurentic" and the "Royal George" for us to see the men on their decks, but not close enough to see who they were. It is reported here that the Patricia regiment is on board the "Royal George."

The excitement was increased last Thursday by the arrival of the Colonel, the Hon. Sam Hughes and his staff. They visited the men on the different ships.

* * *

Outside of the war news there is very little from here. Things are about the same as ever, and the conditions generally are better here this year that they have been for some time.

The Armies

of England, France, Germany and Russia are not permitted to use a pound of alum baking powder. The efficiency of the soldiers depends too much upon their health and endurance to risk the use of food which the authorities believe would be detrimental. Therefore the manufacture and sale of the alum powder is prohibited.

Royal Baking Powder is extensively used privately and by the military forces throughout the world. Its absolute wholesomeness, imparting as it does, healthful as well as appetizing qualities to the food, and its perfect keeping qualities in every climate and under different conditions, make it particularly desirable for all conditions of use.

A Good Impression.

First impressions are tenacious. The customer who gets an unpleasant impression on his first visit to a store, is not likely to be a permanent customer. On the contrary, a favorable first impression will insure a steady patronage.

First impressions are often obtained from a firm's advertising, even before the store is visited. A frank, straightforward statement of values and advantages, will create an impression of fair dealing, and bring the customer to the store in a receptive state of mind.

Our advice to merchants is to give careful thought to their advertising and to advertise regularly.

Heroic Gen. Leman Better.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—Miss Marguerite Leman, daughter of Gen. Leman, the defender of Liege, has received word, according to an Ostend despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co., that her father, who is now at Magdeburg, has been cured of the wound he sustained from shrapnel during the German bombardment. He still suffers, however, from the effects of inhaling the poisonous gas given off by the picrite of the shells.

Two Vessels Captured.

A Second Contingent For Assistance of The Empire

Sir Robert Borden Announces Plans For Recruiting and Equipment of Enough Men to Bring Canada's Quota Up to 50,000 Men.

TRAIN IN ARMOURIES

OTTAWA, Oct. 7.—Canada intends to have 50,000 men in the battle front, according to an official statement made by Sir Robert Borden last evening. With 33,000 men, accompanied by 7,000 horses and a complement of guns, etc., now on their way to England, Canada proposes further to organize and train forthwith a second expeditionary force of 20,000 men, with a first reinforcement of ten per cent., making 22,000 men in all. This force, the Prime Minister states, will be organized as speedily as possible, and the arrangements for providing the necessary arms, ammunition and equipment are said to be already in progress.

The composition of the second expeditionary force has not been decided upon, but it is expected that it will take the form of the first, though it is scarcely probable that the same number of artillery will accompany it. In view of the many offers of cavalry units, more horsemen will likely accompany this force.

Upon the arrival of the first division in England, it is probable that the force will be organized as follows: Field troops, including a first reinforcement of ten per cent., 26,400 men; line of communication, troops, 2,100; total force at the front, 28,500. This will leave about 4,500 men for training in Great Britain, who will constitute a reinforcement of nearly twenty per cent. for the men at the front.

It is stated that 31 large steamships were required to transport the first Canadian army to England.

In addition to the above organization, preparations are being made to organize and train necessary further reinforcements for both the first and second expeditionary force.

It is probable that the training and organization of these reinforcements will be made in the city armories. It is not stated how the second contingent of 22,000 men will be mobilized, as winter conditions will prohibit the formation of such a camp as Valcartier.

Contrary to previous announcements that Col. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, would leave for a holiday in the Haliburtan woods, it is a matter of general knowledge that the Minister will leave for England probably before the end of this week. It is not known how long he will be away, but the organization of the second expeditionary force will be under the supervision of Premier Borden, in the capacity of Acting Minister of Militia.

Mines Are Sown In Adriatic to Bar Austrian Fleet.

BORDEAUX, Oct. 7—The Ministry of Marine issued the following notice yesterday:

"The Austrian navy having laid mines in the Adriatic, the French fleet has been obliged to do likewise. But in order to avoid damaging neutral shipping as the Austrians have done, the French have laid their mines according to the rules of Chapter VIII. of The Hague Convention of 1907. The danger zone comprises all Austrian water and channels between the islands and the coasts of Dalmatia."

Message From "Leadeld."

FORT WILLIAM, Ont., Oct. 7.—"Nov. 2, 1913, steamer Leadeld. No hope, farewell to all, in God we trust. (Signed) Officer."

The above message was found written upon a small piece of discolored paper which was found in a glass flask by two duck hunters upon the shore of Lake Superior, half buried in the sand.

The steamer Leadeld belonged to the Algoma Central Steamship Line and was lost during the great storm of Nov. 9 last. She was carrying steel rails.

The entire crew were lost and no sign as to where has ever been found.

ARMIES ARE DEADLOCKED

Nothing Decisive Has Yet Occurred Along the Aisne—Heavy Masses of German Cavalry Near Lille

SUMMARY OF SITUATION

LONDON, Oct. 7.—The sixty-third day of the great war of Europe saw a repetition of what the peoples of all the countries have forced themselves to expect, perhaps for months to come—no decisive conflict on land or sea.

From Berlin to London came nothing in the way of Germany's claim to progress or reverses. From Petrograd came what has flowed without interruption for weeks — consistent claims to the progress of Russian arms.

From Paris at the usual mid-afternoon hour was issued the usual communication, so-called, interpreting the situation along the battle line of the western theatre of the war, in the light of those opposing the German invasion. There were in the closely worded communication, cryptic to an extent, as always, hints of a greater diversity of operations than it ordinarily contains.

Above all stood out the presence of what was described as large masses of German cavalry near Lille, as the crow flies, hardly ten miles from the Belgian frontier, and behind them German forces moving on a line between Tourcoing and Armentieres, the latter point right at the Belgian border.

At the same time the official communication makes it plain that the allies have not been idle and have been extending their lines on the left wing more and more widely. Blow for blow around the Arras, the scene of sanguinary fighting recently, is evidently still in order there. The same may be said of the region between the Somme and the Oise, for it is noticeable that the allies have claimed nothing there to-day except a see-saw advance and retirement. They do maintain that they have repulsed the enemy near Lassigny, upon which the Germans made a violent attack.

At Soissons, where the allies recently cleared the German trenches, they have, according to the announcement, pressed their advantage by making a slight advance. It is Noyon which forms the elbow from which the allied line sweeps eastward. Some advance for the allies is also reported at Berry au Bac. From Belgium comes nothing to indicate any change in the situation around Antwerp, except a brief line tucked at the bottom of the Paris official statement asserting that the German attacks along the River Rupel and the River Nethe have failed.

The British press takes occasion to emphasize that while the battle of the Aisne holds first claim in the matter of sentimental interest, the gigantic operations of the Russian, German and Austrian armies in the east may first bring the solution of the war.

The Standard's correspondent in Paris, wiring last night, says: The situation to-night continues favorable. The battle on the Aisne is gradually moving northwards of the Somme, and the enemy is now occupying nearly the same ground as he did in the middle of August. The moral position is, however, radically changed, and the German invading army, instead of promenading against a retreating foe, is desperately making what may be its last stand in France. The Belgian army is again playing a role of the greatest importance, and all efforts of Germany to prevent the Belgians from taking the offensive and threatening the rear and the communications of the army fighting for its life against the Allies have failed.

PREMIER ISSUES ADDRESS.

Hon. Mr. Hearst Says Whitney Tradition Will Be Upheld.

TORONTO, Oct. 7.—Ontario's new Premier, Hon. W. H. Hearst, issued last evening his inaugural address to the people of the province. He makes extended and sympathetic reference to the part which Sir James Whitney played in political life and states that the trail he blazed was broad and worthy enough to provide a path for all succeeding Premiers. If, however, occasion demanded radical action, there would be no hesitation in breaking new ground.

After his tribute to the late statesman, Premier Hearst says:

"We have not yet had time to give thought and consideration to new questions and subjects that may demand attention, but I desire at this, my earliest opportunity, to assure the public that the policy of hydro-electric development, inaugurated under the Whitney Government and carried to such a triumphant success with unexampled energy, zeal and devotion to the public service by Sir Adam Beck, will be carried on with unabated vigor, until the boon of cheap light, cheap heat and cheap power is available to every section of the province and to every class of the community, to the toiler on the farm as well as the dweller in our towns and cities, so far as it is practicable and feasible to accomplish this."

A tribute to the self-sacrificing labors of Hon. Dr. Pyne in his devotion to the late Premier and in his official capacity is followed by mention of the special work of the other members of the Cabinet, including the new Minister of Public Works, Hon. Mr. Macdiarmid, who "brings marked ability and special capacity for work to the service of the province."

Dealing with agriculture, the Premier says:

"An active campaign has been inaugurated, and will be pressed on with increased vigor, to stimulate a greater production of foodstuffs so urgently required now by the Empire as well as for home consumption. Additional efforts will be made to secure for the consumer the products of the farm without any unnecessary advancement in price over that obtained by the producer."

The address touches upon the development of the north, the furtherance of educational work, the financial affairs of the province, social welfare work, and refers in a general way, to the stimulation of trade; the relief of unemployment and ends with a personal expression of the Premier's appreciation of his recent appointment.

Shooting Accident In Woods.

The unfortunate man lost his only child three weeks ago.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

CHAPTER XXXVI.
GAGE OF BATTLE.

The chief of the People of the Abyss was seated at his ease in a large stone chair, over which heavy layers of weed-fabric had been thrown. He was flanked on either side by spearsmen and by drummers, who still held their iron sticks poised above their copper drums with shark-skin heads.

Stern saw at a glance that he was a man well over six feet tall, with whipcord muscles and a keen, eager domineering air. Unlike any of the other Folk, his hair (snow-white) was not twisted into a fantastic knot and fastened with gold pins, but hung loose and was cut square off at about the level of his shoulders, forming a tremendous, bristly mass, that reminded one of a lion's mane.

Across his left temple, and involving his left eye with a ghastly mutilation, ran a long, jagged, bright red scar, that stood out vividly against the milk-white skin. In his hands he held no mace, no symbol of power; they rested loosely on his powerful knees; and in their half-crooked fingers, large and long, Stern knew there lay a formidable, an all but irresistible strength.

At sight of the captives—for Beatrice, too, now suddenly appeared, thrust forward through another lane among the Folk—Kamrou's keenly cruel face grew hard. His lips curled with a sneer of scorn and hate. His punkish eyes glittered with anticipation. Full on his face the flare of the great flame fell; Stern could see every line and wrinkle, and he knew that to beg mercy from this huge barbarian (even though he would have begged), were a task wholly vain and futile.

He glanced along the circle of expectant faces that ringed the chief at a distance of some fifteen feet. Surely, thought he, some of the many Folk that he and the girl had saved from butchery, some to whom they had taught the rudiments of the world's lost arts, would now show pity on them—would stand by them now!

But no: not one face of all that multitude—now that Kamrou had returned—evinced other than eager interest to see the end of everything. To Stern flashed the thought that here, despite their seeming half-civilization in the use of metals, fire, dwellings, fabrics and all the rest, dwelt within them a savagery even below that of the ancient, long-extinct American Indians.

And well he knew that if both he and Beatrice were not to die the death this day, only upon themselves they must depend!

Yes, one face showed pity. But only one—the patriarch's.

Stern suddenly caught sight of him, standing in the front rank of the circled crowd, about twenty feet away to the left, just beyond the girl. Tears gleamed in the old man's sightless eyes; his lips quivered; the engineer saw his hands tremble as he twisted the feeble, impotent fingers together in anguish.

And though he could catch no sound in that rising, ever-roaring tumult of the flame, he knew the patriarch, with some vague and distant remnant of the old-time and vanished religion of the world, was striving to pray.

Stern's eyes met the girl's. Neither could speak, for she, too, was gagged with a rough band of fabric, which cruelly cut her beautiful, her tender mouth. At sight of her humiliation and her pain, the man's heart leaped hotly; he strained against his bonds till the veins swelled, and with eyes of terrible rage and hate stared at Kamrou.

But the chief's gaze was now fixed insolently upon Beatrice. She, as she stood there, stripped even of her revolver and cartridge-belt, hands bound behind her, hair dishevelled, had caught his barbarous fancy. And now in his look Stern saw the kindling of a savage passion so ardent, so consuming, that the man's heart turned sick within him.

"Ten thousand times better she should die!" thought he, racked at the thought of what might be. "Oh, God! If I only had my revolver for a single minute now! One shot for Kamrou—one for Beatrice—and after that, nothing would matter; nothing."

Came a disturbance in the Folk. Heads craned; a murmur of voices rose.

The patriarch, no longer trembling, but his head held proudly up, both hands outstretched, had stepped into the circle. And now, advancing toward Kamrou, he spoke in quick and eager sentences—he gestured at the engineer, raised his hand on high, bowed, and stepped back.

And all at once a wild, harsh, swelling chorus of cries arose; every face turned toward Stern; the engineer amazed, knew not what all this meant, but to the ultimate drop in the arteries he pledged his fighting-blood to one last bitter struggle.

Silence again.

Kamrou had not stirred. Still his great hands rested on his knees; but a thin, venomous smile lengthened his lips. He, too, looked at the engineer, who gave the stare back with redoubled hate. Tense grew the expectation of the Folk.

"What the devil now?" though Stern, tautening every muscle for the expected attack.

But attack there came none. Instead the patriarch asked a question of those who stood near him; and hands now guided the old man toward the place where Stern was standing, bound.

"O friend, O son!" exclaimed the old man when he had come close. "Now hearken! For, verily, this is the only way!

"It is an ancient custom of the Meruenans that any man, captive or free, can ever challenge our chief, whosoever he be, to the death-combat. If the chief wins, he remains chief. If he loses, the victor takes his place. Many hundreds of years, I know not how long, this has been our way. And many terrible combats have been seen here among our people.

"Kamrou has said that you must die, the girl must be his prize. Only one way remains to save her and yourself—you must struggle with Kamrou. I have delivered to him your challenge already. Let fate decide the issue!"

Everything seemd to whirl before Stern's eyes, and for a moment all grew black. In his ears sounded a great roaring, louder than the roar of the huge flame. Quick questions flashed through his mind. Fight Kamrou? But how. A duel with revolvers? Spears? Maces? great roaring, louder than ther?-dan

He knew not. Only he knew that in whatever way the ancient combats must be held he was ready!

"You affirm the challenge I have given in your behalf?" demanded the patriarch. "If you accept it, nod."

Stern nodded with all the vigour of his terrible rage. Kamrou's eyes narrowed; his smile grew fixed and hard, but in it Stern perceived the easy contempt of a bully toward any chance weakling. And through him thrilled a passion of hate such as he had never dreamed in all his life.

Came a quick word from the patriarch. Somebody was slashing the engineer's bonds. All at once the ropes gave way. Free and unfettered, he stepped forward, stretching his arms, opening and closing his cramped, numbed hands, out into the ring toward Kamrou, the chief.

Off came the gag. Stern could speak at last.

His first word was to the girl.

"Beatrice!" he called to her. "there's one chance left! I'm to fight this ruffian here. If I beat him we're free—we own this tribe, body and soul! If not—"

He broke off short. Even the possibility was not to be considered.

She looked at him and understood his secret thought. Well the man knew that Beatrice would die by her own hand before Kamrou should have his way with her.

The patriarch spoke again.

"My son," said he, "there is but one way for all these combats. It has been so these many centuries. By the smooth edge of the great boiling pit the fights are held. Man against man it is. Verily, you two with only your hands must fight! He who loses—"

"Goes into the pit?"

The old man nodded.

"There is no other way," he answered. "The new, terrible weapons you cannot use. The arrows, slings, and spears are all forbidden by ancient custom. It is the naked grasp of the hands, the strong muscles of two men against each other! So we decide our chief!

"I, alas, can help you nothing. I am powerless, weak, old. Were I to interfere now and try to change this way, my own body would only go to the pit, and my old bones hang, headless, in the place of captives and criminals. All lies in your hands, my son!

"Ah, everything! Our whole future, and the future of the world! If you lose, the wonderful machine will be destroyed and all its metal forged into spears and battleaxes. Barbarism will conquer; darkness will continue, and war, and death. All will be for ever lost!

"The last ray of hope, or light, from the great past of the upper world, will vanish for ever! Your own death, my son, and the fate of the girl, will be as nothing beside the terrible catastrophe, if you are beaten.

"For, verily, it will be the death of the world!

"And now, my son, now go to battle—to battle for this woman, for yourself, for us, for the future of our race, for everything!

"Kamrou is ready. The pit is boiling.

"Go now! Fight—and—and—"

His voice was lost in a great tumult of cries, yells, shouts. Spears brandished. Came a sound of shields struck with clubs and axes. The copper drums again began to throb and clang.

Kamrou had risen from his seat. Stern knew the supreme moment of his life was at hand.

CHAPTER XXXVII.
THE FINAL STRUGGLE.

Kamrou flung off his long and heavy cloak. He stood there in the flamelight, broad-chested, beautifully muscled, lean of hip, the perfect picture of a fighting man. Naked he was, save for his loin-cloth. And still he smiled.

Stern likewise stripped away his own cloak. Clad only like like the chief, he faced him.

"Well, now," said he, "here goes! And may the best man win!"

Kamrou waved the circle back at one side. It opened, revealing the great pit to southward of the flame. Stern saw the vapours rising, bluish in that strange light, from the perpetual boiling of the black waters in its depths. Oddly enough, even at that moment a stray bit of scientific thought nicked into his consciousness—the memory that under compressed air water boils only at very high temperatures. Down here, in this great pressure, the water must easily be over three hundred degrees to seethe like that.

He, too, smiled.

"So much the better," thought he. "The hotter, the sooner it's all over for the man who goes!"

Up rose numbers of the two-pronged torches. Stern got confused glimpses of the Folk—he saw the terrible, barbaric eagerness with which they now anticipated this inevitable tragedy of at least one human death in its most awful form.

Beatrice he no longer saw. Where was she? He knew not. But in a long, last cry of farewell he raised his voice. Then, with Kamrou, he strode toward the steaming, boiling pit in the smooth rock floor.

Two tall men broke through the tensely eager throng. In their hands they bore each a golden jar, curiously shaped and chiseled, and bearing a whimsical resemblance to a coffee-urn.

"What the devil now?" wondered Stern, eager to be at work. He saw at once the meaning of the jars. One of the bearers approached Kamrou. The other came to him. They raised the vessels, and over the antagonists' bare bodies poured a thin, warm stream of some rank-smelling oil. All over the skin they rubbed it, till the bodies glistened strangely in the flamelight. Then, with muttered words he could not catch, they withdrew.

All seemed confused and vague to Stern as in a painful dream. Images and pictures seemed to present themselves to his brain. The light, the fog and heat, the rising stream, the roaring of the flame, and over all the throb-throb-throb of those infernal copper drums worked powerfully on his senses.

Already he seemed to feel the grip of Kamrou, the pangs of the hard struggle, the sudden plunge into the vat of scalding death.

Baby Eczema Becomes Chronic

Causing Great Suffering and Anxiety —Prompt Relief and Cure by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

This is one reason why every mother should know about Dr. Chase's Ointment, since it is an unfailing cure for all itching skin diseases.

Mrs. F. Clarke, Belmont, Man., writes:—"My baby had eczema on her ear. The sore was very bad, and nothing seemed to do her much good. Hearing of the remarkable cures Dr. Chase's Ointment was making, we sent for some, and after the third application the sore began to heal. I am glad to say that it is quite well now, and we give the credit to Dr. Chase's Ointment. We cannot recommend this preparation too highly."

Here is another letter, which tells of the cure of a five-weeks-old baby: Mrs. Wallace Mingon, River John Road, Colchester County, N.S., writes: "My little girl took eczema when she was five weeks old. Though we doctored her until she was nearly a year old, she got no better. I was advised to use Dr. Chase's Ointment, and this treatment completely cured her."

Search for Secrets.

Ponce De Leon started out to discover the Secret Fountain of Youth. Men are always looking for secrets: the secret of health, wealth, or happiness. But the secret of successful advertising has been discovered. It is strange it was not discovered long ago, but it was not until recent years, although it is remarkably simple. It is to "Tell the truth and shame the devil." Put into your advertisements the exact facts, without exaggeration or elaboration. When people see that you are entitled to confidence, they will make a beaten path to your doors.

Banish the "Blues!"

If you have that depressed feeling it's more than likely that your blood is out of order—impoverished or poisoned.

There is only one thing that will alter your present condition—that's to restore your stomach to normal health and strength. For a weak or diseased stomach cannot make good blood. If your digestion is bad your food will not make the good blood which nourishes body, brain, heart and nerve.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

helps the stomach to do its work naturally and properly. Stimulates the liver. The system is freed from poison. The blood is purified. Every organ is rejuvenated. Instead of the "Blues," you feel fit and strong, equal to any task or up to any pleasure.

MANAGING DIRECTOR

JELLICOE'S CAREER FULL OF ADVENTURE

Twice Escaped Death by Narrowest Margin—How He Won and Lost a Medal

Sir John Jellicoe, Britain's admiral in the North Sea has had exciting times in his life. When a lieutenant on H.M.S. Monarch, a Glasgow steamer stranded off Europa Point, on the Spanish Coast, about three miles from Gibraltar.

The Monarch had left Gibraltar for target practice and had left all her boats but one small one behind. Seeing the almost hopeless position of the Ettrickdale's crew, the commander of the battleship called for volunteers, and Lieutenant Jellicoe and seven seamen got into the small boat and pulled for all they were worth. The boat could not live in the heavy seas, however, and before they could reach the wreck it capsized.

Fortunately each man had donned a cork jacket before starting, and after a terrible struggle in the waves all of them were washed ashore more dead than alive. The crew of the stranded ship was rescued by a Spanish fishing boat, and the British Board of Trade distributed rewards. Lieutenant Jellicoe receiving a medal, which he was destined to lose.

He was commander of H.M.S. Victoria when she was rammed in 1893 by the Camperdown. At the time of the disaster, Commander Jellicoe was down with a sharp attack of fever. Startled by the terrific crash as the two great ships came together, the invalid struggled from his bunk and staggered up on deck, clad only in pyjamas.

Commander Jellicoe stood on the bridge, the flags in his hands ready for signals, when suddenly, with a wild plunge, the enormous vessel buried her bow beneath the surface of the sea. Most of those on deck were thrown into the sea, and then followed a scene that those who saw would willingly forget.

The Victoria's keel was high in the air, her twin-screw propellers racing madly. Gradually as the vessel sank, the screws came down lower and lower towards the mass of men struggling in the water. At last the great steel flanges, still whirling, sank into the waves, and several hundred men were literally torn to pieces in the maelstrom.

Commander Jellicoe was to weak with fever to do much to save himself, and had it not been for a young midshipman, who helped him to struggle away from the sinking ship, it is unlikely that he would have been amongst the survivors.

His Board of Trade medal went down with the rest of his property and when he applied for a duplicate the Board informed him that he would have to pay for it!

Admiral Jellicoe accompanied Admiral Seymour on his march to relieve the Legations at Peking during the Boxer Rebellion.

Surrounded on all hands, the Allied troops decided to retreat to Tien-tsin. On the way they sighted a large body of cavalry, and mistaking them for a relieving force of Cossacks, they stood out in the open and signalled. They found out their mistake when the cavalry opened fire.

In the melee that followed Captain Jellicoe, charging at the head of his men, was shot through the lung. His wound was dangerous enough, but it was made much worse by the next five days' retreat to Tien-tsin, harassed by the enemy most of the time.

But even from this, perhaps the narrowest of his escapes, the Admiral managed to pull through and lived to command the Empire's greatest fleet in the greatest war in history.

Like Kintechener, Jellicoe believed for a long time that

"Down to Gehenna or up to the Throne
He travels the fastest who travels alone!"

He used to say that a good husband can't be a good sailor and vice versa.

The Admiral changed his mind, however, when in 1903, at the age of 42, he met Miss Florence Gwendoline Cayzer, daughter of Sir Charles Cayzer, and fell in love with her. After an impetuous wooing the daughter of one of England's wealthiest shipowners accepted him and they were married. They have three little daughters who rule the supreme Admiral of the world's greatest fleet with an iron severity.

NATIONAL WAR SONGS

Martial Hymns Which Soldiers Sing on Battlefield

In Germany no patriotic song has been sung with such fervor as the famous battle hymn of the Germans, "Die Wacht am Rhein" ("The Watch on the Rhine"). It was written in 1840, but remained practically unknown until the outbreak of the war with France, when it was sung by every soldier, and every man, woman, and child throughout the German Empire. "The Watch on the Rhine" was to Germany at that time what "The Marseillaise" was to France—a soul-stirring composition, which made men eager to take up arms and fight for the cause which they thought was right.

Probably the most stately National Anthem is the Russian. Its very title, "God, the All Terrible," seems to strike an heroic strain. Sung by a great mass of peasant soldiers with simple fervor, its effect is grand in the extreme. Played upon the great organ in the cathedral at Moscow it sounds like a prayer. Not only are the words very poetical, but the tune is forceful and haunting.

Of course the greatest of all war songs pure and simple is unquestionably "The Marseillaise." What memories it has clinging to its fervidly patriotic words! It was the song of the French Revolution, and did more to bring down the dynasty of the Bourbons than half-a-dozen army corps. It was called by the name which still is universally applied to it, because the men—and women—of Marseilles, the port of the Mediterranean, marched all the way to Paris singing it as they went. Its first fruits were reaped a few days after their arrival when the hated Bastille fell to its strains. It is now the National Anthem of Republican France.

The Austrian National Anthem is one of the finest in existence. It was composed in 1797 by that great national composer, Haydn, who is chiefly known to concert-goers by his magnificent oratorio, "The Creation," in which occurs the splendid and florid chorus "The Heavens are Telling." The anthem was based upon an old national song, but Haydn made it a thing of beauty. It is the only National Anthem composed by a musician of the foremost rank.

But the song which is sung in cities by civilians is not always, or indeed generally, the one sung by the soldiers who have to bear the brunt of battle and siege and march. The most popular song in Vienna is "Prinz Eugen der edle Ritter," which tells how the "noble cavalier," Prince Eugene of Savoy, who was the ally of the great Marlborough, the ancestor of Mr. Winston Churchill, laid siege to and captured Belgrade from the Turks in 1717.

Our own National Anthem is a Georgian product and originally opened with the words "God bless Great George our King." It has been honored by Beethoven with seven variations for the piano, and it is introduced into his Battle Symphony. On the whole, perhaps, the tune to which we sing "God Save the King" has probably the largest circulation of any tune in the world.

Then there is "Rule Britannia," perhaps the finest national song possessed by any nation, and which was composed by Dr. Arne, the English musician, who wrote several operas. "Rule, Britannia" was included in the "Masque of Alfred," a musical farce produced in 1740.

Forcing a Safeguard

One of the most serious of military offences on active service—one invariably punished by death—is known as "forcing a safeguard."

When an army is moving through an enemy's country its commander will often place sentries over the houses of well-disposed inhabitants to prevent their being looted or pillaged by his own men. Interference with such a "safeguard" is a military crime for which no "extenuating circumstances" are ever considered.

TORTURED BY CONSTIPATION

"Fruit-a-tives" Cured Paralyzed Bowels and Digestion

ST. BONIFACE DE SHAWINIGAN, QUE. Feb. 3rd. 1914.

"It is a pleasure to me to inform you that after suffering from Chronic Constipation for 2½ years, I have been cured by "Fruit-a-tives". While I was a student at Berthier College, I became so ill I was forced to leave the the college. Severe pains across the intestines continually tortured me and it came to a point when I could not stoop down at all, and my Digestion became paralyzed. Some one advised me to take "Fruit-a-tives" and at once I felt a great improvement. After I had taken four or five boxes, I realized that I was completely cured and what made me glad, also, was that they were acting gently, causing no pain whatever to the bowels. All those who suffer with Chronic Constipation should follow my example and take "Fruit-a-tives" for they are the medicine that cures".

CARRYING DESPATCHES

Many a Trick Resorted to Hide Papers From Enemy

"The military despatch bearer," the late Archibald Forbes used to say, "must combine the artfulness of the Chinee, the skill in disguise of the actor, and the acorn of danger of a V.C. hero, if he is to carry his life through the thousand risks of his calling."

In the old days, when war moved on leaden feet, a favorite method of conveying a message through the enemy's lines was to write the despatch on the shaven head of a slave, allow the hair to grow again, and then send the courier with his message, which a second shaving of the head revealed. A messenger, disguised as a pilgrim, would carry a parchment roll concealed in the hollow interior of his staff, and an arrow shot over the enemy's head has carried many a missive into a besieged fortress in the Middle Ages.

That the war courier of to-day is as daring and resourceful as his long-gone predecessors many a story proves. In the South African War the Kaffir runner was invaluable as a despatch carrier, eluding the Boers by his invisibility on dark nights and by his assumption of childish ignorance. If he was intercepted, the guileless child of Nature would blip, "Me no speak English; me farmer's boy. Me hate English." And with such consummate art would he play his role of innocence that he was almost invariably allowed to pass.

One of these wily creatures was caught between Mafeking and Kuruman, and for once his assumption of guilelessness failed to convince. He was stripped by the Boers, but the most thorough search failed to reveal a scrap of incriminating paper, and he was dismissed with a parting kick. No wonder he chuckled as he sped away, for he carried in one of his nostrils a quill containing an important despatch.

Equally successful was a young Scotsman who fooled the Boers with his charming amiability. "Despatches? No," he laughed. "Catch me carrying despatches." "What have you got there?" asked the Boer commandant, pointing to a parcel the canny Scot was carrying. "Only a few sandwiches. Will ye no tak' one?" was the smiling answer, as the North Briton unrolled his napkin and offered the burghers some of his fare. The Boers declined the hospitable offer, and the Scot got away with priceless papers concealed in his sandwiches and in a hard-boiled egg.

Zig-zag Trenches Used

Are you imagining correctly the appearance of the trenches which the allies use in fighting the Germans? They are not nice, straight open ditches. The modern entrenchment is a great furrow that twists and zigzags across the hillside with confusing irregularity. Every available bush or hollow or turn is taken advantage of for concealment. Often the trench is practically a tunnel, where extensive overhead shelter has been constructed for protection from shrapnel.

Found a Friend in Dr. Chase

His Medicines Proven Effective, and Always Kept at Hand in This Home.

Mrs. Chas. Lovell, Agassiz, B. C., writes:—"I feel it my duty to tell you what a great friend Dr. Chase's medicines have been to myself and family. I cannot praise his medicines too highly, and Dr. Chase's name is a household word in our home. Well, quite a number of years ago I sent to you for a sample box of Dr. Chase's Ointment for protruding piles, and, having used the sample and found relief, I sent to a neighbouring town for four boxes, and I am completely cured.

"I have also used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for constipation, and, after using them, I am completely cured of this dreadful disease. I am the mother of ten children, of whom nine are living, and when seven of my children were all very bad with whooping cough, caught in the middle of a severe winter, I used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and they were all cured before the winter was over, and now we are never without Dr. Chase's medicines in our home, and I recommend them to all."

IN LESSER SPHERES

Recounting the Time When Leading Men Took to Minor Occupations

Now when everyone is doing what he or she can to help the country in her fight against oppression, a few stories of well known men who have turned to at unaccustomed tasks will be of interest, says a writer in "Answers."

For instance, when King George as the Duke of Cornwall and York was crossing the Atlantic on the return from his world tour he donned a stoker's dress and went down into the stoke-hold. He had seen the men come up, like seals to their blowholes, for a breath of fresh air, and he was anxious to try for himself what the work was like. Not content with looking on, the King siezed a shovel, and, for a considerable time, worked hard at feeding the boilers with fuel. When he had had enough he did not wonder that the men should seek a brief respite in the upper regions.

Some time ago Prince Alexander of Teck found that owing to the withdrawal of a large number of men from the barracks at Hampton Court many horses would go unfed and unattended unless the officers themselves did the work. He at once took off his coat, and set the example by carrying bucket after bucket of water, and worked as hard all the morning as any trooper in the ranks.

When Lord Denman, Governor-General of the Commonwealth, was turning the first sod of the Australian Continental Railway he did it in such a workmanlike way, tossing the sod into a barrow, wheeling it across a narrow plank, and returning with the barrow behind him in proper navvy style, that a real navvy shouted: "Bully for you! You're good for seven bob a day!"

The father of the present Duke of Westminster was an expert engine-driver, and so was the late Duke of Sutherland. Sir William Russell used to tell a story of the duke startling one day from Dunrobin Station, when an admiring navvy exclaimed: "There, that's what I call a real duke! Why, there he is, a-driving of his own engine on his own railway, and a-burning of his own coals!" King Albert, of Belgium, too, can drive a railway engine in true workmanlike style.

Colonel Seely, a former Minister of War, has been a member of the life-boat crew at Totland Bay, in the Isle of Wight, for many years, and only last winter he went out in a raging storm as an ordinary member of the lifeboat crew and assisted in saving several lives. Indeed, he is a very efficient member of the crew, and has often been in the boat in circumstances of great risk.

By Fortune of War

Many a chance occurrence has had a marked effect on the fortunes of war. It has often been stated that a strike really caused the Spanish-American War. Two destroyers were on order in England, destined for work on the Cuba coast, but a strike delayed their completion.

The Spanish have declared that had these vessels been delivered to time it would have enabled them to prevent gun-running in Cuba. In consequence the revolt would have been crushed and there would have been no reason for the United States to interfere.

The German Empire might never have come into being had some French artillerymen been able to shoot straight. During one of the fights outside Paris a troop of cavalry came within range of the guns of Mont Valerie. Fire was opened, and a few men fell, cisclosing a carriage, but it was driven out of range as quickly as possible.

The carriage contained the Emperor, or, rather, King of Prussia, as he was then, Bismarck, and Moltke

WHOOPING COUGH

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was formerly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

The Cookbook.

When boiling green peas add a lettuce leaf and a tablespoonful of sugar and they will retain their color and have a much better flavor.

To give better flavor to canned fruit, likewise to stewed, add lemon juice in the proportion to the juice of one lemon to one pound of fruit.

Prevent a steamed pudding from becoming heavy by putting a cloth over the steamer before placing the lid on. This prevents the moisture from settling and making the pudding heavy.

Not Guilty.

Mother—Sometimes there are rude boys in Sunday school who giggle and smile at little girls, and sometimes little girls smile back at them, but I hope my little girl does not behave like that.

Small Daughter—No, indeed, mamma; I always put out my tongue at 'em.—Christian Register.

One Result of The War Is Certain

CANADA must Manufacture for part of the World now involved in War.

Europe can no longer supply the Export Markets.

If you are proud of Canada, you want to see our Factories hum, our Stores alive with Business, and our Offices piled with Orders.

Let Peterborough enlist in this movement to boom Canadian Made Goods.

Let Peterborough Manufacturers get on the job, and let us read, mark and hear more of "Made in Peterborough" Goods.

How many good-going factories in Peterborough never tell our own Citizens what they manufacture.

And if they don't tell, how can they expect to sell.

Much of the European trade that was exported into Canada should now become our own. Who but our own Manufacturers should now make the Foodstuffs, the Hosiery, the Underwear, the Toys, and much of the Chemicals, Dye-stuffs, and other things Germany has supplied us?

Advertising will soon reveal which of our industrial enterprises are most worthy and best prepared to profit by Europe's need. The Firms first to advertise for this business will be the first to profit.

Who, among our manufacturers, is willing to be left out in the cold? Who, among such Firms, will fail to Advertise?

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE MINISTER'S SURPRISE.

There Were Two Sides to It.

By KATHERINE YOUNG THAXTER.

The Rev. Calvin Morris was quite annoyed.

He was in anything but a ministerial mood when he tossed his hat on the table amid the confusion of books and papers and sat down in his study to think it over. It was such a ridiculous situation that at first he had been mildly amused at it, but now—pshaw! Why couldn't he ignore it?

But it had passed the stage when it could be ignored. In the past three days he had been told five times that his congregation would like very much to see him married. Nor had these remarks been the half jocular words on his bachelor condition that he had often heard since coming to the church at Littleton, but had been earnest words of advice expressed by the most prominent members of his flock.

He was popular in the parish, and his two years' pastorate had been productive of good results, but there had been one thing lacking.

Accustomed for years before his advent to the service of a most devoted minister and his able wife whose home had been the center for a vigorous church life, the people simply could not get used to a minister in a boarding house. Besides, there stood the fine new parsonage empty. Certainly it was his duty to live up to the demands of his people. When Miss Gilbert, the wealthy maiden lady who had contributed so much to the church, both in money and good deeds, died two years ago the parsonage she was building for the church was not quite finished.

The Rev. Calvin Morris knew he would use it in time. Indeed, all unknown to his people, vague plans had been floating through the minister's head for some months, and he had frequently looked very reflectively at the quiet house beside the church.

But the real vexing, disquieting point of the whole matter was that the congregation had not only decided that he should marry, but apparently had fixed on whom he should marry. This was assured the night he took tea with Mrs. Thorpe, one of the most active ladies in his church, when the chief topic of conversation was Miss Nell Gilbert.

Now, Mr. Morris had taken a most unreasonable and unministerial dislike to Miss Gilbert, a member of his church whom he had never seen. She was the niece of the great Miss Gilbert and had lived with her aunt until the latter's death, when the great house on the hill had been closed. Since then the young lady had traveled, so the minister had never seen her. He had heard a great deal of her, though, and had formed an impression of a person of undoubted energy and ability, accustomed to have things just as she wanted and inclined to be domineering. "Miss Nell" had ideas of her own on church music. "Miss Nell" had designed this and had attended to that. It seemed to the minister there was a little too much of "Miss Nell" everywhere.

Tall and muscular and aggressive himself, accustomed to shouldering burdens and clearing difficulties, the Rev. Calvin had, of course, an ideal of feminine grace very different from his own vigorous personality. Indeed, as he sat thinking in his study that morning a smile rose to the firm lips and softened the austere lines into which he had framed them as he saw in his mind's eye a petite, graceful form, soft, appealing dark eyes and masses of cloudy brown hair. Alas for the plans of the people who had made up their minds that "Miss Nell" and the minister would be an eminently well fitted pair.

But the vision faded quickly, and the many hints that had been dropped during the last few days flashed in rapid succession through his mind. "Miss Nell" was coming home next week. He would be thrown at her head and she at his by his well meaning flock until something happened.

ready the subject had assumed alarming proportions. He could not, he would not, stay round and be made a football of, to be tossed into any woman's arms.

Again came unbidden that alluring vision of brown hair and eloquent eyes. It was preposterous! How could they badger him now, just as his heart was beating more madly every day for some one? Ah, if he were only sure! Did that friendship, formed a few short months ago, that soul satisfying friendship, mean to the girl of the vision what it had come to mean to him? Could he, dare he, offer her his love? He had been living since then in a beautiful dream. Suppose that dream should be fulfilled?

He hesitated. Dreaming had been so sweet he feared the awakening. Dare he risk "the last leap?" With a bound he sprang to his feet. He could and he would. He would please himself in the choice of a wife anyway and if fortune favored him give his officious congregation a surprise and a sharp lesson.

A short phone message to a neighboring town secured a supply for next Sunday's pulpit. "Urgent business out of town" was the message left for the church officers, and the minister found himself on the train bound for the east and the "vision."

The minister's wooing was brief and blunt, but Miss Helen Atwater was not very much taken by surprise. The acquaintance, begun in Scotland the previous summer, had ripened fast on shipboard on the return passage and been brought to fruition by some months of correspondence. She even consented to a speedy marriage, and as she was living with a married cousin, in Boston the minister took his bride from there ten days from the day he left Littleton.

But the blissful days of his honeymoon failed to blot out entirely the remembrance of his church and its work and his people. True, in the tumult of happiness that had possessed him since that day when their clumsy interference had driven him—actually driven him—into the joy that was now his he had almost forgotten their plans for him, but now it all came back to him, and he realized that he did owe them something, for who knows how long he would have doubted and feared had not the terror of "Miss Nell" been upon him?

Suddenly the minister laughed aloud. It was all so funny to him now. Mrs. Morris, sitting beside her husband, was astonished at his mirth and looked it.

"Well, dearest, I know you'll think me crazy, but it is really too good to keep. You didn't know that I asked you to marry me so as to prevent my congregation marrying me to some one else, did you?" And out came the whole story, his mental picture of "Miss Nell" and all.

"You know," he concluded, "I never for a moment thought of her side of it. I was concerned for my own safety. What in the world a woman like her, with money and property and the world at her feet, would want with a poor struggling minister I can't conceive. But I had heard so much of her and the people so evidently had set their minds on it I tell you I was in a regular funk over it. It drove me to put my timid hopes to the test for you, sweetheart."

There was a peculiar smile hovering around Mrs. Morris' lips, and for a minute or two she said nothing.

"What is it, dear?" asked the minister anxiously. "You are not vexed?"

"N-no," hesitatingly, "not exactly, but I am just thinking how beautifully you have played into your congregation's hands, for, do you know, Calvin, you have really and truly married that domineering person, 'Miss Nell?'"

"Married 'Miss Nell!'" repeated the minister blankly, staring at his wife's flushed, laughing face.

"Yes, truly. I am Helen Gilbert Atwater, called 'Miss Nell' at the old home in Littleton. Listen, dear. I had no thought of deceiving you at first. I did not know you were in the church at Littleton till we reached New York on our voyage home. You know we were pretty well acquainted then, but I—neither of us knew our own heart. I often intended to tell you in a letter, but somehow I couldn't. I felt that if you knew it might make a difference. You were poor, comparatively. I had all that money and property. And—and I loved you, dear, too much then to have you leave me.

"Then at the end you took me by storm. I have been too happy to talk of anything like that, and I had been waiting till you would say something of your work to tell you all about myself."

"But, my dear, why Atwater? It was always Miss Nell Gilbert." The minister was still bewildered.

"Yes, my aunt did not like my father, the man whom her young sister married, and never mentioned his name.

"I was always called Gilbert at home, but of course I had no reason for discarding my name. There are plenty of people in Littleton who know my real name, but never used it, for I was but a baby when I went to live with my aunt after my father's death. Really, dear, you needn't be alarmed. I am not half as bad as I was painted. I won't try to run the church or manage the organist or—or"—

"Or any one except the minister," finished her husband. "Well, the surprise is certainly on me, but I must get even with those people some way."

The news of the minister's marriage spread like wildfire through the town. He had sent a laconic message to one of his church officers to the effect that he had been married in Boston and would occupy his pulpit the following Sunday. That was all. Married, after all, and none of his congregation knew a word about it. Who was she? Nobody knew. Conjecture was rife on every point, and one version after another of the story of his wedding found quick credence. Some of the older members of his flock were thunderstruck. To think that Mr. Morris should trick them like that and be engaged all the time! They had just set their hearts on his marrying "Miss Nell," whom everybody knew and loved. They were accustomed to "Miss Nell" and her ways. But a stranger to steal their beloved minister!

All week long the tongues wagged incessantly over the minister and his bride, but at Saturday midnight no one had seen either of them. The church was packed Sunday morning. The bells had ceased ringing, and only a few late comers saw the Gilbert carriage drive up to the door and the minister and a lady alight from it.

Straight up the middle aisle he led her, sweet and demure looking, while the organ played softly and the silence of the church could be felt. At the Gilbert pew he left her, and the congregation had a good view of the sweet face framed in the masses of soft brown hair. Mrs. Thorpe almost jumped out of her seat. It was none other than "Miss Nell." Glance followed glance all over the church. The minister certainly had surprised his congregation.

BELGIUM'S NATIONAL ANTHEM.

[A free translation of the famous Brabanconne, the stirring chant which seems so strangely appropriate in the light of recent events.]

Fled the years of servile shame!
Belgium, 'tis thine hour at last.
Wear again thy glorious name,
Spread thy banner on the blast.
Sovereign people in thy might,
Steadfast yet and valiant be.
On thine ancient standard write:
King, and Law, and Liberty.

Strive, nor seek discharge at length.
Hold thy courage as thy crown.
God, who keeps thee in His strength,
On thy labors smileth down
Over all thy fruitful land
Labor's prize is full and free.
On thine arts enthroned stand,
King, and Law, and Liberty.

Foes, that were our friends of old,
Are returned to love at last.
All the free we prize as gold,
Praying that our strife be past.
Belgians and Batavians, friends,
Knit in brotherhood shall be;
With one voice the shout ascends:
King, and Law, and Liberty.

Belgium, mother, thus we vow,
Never shall our love abate.
Thou our hope, our safety thou,
Hearts and blood are consecrate.
Grave, we pray, upon thy shield
This device eternally,
Weal or woe, at home, afield,
King, and Law, and Liberty.

Wanted a Little Praise Himself.

Following a disastrous fire in a western city, many men and women gathered to look at the ruins. Some of the men, seeing that a wall near which they were standing was toppling, made haste to get out of the way and narrowly escaped being crushed.

Johnny Bratson, a good Irish citizen, was so near the wall that he could not escape with the others. So, whirling about, he made for a door in the wall, burst through it and came out on the other side safe and evidently very proud of his exploit. Women who had shut their eyes and shrieked when they saw his danger now gathered round him in great joy and cried out:

"Praise heaven, Johnny Bratson, down on your knees and thank heaven!"

"Yis, yis," said he, "and I will, but wasn't it injueryone to me, now?"—Youth's Companion.

FRENCH IN ALSACE.

They Have Undisputed Control As Far as the Rhine.

LONDON, Oct. 7. — The London Daily Mail's correspondent at Belfort, writing on Saturday last, says: "I have spent to-day in Alsace, in conquered German territory, where the French flag is floating again after forty-four years of exile. For the French are in Alsace. There is nothing in front of them, and if they wish they can walk right through to the Rhine.

"The Germans try to make the world believe they hold Alsace still, for they cannot bear to have it known that the French have won their province back. But I have seen the French in thousands in Alsace, and well established, too — so well that the Germans have not dared to attack them for weeks.

"You have to watch a Frenchman's face as he looks at the tricolor floating in Alsace to realize what it means to him to have regained that lost province after forty-four years of bitter waiting—to have Alsace again. Already French soldiers are repainting names on alsatian houses."

Youthful, Beautiful Skin Easy to Have

You may be as healthy as a bird in the air and still have a poor complexion. Changing seasons and temperatures, winds, dust and dirt, are apt to injure any skin, even though the general health be good. When these external influences spoil the complexion, the natural thing is to remove the spoil by external means. Ordinary mercolised wax will do this. It will actually absorb the weather-beaten film-skin, a little each day. In a week or two you'll have a brand new complexion, a new skin. The exquisitely beautiful and youthful complexion thus acquired, comes so easily, without harm or discomfort, there's no reason why any woman should not adopt this simple treatment. Get an ounce of mercolised wax at any drug store, apply nightly like cold cream, washing it off mornings. This will not fail in any case.

To quickly remove wrinkles, signs of care and age, bathe the face occasionally in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. witch hazel. The results will surprise you.

TO DESTROY BRUSSELS?

Germans Have Raised Sidewalks To Plant Mines.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—The Times' special correspondent in Belgium wires:

German troops are clearing the fields in the neighborhood of Brussels of everything edible—beet root, potatoes, turnips and grain—and running it into Germany by special trains. This action may very well speak for itself. The pavements in front of the Hotel de Ville, the Palais de Justice, and other public buildings have been mysteriously lifted and relaid, pointing to laying mines by the Germans. Heavy barricades of sandbags have been thrown up around the Palais de Justice. Guns now point down the Rue de la Regence quartier, Des Minimes avenue, Louise and Rue Saint Gilles.

Colonists Well Armed.

LONDON, Oct. 7. — The Times prints the following despatch from its correspondent at Cape Town, South Africa:

"An article contributed to The Cape Times by a recent visitor to German Southwest Africa, shows that the Union forces have to meet admirably trained and equipped troops, estimated to number at least 10,000, and armed with numerous machine guns and batteries. The Germans have singularly complete combinations by telephone and telegraph and wireless, the territory is difficult for operations and contains defensive positions of great strength."

When You Want To Laugh---Eat!

And If You Want to Eat Without Food Fears Take a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet After Each Meal.

Laughter, smiles and mirth never go with a "caved-in" stomach. Fancy a man afraid of his food laughing! There is always that haunting feeling that a sick stomach is nothing to be mirthful about.

"My old grouchy days are funny to me now."

Just make up your mind to help nature help herself. Give your body a chance to make good. Heal the raw edges of your stomach and give your blood the tools to make digestive fluids with.

There is only one way to make the body well — give it the chance to make itself well. Harmful and strong medicines handicap the system. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets go into the stomach just like food. They are dissolved and there they strengthen the weakened juices of the digestive apparatus until the digestion is made normal.

There is nothing mysterious or magical about them. Science has proved that certain ingredients make up the digestive juices. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are these concentrated ingredients—that is all there is to it. One grain of a certain ingredient contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of food. This illustrates how you aid nature to restore her worn-out materials. When a stomach which is filled with food receives a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet, it is more able to digest the food than it would be without it. The work is not so hard nor the task so long.

When the meal is finally assimilated the entire system absorbs more nourishment and harmful food effects are eliminated easily, quickly and with the maximum of benefit.

Every drug store carries Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. To anyone wishing a free trial of these tablets please address F. A. Stuart Co., 180 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich., and a small sample package will be mailed free.

NOSE AND HEAD STOPPED UP FROM COLD OR CATARRH, OPEN AT ONCE

My Cleansing, Healing Balm Instantly Clears Nose, Head and Throat — Stops Nasty Catarrhal Discharges. Dull Headache Goes.

Try "Ely's Cream Balm."

Get a small bottle anyway, just to try it—Apply a little in the nostrils and instantly your clogged nose and stopped-up air passages of the head will open; you will breathe freely; dullness and headache disappear. By morning! the catarrh, cold-in-head or catarrhal sore throat wil be gone.

End such misery now! Get the small bottle of "Ely's Cream Balm" at any drug store. This sweet, fragrant balm dissolves by the heat of the nostrils; penetrates and heals the inflamed, swollen membrane which lines the nose, head and throat; clears the air passages; stops nasty discharges and a feeling of cleansing, soothing relief comes immediately.

Don't lay awake to-night struggling for breath, with head stuffed; nostrils closed, hawking and blowing. Catarrh or a cold, with its running nose, foul, mucous dropping into the throat, and raw, dryness is distressing but truly needless.

Put your faith—just once—in "Ely's Cream Balm" and your cold or catarrh will surely disappear.

ATTACK IS IMMINENT.

Antwerp's Governor Advises Citizens to Leave City.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Antwerp gives the following official communication issued at 10 o'clock last night:—

"The military governor has informed the burgomaster that a bombardment of Antwerp is imminent, and that the people who wish to flee from the town are requested to leave.

"The bombardment will have no influence on the town's resistance, which will be pushed to the extreme limit."

The Exchange Telegraph Co. adds that the foregoing message has been passed by the British censor for publication.

An official statement issued at Antwerp earlier in the day said:—

"The Germans continue their bombardment of the outer ring of forts. They have utterly failed, however, in their attempts to gain a footing at any point. In a series of sorties the garrison has inflicted great damage on the enemy, who has now abandoned all efforts to carry our positions by storm. Every single fort and redoubt is holding out."

It has been announced that Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the British Admiralty, is now in Antwerp consulting with the Belgian general staff.

SECURITIES SELLING WELL.

Canadian Bonds In London Find Better Market.

LONDON, Oct. 7. — Business in Canadian securities has been carried through with greater freedom during the past few days. Yesterday there were many enquiries on the part of prospective investors for overseas government securities, though the matching of buying and selling orders presented somewhat of a difficulty. Particularly noteworthy was the demand for colonial stocks. Canada four per cent. changing hands at 94 1-2.

Business in bills continues on a small scale.

HARSH TO BRITONS.

Austrians Are Said To Be Using Prisoners Badly.

VENICE, Oct. 7.—(Via Paris.)—Reports from various parts of Austria-Hungary indicate that British prisoners of war have been subjected in many instances to harsh treatment. They have been insufficiently fed and badly housed amid unsanitary conditions.

Many prisoners have been transferred to various points in the interior. At first they were made comfortable and those with money were permitted to buy all the extra comforts procurable, but later all prisoners were treated alike.

A batch of these prisoners were engaged for a time in building torpedo boats for the Austrian navy at the Montfalcone dockyards, near Trieste, but have recently been transferred to a fortress in Hungary.

The American consul at Trieste is endeavoring to find a way to alleviate the unhappy condition of the prisoners.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 6.—Winnipeg wheat opened higher on strong cables, general bullish news and a good cash demand, but selling pressure proved too much in the absence of speculative trade and hedging in Winnipeg and Chicago. The close showed a decline of ⅝c for December and ½c for October. Oats were dull to ½c lower.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Oct. 6.—Considerable grain was offered by local exporters over the cable last night, but the acceptances were few and far between today, as only sales of a few loads of wheat were made. The local market for coarse grain was also quiet, the demand for all lines being limited, but prices show no further change. Business in flour is quiet, both for local and export account and the demand for mill feed is limited. In baled hay the feeling is easier and prices have declined 50c per ton.

Cheese is firm, with a fair demand from local exporters for all offerings.

The butter market is more active, with sales of some round lots of finest creamery to local houses. The trade in eggs is fairly active.

"It is believed the German base was destroyed and that the fortifications, arms and ammunition were seized. A British steamer in port was released. There was no resistance to the Japanese."

Whole Army Imprisoned!

PARIS, Oct. 6. — A statement in The Figaro has aroused much interest to the effect that the Grand Duchess of Luxemburg has been imprisoned in a castle near Nuremberg, and that the little army of the country, amounting to only 350 men, has also been seized and imprisoned, including their commander.

AN UNBIASED TRIBUTE

Atty. H. B. Anderson, of Memphis, Tenn., in Introducing a Lecturer on Christian Science, Recently, Spoke as Follows:

I feel that it is peculiarly inappropriate for me to introduce the speaker of the evening, for the reason that I am totally ignorant of the teachings of your church. My mind is so limited that I am a most crass materialist, and the spiritual nature of your doctrines is beyond my grasp, but for the Christian Scientist as an individual I have the highest admiration. In a community where one-third of the conversation is about the deplorable state of the speaker's liver, and the other two-thirds is about bad business conditions and the excessive heat, coldness, wetness, or dryness of the weather, the serene countenance of the Christian Scientist shines forth like a beacon-right on a dark and stormy coast. Experience teaches us that at least ninety per cent. of the ills that humanity suffers from is purely imaginary, and the other ten per cent. is aggravated by worry, but your Christian Scientist treads the race-course of life free from the handicap of fear and fretfulness. To him the millennium is a personal matter concealed about his person, and when the rising sun awakens him from his serene slumbers, there dawns for him each morning of his life "the day of long expectation and ancient promise."

Judged by its fruits, your church has naught to dread, since its fruits are peace and serenity for its members, and its heel bruises the head of the serpent of fear, that ancient enemy of humankind. The Christian Scientist can hear of a new disease without canvassing himself for symptoms, can sit in a draught without visions of hot mustard foot-baths, running eyes, and swollen nose; can read of the discovery of a new and horrendous germ or microbe without palpitation of the heart; can face financial loss without fear or the poorhouse, and even witness a new comet in the heavens and refrain from speculating on the consequences of a collision with the earth on which we now reside. The thousand and one little pin pricks of fear, dread, worry, and apprehension from which the rest of mankind suffer, the Christian Scientist airily waves aside as he serenely and calmly treads the allotted pathway of his life.

It may be that I have missed the real essence of your doctrines and the benefits you confer upon your membership; it may be that my view is painfully superficial, but I voice the observation of the mass of outsiders who still cling to calomel and quinine, and have a healthy respect and interest in chills, colds, and old-fashioned "rheumatics." We are frankly envious, and though not of you, we admire you. I have another ground of admiration for the Christian Science Church of Memphis. My respect for your publication committee is very real, and from month to month it keeps on growing. I notice in the papers that about once in so often some minister of another church preaches a sermon denouncing your church, and starts off with the brilliant, startling, and original epigram that "Christian Science is neither Christian nor scientific." Then next morning your publication committee, through its chairman, replies, and does it gently, sweetly, lovingly almost, but does it thoroughly and accurately, and in a workmanlike manner, with full attention to details.—Correspondence.

DEATH NOT OF GOD.

"The unspeakable mistake of the Christian church is in its teaching that the physical laws which provide for death, are of God, instead of demonstrating as did the Master that they are the products of false belief. Here Mrs. Eddy makes vital contribution to Christian thought in her teaching that death and all that leads to it 'must be overcome, not submitted to,' before we can 'rest in Truth, refreshed by the assurances of immortality.'"—Christian Science Sentinel.

Board of Health Take Measures

To Stamp Out Epidemic of Diptheria in South of City

At the Board of Health meeting this morning Medical Health Officer McPherson made a verbal report regarding diphtheria in the southern part of the City. There had been six cases in the City and six just outside the City limits. Three deaths had resulted from the ravages of the disease.

Dr. Clinton, District Health Officer, was present. There was some talk of closing the Lake Street Separate School on account of the spread of the epidemic, but he recommended that the school be left open. He also suggested that all the children attending the school be examined, and a nurse be engaged for that purpose.

It was moved by Mayor Buller, seconded by Mr. Murty, that the chairman, Dr. Clinton and Dr. MacPherson confer with the Rev. Father O'Brien and take the necessary steps to stamp out the diphtheria. Carried.

The payment of the following accounts were ordered:

Wm. Stock and Sons, $5; A. G. Dickson $7.15; Fred T. Brown, $3.18; Morgan Hardware Co., $5.65; Higgins Hardware Co., $32.87; A. P. Brown and Co., $7.50.

There were present at the meeting Dr. C. H. Amys, (Chairman), Dr. A. W. McPherson, Mr. Murty, Dr. McPherson and Mayor Buller.

GREAT PICTURES AT RED MILL

The sensational racing picture, "In the Stretch," at the Red Mill this week has been pronounced by those who have seen it as one of the finest motion pictures ever shown here. The action is lively throughout and some of the scenes are remrakable. Local people should not lose their last opportunity to-night of seeing this wonderful picture. For the next three days Manager Clayton has secured another grand film in the $100,000 film play "Through Dante's Flames," in which is shown what is said to be the most wonderful portrayal of a train wreck in the record of filmdom.

"War Time in England" In Lecture To-night

Judging by the interest which has been shown in many quarters, Mr. H. J. Osborn's lecture, to-night, on "England To-day—Conditions in War Time," should be heard by a large audience. It will be given in St. John's Church School House, Hunter street, to-night, at 8 o'clock. Mayor Buller will be in the chair.

COUNT ZEPPLIN MAKING READY FOR AIR RAID

Is Now at Wilhelmshaven With His Staff and Operators Are Working Day and Night---German Newspapers Say Count Has Not Forgotten England and Will Prove It Soon.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, October 7.—In a despatch from The Hague, the correspondent of the Daily Express says that German newspapers reaching there indicate that Count Zeppelin is now at Wilhelmshaven on the North Sea, with his staff.

Wilhelmshaven is the point from which the great air raid on the British Isles is to start. One of these papers published an interview with the Count in which he is quoted as saying that he had not forgotten England and would prove it very soon.

The Zeppelin staffs are working day and night at Wilhelmshaven and another station is being established at Emden for other types of airships.

LONDON, October 7.—The correspondent of the Times at Epernay, France, telegraphing under date of Sunday says,—"The battle of the French Rivers has entered upon its fourth week, and unless some flanking movement is carried through, these appears no reason why the titantic tragedy should not continue for a long time its successful run. Now that the perfection of the German trenches is rivalled by those of the allies it has become a struggle in which one is pitted against an invisible foe who is never seen until he springs suddenly from his hiding place. The countryside along the Aisne is a vast military rabbit warren. Everything possible is being done to relieve the men from the strain of waiting. Tobacco and newspapers are provided and mail is delivered regularly. The strain of waiting has been especially severe on the African troops."

HERE IS A BRIGHT SPOT.

TORONTO, October 7.—Among the absurd statements in a German war office official statement issued to-day, is the following,—"England's Indian troops were led to believe that they were going to a military tournament and not to war when they started for the front."

GERMAN LOSS 300,000

LONDON, October 7.—An official list published in Berlin, says a Rome despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company, gives the German losses in killed and missing up to October first as 117,000. The authorities admit the despatch says that the total losses to date are at least 300,000.

GERMAN BOATS DAMAGED

TOKIO, Japan, October 7.—Reports reaching here say that the German unprotected cruiser Cormoran and two German gunboats, have been so badly damaged by the Japanese shell fire at Kiao-Chau that they had to be beached to prevent their sinking. The Japanese and British warships continue their bombardment of the Kiao-Chau positions, and have caused great damage to the forts at the harbour entrance.

OTTAWA, October 7.—Those who know the Minister of Militia best declare that he will be on the firing line in France and Belgium before returning to Canada. They do not believe that Colonel Hughes will be content to get close to the battle front without having a look at the field of operations. He is certain to be an early visitor at the headquarters of Sir John French.

A GERMAN DESTROYER TORPEDOED

Sunk in the North Sea After an Attack Made by Two Unknown Submarines

CREW WERE SAVED

Examiner Special:

THE HAGUE, October 7—It is announced that a German destroyer has been sunk by a torpedo in the North Sea. All of the crew were saved by a German cruiser.

The message received here says that at the time of sinking the destroyer was to the north east of Schiernounik, not far from the estuary of the Ems. Observers on the island heard a sudden explosion and a huge mass of water arose from under the bows of the destroyer. The boat heeled over and disappeared under the waves within three minutes of the time of the explosion. The periscopes of two submarines appeared on the scene. Their nationality could not be ascertained.

A German cruiser arived from the estuary, the depatch says, in time to save the crew of the destroyer.

Cadet Corps For Local Public Schools

Permission Granted for King Edward School to Form One —Other Schools May Follow

The Principal of the King Edward School made application to the Board of Education last night to have a cadet corps formed in connection with that school. The scholars were very anxious for such a step. On motion of Col. Miller and Dr. Burnham the Principal was given permission to form a cadet corps and introduce regular drill into the curriculum of the school.

It was the feeling of the Board that any school where a competent instructor was available, would be allowed to form a cadet corps if they asked the Board's permission.

Committed On Theft Charge

The case of John McGarvey, on a remand charge of stealing $60 from Harry Hamilton, was heard before the Police Magistrate, this morning. Mr. Widdifield, for the defence, declined to elect.

The plaintiff, through an interpreter, stated that on the evening of Tuesday, Sept. 29th, he went in his laundry shop, on Hunter street, and put his coat, which contained the money, in an inside pocket, on the counter. It was then, he said, that the defendant came in, took the coat, extracted the money, and throwing the coat back, went out. Plaintiff went to the Police and the defendant was arrested at Hogan's Hotel.

Cross-questioned by Mr. Widdifield it appears that on the evening in question, another man accosted the plaintiff on the street and, slapping him on the back with one hand, took him by the breast with the other and tore his shirt. Asked whether he thought the man attempted to obtain the money, plaintiff said he did not think so.

Robert Allen, an East City boy, testified that he saw the prisoner throw the coat into the Chinaman's laundry door on the evening in question.

Detective Newhall stated that he searched the prisoner on the evening in question and found bills of the denominations specified by the plaintiff.

On the evidence submitted the Magistrate committed prisoner for trial.

"But how am I to know that you really love me?" sighed the village maiden.

"Just ask anybody in Junkville," logically answered the travelling man who had visited her two Sundays in succession.

GERMANS HAVE LARGE FORCES IN THE NORTH

New Troops Reinforce Gen. Von. Kluk's Forces and an Enveloping Movement is Being Attempted---In the Woevre District the French Are Advancing.

Examiner Special:

PARIS, October 7.—Fighting in the north continues without change. This was the only information obtainable at military headquarters this morning.

BERLIN CLAIMS SUCCESSES.

BERLIN, via The Hague, October 7. — The war office declares that as a result of cooperation between the armies of General Von Boehm and Von Kluck, the French have been compelled to retreat for a considerable distance along the German right. In addition, they are declared to have been compelled to withdraw large forces from their centre to reinforce their left wing in order to avert a disaster. The official report declares that the German offensive on the western end of the battle line is constantly increasing in its intensity, and that the French are being driven back and enveloped.

PARIS, October 6.—The Germans continue their enveloping movement in north-western France, according to the official three o'clock communique. It states that the battle continues with great violence on the French left and has now extended to the vicinity of Lens and Labassec. Labassec is in the Department of the Nord on the canal of Labassec and is midway between Arras and Lille, while Lens is some six miles farther south. The battle line is declared to be prolonged by enormous masses of cavalry who are said to be centred at Armentieres near Lille. In the Woevre district it is stated that the Germans are trying vainly to check the French steady advance. Elsewhere it is announced that the situation is unchanged.

PARIS, October 7.—No details have been received of the movements of the new German force reported in the vicinity of Lille. It is everywhere now accepted that this force plans a raid at the British lines of communication through the western sea coast towns. It is also accepted that measures have been taken to check it, but of necessity no information along this particular line is obtainable. These new forces are first line troops and part of them are said to be Austrians. Information available here says that the bombardment of the Antwerp fortifications is increasing in violence. The German guns are being served by naval reserves. The battle line in the northwest is constantly extending and in consequence it has been impossible for the allies to regain the territory heretofore sacrificed to the Germans for strategic reasons. But it is understood here that the new movements against the extreme right of the German centre is now progressing rapidly and will when completed materially change the entire situation and give the allies a distinct advantage.

PETROGRAD, October 7.—Practically no news comes from the East Prussian frontier where the Russian armies have been reported as driving the Germans back on their first fortified line. It is stated, however, that the Germans have again been heavily reinforced and that because of this fact the progress of the Russian forces is of necessity slow. The Russians now hold the original German line extending from Lyck to Wirballen. The campaign in Galicia has again been retarded by heavy rains which makes the movement of transportation a desperate task. The southern Galician army continues to make progress along the foothills of the Carpathians.

MANY CAVALRY IN THE SECOND CONTINGENT

Large Number of Mounted Men Will Be Sent in Canada's Next Army of 22,000

NOT YET ACCEPTED

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 7.—In official circles the view is expressed here that it will be late in December and perhaps January before the second contingent can be armed, equipped and sent to England. It is probable that the new force will consist largely of cavalry and mounted infantry, with army service and medical corps and ammunition column. The offer has not been accepted by the Imperial authorities yet, but undoubtedly will be.

Local School Grounds Best In Province

Inspector Mowat Proud of Condition of the Grounds in Connection with Local Schools

Mr. A. Mowat, Public School Inspector, was present at the Board of Education meeting last night, and reported that for the first time practically all of the schools had adequate play-grounds. The children, he added, were taking the utmost advantage of the splendid grounds, and at all the schools were most enthusiastic in using them. Only the South Central remained without sufficient grounds. The play-grounds in connection with the local schools were second to none in Ontario and he felt considerable pride in them.

Fell From Roof; Seriously Hurt

Lindsay Post—Ald. W. W Jordan was the victim of a most distressing accident on Monday afternoon on his farm, (leased by Mr. Lane, of Mariposa) and which is situated about a mile and a half this side of Oakwood.

It appears that Mr. Jordan had a number of men engaged repairing the roof on the house and while superintending the work, he slipped from the structure and fell to the ground below, striking a timber and sustaining serious injuries. Dr. Rich, of Lindsay, was sent for, and it was found that Mr. Jordan's left arm had been broken in two places above the elbow. Two or three ribs were also broken, and besides Mr. Jordan was severely bruised about the body. He was removed to the Ross Memorial Hospital, where the fractures were set.

BORDEN WILL NOT MAKE AN EARLY APPEAL

Special Wire to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 7—The best opinion at the Capital is that Premier Borden will not sanction an early appeal to the people but that he will continue the work begun and appeal at the proper time on the records of his Government. This is despite the stories in the Toronto morning papers to the contrary.

OFF TO JOIN HIS REGIMENT

Lieut. Alan Rogers, accompanied by his father, Mr. Edwin B. Rogers, of Toronto, is spending the day with Mr. R. B. Rogers in East City. Lieut. Rogers was five years in India in King George's Own Pioneer Rifles and engineering corps. For the past three months he has been on furlough in Australia and New Zealand, and had still nine months leave of absence, but the outbreak of war changed that and he is now on his way to England to report at the war office for service at the front. He sails on Friday next.

TO INVESTIGATE OUR IRON RESOURCES.

Pursuant to a request made to the Dominion Government for the granting of some measure of assistance toward the development of iron ore mining in Canada, and in accordance with the statement of the Minister of Finance in his budget speech during the 1913-14 session of Parliament, that the iron mining industry would be investigated, a committee has been appointed to enquire into the situation and to report the facts to the government. Every owner or operator of an iron ore property in Canada should be interested in facilitating this enquiry and should communicate with the Deputy Minister of Mines at Ottawa, or the Secretary of the Committee, who will furnish a schedule of questions covering the information required by the committee.

INDUSTRIAL NIGHT-SCHOOL.

When this cruel war is over and even perhaps before it is ended, industrial and other conditions will return to normal, if not take on an improved, condition. There will be resumption of wonted activity. It is suggested by some who profess to know that one of our largest industrial establishments will resume full operations next spring. There will be openings for employment and the young men who best fits himself for a position stands the best chance of securing it. The Industrial night classes, now being conducted at the old Collegiate Institute building are generally well attended. Indeed in the domestic science department it has been found necessary to organize four classes. In the other departments there is a fairly good attendance except in electricity. In this there does not seem to be taken the expected interest. Young men have no excuse for failing to take advantage of these industrial classes. They are assured of first-class instruction, and the cost is virtually nothing. There is, it is true, a nominal fee of $2.00, but the avoidance of payment is in the pupils own hands, and in his own interest, too. The $2.00 is refunded at the end of the term if the pupil attends ninety per cent. of the sessions of the classes. A young man who aspires to a higher plane of employment will be untrue to his own interest if he does not take advantage of the opportunities for qualifying himhelf, now presented by the industrial classes.

THE BETTER BABY CONTEST.

It is not a "baby show" in the commonly regarded spectacular sense of the term; it is something much higher, much more important and far-reaching. If, as often remarked, "the child is father to the man," it follows that the better the child, the better baby he or she is, or is made to be, the better the resultant man or woman. The object of the baby contest is thorough physical examination and mental examination, to give parents an idea of the good points to be developed or conserved, and of the defects to be eliminated or guarded against, in the process of up-bringing and training. This examination conjoined with the lectures given by government experts in hygienic knowledge and research, will not only benefit the mothers or parents of children actually presented for examination and classification, but all parents intrusted with the immense responsibility of parenthood. Fathers and mothers are urged to take the Better Babies Contest seriously, as it well deserves to be taken. If thus regarded it will be the distinct benefit to the public as it aims to be. All the babies in the contest will not win prizes; but the fathers and mothers of every child, will have gained far more good, than if it had gained a prize, without the thorough examination that gives them a prize—in the way of knowledge that can be turned to the baby's benefit—far more valuable than cup or medal.

ISOLATION AND ITS PENALTIES.

With an epidemic of a contagious disease existing in some parts of the city attention is called to the fact of the benefits of isolation of those affected or exposed in the interests of the protection of the community of the neighbourhood. While isolation is of the first importance and has its important benefits, it also has its hardships. Isolation by quarantine works great hardship to those of limited means. The bread-winners, often both father and mother, are shut off from their regular work and means of earning a living for the family. Then if, as is required the patient is placed in the isolation hospital, the cost is something absolutely impossible to those who have no means ahead, and are prevented by quarantine from earning anything. It needs little reflection to show how great the hardships will be in a large proportion of cases. It is feared that the necessary isolation is not being as effective as is to be desired. Even with the utmost vigilance of the health authorities there is danger of disregard of quarantine which is self-evidently difficult to enforce, especially with the hardships it entails on those of limited means. If some means were adopted to eliminate a large proportion of the hardship — if the Isolation Hospital were made virtually free to those who have not means to pay — the precautions against the spread of contagion would evidently be more effective. To make compliance with the Health Act a really heavier penalty than disregard of it would entail seems to be a logical absurdity and an element in defeating the objects of such legislation. If isolation and quarantine are devised in the public interest it seems fair that the public thus protected, should in some way share the cost of it and not leave the entire burden to fall upon those who, attacked by disease, have not only to suffer from that cause, but suffer in employment and pocket, in the food of the family and otherwise.

THAT AERIAL ATTACK ON ENGLAND.

It is not to be believed that von Moltke has been dismissed by the Kaiser simply because he disagreed with his imperial lord over the latter's desire to despatch an air fleet to attack England. At the same time, if, as is said, he opposed such a project tooth and nail—at any rate for the present—he must have incurred thereby the severe displeasure of his erratic master.

England long ago aroused the yellow demon of greed and jealousy in the Kaiser's breast, and his hatred for England now amounts to a mania. What he could hope to gain by an airship attack on England is not apparent. Nobody in his senses could imagine that such an attack would in any way influence the campaign at its present juncture. All that could be accomplished is the possible destruction of historic places—the robbing of England of some of her historic possessions.

Some of Germany's professors are as rabid in their greedy jealousy of England as is the Kaiser, or instance, in New York to-day is published a statement from Dr. Leonard, President of Physics at Heidelberg University, in which he cries aloud for the destruction of London. It must be razed. Especially is there to be "no respect for the tombstones of Shakespeare, Newton and Faraday."

As the New York Herald says editorially, the meaning of this rabid utterance is plain. The special object of the professor's projected attack is Westminster Abbey. It must go the way of the cathedral at Rheims, while London is meeting the fate of Termonde and Louvain—and all, of course, in the interest of the spread of "Kulture" throughout the world. Evidently the Kaiser and his underlings would like to destroy all evidence of the greatness of other nations. Thus Germany could get not only "a place in the sun," but pose as the sun itself.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

THE NEW PRIME MINISTER.

Hon. W. J. Hanna, who alone among the members of the Ontario Cabinet divided before the public at all events political leadership with Sir James Whitney, seems not to have pressed his right of succession. It is reported that his health is not good, and it is not improbable that his party shrank from trial of the political imprudence and tactlessness exhibited in the Taylor incident and especially in the rough methods of resistance to inquiry. Sir Adam Beck was pressed in some quarters because of his activity in the Hydro-Electric enterprise, beyond which his interest seems not to have extended. The Hydro-Electric has still many difficulties to surmount, responsibility for which the politicians would gladly evade. That, and not, as has been alleged, a disposition of the new Cabinet to favour corporations, is doubtless the explanation of his withdrawal from the Cabinet.

Hon. W. H Hearst, upon whom the choice of his party has fallen, is scarcely known to the people of the Province. He has been in the Legislature six years and, since the accession of Mr. Cochrane in 1911, Minister of Lands and Mines. He finds the Provincial Treasury empty. His first act is to issue five millions of treasury notes at five per cent., and his next, doubtless, will be to devise new taxes to meet an expenditure which passed long since the bounds of prudence. It is certain that henceforth the electorate will be critical of expenditure and Old Ontario may resent all but productive expenditures in the North, which is disposed to make trying demands. It is, therefore, not altogether an advantage that he is a representative of New Ontario.

He is asked to preserve the Whitney traditions. If the first interest of the people of the Prince for years to come will be prudent and economical administration, he will assure his own success by reviving and preserving also the Mowat tradition of economy and cautious change.— Weekly Sun.

MR. HEARST AS A TEMPERANCE REFORM PREMIER

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Oct. 8.—There are indications that the new Prime Minister is going to make an appeal to the temperance men of his party on the grounds that he himself is a temperance man and an advocate of temperance measures; in fact, Hon. Frank Cochrane, who is a shrewd man, doubtless thought of this aspect in picking his Prime Minister, and one of the reasons why Hearst appealed to him most was, not only his general pliability, but because he was a man with temperance professions. Cochrane realized that something had to be done in an effort to hold the temperance section of the party. In spite of the undue haste with which the last election was called; in spite of the aid from Ottawa and the money alliance of the liquor interests, and also the strong honoured personality of the late Prime Minister, Mr. Cochrane, as campaign manager, found that he lost ground in the, number of seats and lost far more ground in the popular vote, which rose to 43 per cent. for Liberal candidates and 4 per cent. for independents. Hearst looked to be one way out of the difficulty, which, as Cochrane foresaw, would be greatly increased at the netx contest.

Cochrane, it is said, thought Hearst would do as an alleged temperance head of an alleged tempernce Government; but temperance men are asking, what are the facts concerning Hearst and temperance legislation? The new premier may say he favours temperance, but what is his record?

In the three sessions of the legislature, 1912, 1913 and 1914, Hon. Mr. Hearst voted solidly with his party against the abolition of the bar. He even went so far as to vote against the proposal on April 10th, 1913, to include club licenses in the operation of Local Option.

Hon. W. H. Hearst has an opportunity now to prove himself a real temperance man by introducing genuine temperance legislation far in advance of what the overnment has so far done. Temperance men hope he will do so, but his previous record in the House is not encouraging.

KAISER COCHRANE IN FEDERAL AND ONTARIO POLITICS

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Oct. 7.—That Hon. Mr. Cochrane was expressly invited to assist in organizing for the Provincial contest last June is the interesting revelation contained in an editorial of the Toronto News, Conservative. The man who wrote it could scarcely have realized that he was exposing the hollowness of the Bilingual cry raised by the Government at that time.

Towards the end of the contest, plainly in accordance with a pre-arranged plan, the bilingual issue was made prominent and it was claimed that the English language in Ontario was in danger at the hands of the Liberal party and its alleged connection with the French propaganda. The charge was groundless in any event; the real facts are now becoming apparent.

The Conservative campaign was deliberately put under the direction of the man who in the Federal election of 1911 brought Bourassa into Ontario, with no protests from the "truly loyal" because it was in the interests of their party.

Moreover, it was Hon. Frank Cochrane who, while at a congress of the Ontario Government, made the following statement as quoted in a pamphlet issued by the French Canadian Educational Association.

1. At the Civic Reception tendered the French Canadian Congress at Ottawa, Jan. 19, 1910.—"I have done much towards opening the first bilingual training school in New Ontario and I wish to say to the French-Canadians that they can rely on me."

2. At a banquet given the French-Canadian Congress at Ottawa on the 20th of January, 1910.—"The French-Canadians can reckon upon my sympathy and my support as well as upon the spirit of justice of the Government which I have the honour to represent."

It is this same Mr. Cochrane who not only conducted the campaign in June, but who now, according to Conservative papers themselves, selected the new Prime Minister.

With German Prisoners Held In The Prison Camps

LONDON, Oct. 4.—Dust clouds whirling up from a bare, grey field before a bleak and bitter wind. A triple trocha of high wire. Here and there faint wisps of smoke whipped away from the cooking holes that put the sandy surface. Dejected figures wandering to and fro and beating their arms to get warm.

That is one's first impression of Aldershot prison camp, where 6000 Germans are held under guard.

At night the wind screams fiendishly chill over this Aldershot moor. Arc lights glow high above the wire fences. Khaki-clad sentinels tramp their rounds. In the sentry boxes at the corner of the square prison inclosure men stand continually upon watch. The conical white tents within the prison flap and strain at their moorings and gleam cold under the moon. Little figures tramp about wrapped in their blankets, thrashing the blood back into their chilled bodies.

No doubt the prisoners are in better case than if they were fighting in that bloody campaign in France. But no one can doubt their utter misery. Even greater than the bodily suffering is the mental anguish. They know nothing of what is going on. There are moneyed men in that enclosure who would cheerfully pay—have offered to pay—ten pounds for any newspaper. They know nothing of their folks at home. A little blond, blue-eyed German boy came to the headquarters tent and spoke to the interpreter:

"This boy wants to see his father."

"He can't see his father," snapped the officer on duty.

Tears came into the blue eyes. The boy began the long trudge back to town.

How They Are Guarded.

There is no sentimentality about the English in dealing with their German prisoners. The captured men are provided with food and with certain elementary comforts. The rest they must do for themselves.

"We give them a blanket each," said the officer on duty, "and shirts and shoes. Coatless men are given coats. They have the same tents that we have to sleep in, and each tent has a wooden floor. The tents are not heated in any way."

There are German officers inside the trocha. A casual question whether the officers messed with the men brought a smile.

"There is no mess," said the officer. "We give them food and a tin pan. They dig holes in the ground and cook it to suit themselves."

So those casual wisps of smoke blowing across the sandy desert were explained. Noblemen and peasant, stoker and gun captain, met over the cooking pot in democratic equality. Fuel was rigidly limited. Groups of cold figures, sprouded in blankets that had once been white, huddled over some of the fires.

The lucky prisoners have overcoats. I saw one stoker from the cruiser Mainz in bare feet. The single blanket dealt out to each is of no extraordinary weight. It is about the thickness of the ordinary bed blanket. The men have no beds otherwise. Their sufferings on cold night may be left to the imagination. Most nights are cold at Aldershot.

The road from London runs parallel to and at the distance of 100 yards from the camp fence. Each day that road is jammed with luxurious motor cars. Pretty women nestling in furs shiver as they watch the wretched reree-show. Their men stand with glasses at eye.

Death Lies in Encircling Fence.

Three wide fences encircle the camp. The innermost one is perhaps seven feet high. If a prisoner were to surmount this fence, unseen by the sentries in the corner boxes or by one of the guards that unceasingly pace the outer ring, he would come next to a 20 feet high fence. Significantly insulated wires run from the arc lights to this fence.

"It is charged with 3000 volts of electricity," said the commandant. "That is not enough to kill every man, but it would kill most men. It would shock any man into insensibility."

A path runs around the outer ring of this fence. There the soldiers do sentry-go. The final certification that no prisoner can escape is a double wire entanglement 100 feet from the electrified fence. This is a double row of posts six feet tall. Barbed wire is strung along each line of posts and crossed and looped and complicated between them. Given wire clippers and solitude and no man could get through in less than ten minutes. Scattered around the outside of the prison inclosure are the conical tents of the guards.

Most of the German officers who have been captured are held in Wales. The German soldiers and seamen held at Aldershot rarely have risen above non-commissioned rank. Here and there white dandages tell of battle wounds.

"The men who were rescued from the sinking Mainz tell me they are glad to be here," said the commandant. "They say they cannot sleep at night for thinking of that awful deck. Two hundred and twenty-two men were blown to pieces by our gunfire there. Two men lived throughout that hell unhurt."

Other prisoners protest against being billeted with the Mainz men. They cry out so in the night.

The Encampment Store.

For the most part the captured soldiers and sailors are men of excellent physique. But more than one-half of the prisoners are civilians, whose one fault was that they are of German blood and were found in England after war had been declared. Most of them are men of military age, but most unmilitary dispositions. They had hoped to escape the war by refusing to go back and fight for the Kaiser.

"They are a pretty grubby lot," said the commandant. "They are not to be compared with the fighting men."

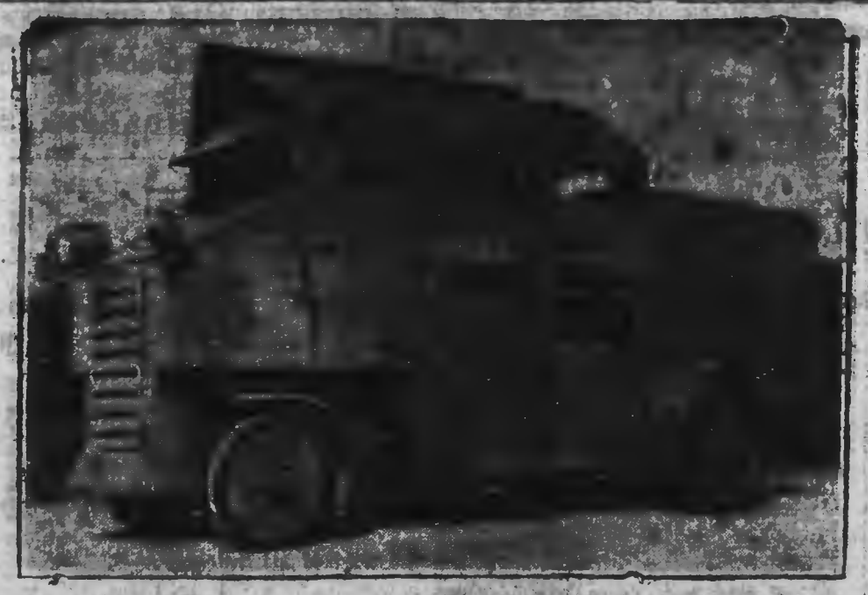
We saw several small groups brought in. Most of them seemed to be waiters and barroom porters and barbers and others of the sort. Indoor pallor was on every face. They shuffled along with hanging heads. Their eyes were reddened by that wind they must face daily until the war is over. They shivered pitifully, poor little thin-blooded chaps.

Many of the civilians—few of the fighting men — have a little money. They have been permitted to retain this, although extremely large sums are taken away. In a separate inclosure of its own stands the encampment store. To this purchasers are admitted in groups of two and three, under a strong guard. The delights of shopping are banned. They go to buy specific articles. When their purchase is completed they are hurried out.

"Then they can buy blankets?"

"Yes," said the commandant. "But they would have to stay awake to watch them. The man with one blanket is sure to steal from the man with two blankets when the nights get cold."

These encampments are scattered about over England. Each is conducted upon a practically identical plan. As the war goes on there must be more of them. They add their large item to the sum of human misery.



An Armoured Motor Fortress.—One of the great features of the present war has been the armoured car combats and some very good work has been executed with them by the various armies in the field.

BABY'S FACE MASS OF ERUPTION

Spread Over Head and Neck. Caused Disfigurement, Burning and Itching. Could Not Get Any Sleep. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Healed.

1 Hillsdale Ave., West Toronto, Ont.—"First we noticed a rash on our child's face, which soon began to spread all over his head and then around his neck. I thought it was going all over his body. It was in red patches on his face, then pimples began to form which broke and matter was running from them. His face and head was a mass of eruption and it caused a very bad disfigurement, also burning and itching. The child could not get any sleep. I tried several kinds of ointments and powders but with no success for about two months. The rash seemed to get worse. Little blisters would form then burst and a lot of discharge would come out.

"We tried ——— Ointment and ——— but to no good effect. After the child had been suffering about two months we were recommended to try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. After a few applications it gave relief and the child began to get some sleep. In about six weeks Cuticura Soap and Ointment completely healed the trouble and not a scar is left." (Signed) Mrs. Wm. Tucker, Feb. 10, 1914.

Is business quiet? Then study the possibilities of your telephone. Just now it can prevent business slowing up and at the same time effect some real economies.

As a salesman, the long distance telephone is unequalled. It enables you to get in touch with customers and, by a wise word dispel their uneasiness. You can keep them posted on prices and possibly dissuade them from curtailing their orders. In countless ways your telephone can help you.

Study the possibilities of your telephone yourself. Its use in your business may be different from its use in other lines, and the saving in travelling expense, time and labor is a great factor.

KITCHENER CAN TALK TO FRENCH BY TELEPHONE

LONDON, Oct. 6.— Wonders have been worked in the London telephone service by the exigencies of war. Complaints of the inefficiency have practically ceased. To meet the demand for a larger night staff women operators have been employed all night to reinforce the small male staff which suffices in time of peace.

Besides the rush of work, there are special duties to be performed. For instance, the phones of German and Austrian subjects have to be tapped and cut off if necessary and all suspects similarly treated.

In the private exchanges of the Admiralty, War Office and the Treasury, the staff which normally leaves at 5 p.m. has to remain on duty in shifts for the whole twenty-four hours. In the War and Admiralty departments secret switchboards are installed; that is, any one calling up an official in these offices is plugged through and the operator cannot tap the conversation.

Twelve trunk and long distance lines are reserved especially for the use of the Admiralty and a greater number for the War Office.

News from the fleet comes in by wireless to the Admiralty building and is transmitted by phone by the wireless operator to Mr. Churchill, who is practically always in touch with each Admiral at sea.

Lord Kitchener from his chair in the War Office or from his bedside speaks directly to Sir John French at the front by a private wire which only takes a minute to secure attention at both ends. Thus Kitchener is as much on the spot as if he were at the British headquarters in France.

4,000,000 PAIRS OF BOOTS.

"We have reason to believe that the British Government have placed or are about to place orders for something like 1,000,000 pairs of boots for Regulars, for Lord Kitchener's new army, and for Territorials," writes a Leicester firm of boot manufacturers. "In addition we understand that the French Army have placed or are about to place orders for 3,000,000 pairs. We also hear of the Belgian Army ordering 500,000 pairs, and of Servian and Greek inquiries."

GERMANY LIED TO BELGIUM IN 1911

LONDON, Oct. 6.—The Belgian Government has issued a grey book of correspondence relative to the war. The facts disclosed have been almost completely covered by similar British correspondence, but the interesting revelation is made that in 1911 the Belgian Government sought to obtain from the German Government a declaration that Germany had no intention of violating Belgian neutrality.

The German Chancellor replied that although Germany had no such intention, a public declaration to that effect would weaken Germany's military position by reassuring France, which would in that case, concentrate all her forces on the east.

It was for this reason that no declaration of the kind Belgium sought was made in the Reichstag, and this is held to prove that Germany, for a long time contemplated a dash through Belgium on France.

It further appears that Belgium made a last attempt to dissuade Germany from her enterprise by sending an intimation to the German Government that it was wrong to infer that France had any intention of violating Belgian neutrality, and further, that even if she did, Belgium would oppose the invader by a vigorous resistance.

The New Patriotism

There is more than one way of serving your country. We cannot all go forth to fight on the blood-stained fields of France and Belgium, but it is within everyone's power to help crush the monster that threatens Europe.

Modern warfare is a battle of resources, financial resources most of all.

Every dollar you spend for goods "Made in Canada" is increasing the wealth, the resources, of the Empire, it is giving employment to Canadian workmen, it is contributing to Canada's welfare, and it is supplying the sinews of war to Britain, it is helping to fight the enemy.

The new patriotism seizes every opportunity to help—the enlightened patriot insists that everything he buys be "Made in Canada."

A WEEK OF WAR ON $8.75

Englishman Found Travelling Cheap in France---Received Many Kindnesses and Was Welcomed Everywhere--Saw British Straggling Troops in Queer Attire.

LONDON, Oct. 6:—Returned travellers from the Continent say that travelling there is cheaper than before the war. One artist, who has just come back from France, told how he started out with $10 and returned home with $1.25 after spending a week in the war zone. His week's travel cost him just $8.75. He said:

"I have just spent a week in France and Belgium. I have travelled scores of miles on foot and by rail when, a day ago, I got on the boat at Ostend with a jealously-guarded return ticket. I still had $1.25 remaining from the $10 which represented my financial resources when I landed on French soil. Touring on the Continent just now seems to be cheaper than in times of piping peace, thanks mainly to the scrupulous disregard of French and Belgian railway officials for such mundane things as fares or tickets.

"Eight days ago I found myself in Boulogne, a stranger in a strange land, and with no idea of the language. Boulogne was like Glasgow on a Sunday. I tried to get through to Paris, but it was impossible, so I decided to go to Ostend. Grim tales of Uhlan patrols were told me. Railway fares were out of the question. I had not then thought of the possibility of free rides, so I set out to walk.

"A day's tramp saw me at Calais. Three times I was stopped by the French soldiers. The only French word I knew was 'Anglais,' but that was enough. 'Anglais,' I said, and waved my much-thumbed passport with all the assurance of a tourist with a Baedeker. It had a magical effect. Smiles, salutes, and good wishes replaced the fearsome challenges of a moment before.

"The early success of 'Anglais' brought inspiration at Calais. It was the same there. Gendarmes, stationmaster, ticket collector, booking clerk, bowed and smiles at the magic word. No one dreamt of my paying for a ticket to Dunkirk.

"But having boarded the train, I thought my luck had turned. The ticket collector followed me into the compartment and settled himself as for a journey. Visions of arrest rose up, born perhaps of a guilty recollection of having once travelled from the Mansion House to Charing Cross without a ticket at a moment of extreme financial distress. But in the compartment was a French boy who could speak English, and it appeared that the stationmaster, fearful of my comport and safety, had instructed the collector to accompany me as a sort of guardian to see me safely past the officials at Dunkirk. He did so, and took me to a hotel where they could talk of nothing else but the prowess of the British soldiers, and where they waved away all suggestion of a bill with enthusiastic repetitions of the word that up till now had stood me in such good stead—'Anglais.'

"In two days after leaving Boulogne, with dread tales ringing in my ears of what would happen to me on the way, I had arrived at Ostend without having paid two cents in fares and only a few cents for food.

"In this roundabout route to Ostend I encountered many little kindnesses, but the limit was reached when a porter offered me a franc. It was probably all the money he possessed, but he thought by my gestures that I was 'broke.'

"But although I have spent seven days in France and Belgium at a cost (apart from the boat passage of 35s) I have come back with an uncomfortable feeling that I have hardly had my money's worth. Not one German have I seen.

"In the seven days, however, I have seen sights and heard tales thrilling and glorious that the years will never efface. I shall never forget, for instance, how one morning in Boulogne I saw coming towards me a little group of seven men, clothed in rags, faced smeared with dust and grime, rusty-red blotches showing dully here and there, grim reminders of such things as whistling bullets and flying fragments of shell. One of them asks me to direct them to the British Consul. When I replied to them in words that still have a lingering trace of Midland accent they were almost overcome with joy.

"They were British soldiers not as we know them, decked out in the fine trappings of the parade ground, spick and span, and shaven. They had been at the great battle of Mons, and the nine days of walking and hair-breadth escapes that had followed their having been cut off from their regiment had left their mark.

"French peasants, they told me, had given them clothes and buried their uniforms. The pictures they presented was a cameo of tragedy, but there was the inevitable comic relief. One great giant of a fellow, 6 feet 3 inches in height, had been given a pair of trousers that reached only an inch or two below his knees. 'Bli' me, mate,' he said, with a rueful glance at his partially covered legs, 'I never thought I was comin' out 'ere to be turned into a bloomin' Boy Scout.'

"They had had a terrible time. They had been, they said, in the trenches at Mons. The German artillery had got the range almost immediately. 'The blessed shells,' said one, 'were screaming like—well, like nothing you ever heard before. All we could do was to keep on firing. Our officer stood up in the trenches and clapped his hands like as if he was clappin' a star turn at the Empire. 'Good boys,' he yelled. 'Good boys, stick to it!' That was all he said. The next moment a piece of shell had crumpled him up. The one in command ordered us to retreat and we pelted back.

"On the way we passed a deserted Maxim. There was a Lancashire chap who knew how to work it. 'So long, boys,' he shouted, and made a dive for the gun. A few moments later I looked back. There he was, pumpin' lead into the mass of 'em, laughin' for all he was worth and yellin' out: 'Look at 'em droppin' boys. Look at 'em droppin'.' It was the last I saw of him.

"At Ostend I fell in with nine more stragglers. One of them was a brawny Yorkshireman. His chief grievance was that he hadn't been able to write and tell his wife where he was and how he was getting on. 'Tha' sees, lad,' he remarked in perfect seriousness, 'th' missus knows that now and then I drink one or two more glasses than's good fer me, and she'll be gettin' anxious.' A few days before he had been in a terrifically hot engagement, yet the only thing that worried him was the fear that the 'missus' might be anxious about what he called the 'teetotal lay.'"

MOTHER! IS CHILD'S STOMACH SOUR, SICK?

If Cross, Feverish, Constipated, Give "California Syrup of Figs."

Don't scold your fretful, peevish child. See if tongue is coated; that is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with sour waste.

When listless, pale, feverish, full of cold, breath bad, throat sore, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, has stomach-ache, indigestion, diarrhoea, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul waste, the sour bile and fermenting food passes out of the bowels and you have a well and playful child again. Children thus harmless "fruit laxative," and mothers can rest easy after giving it, because it never fails to make their little "insides" clean and sweet.

Keep it handy, Mother! A little given to-day saves a sick child to-morrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Remember there are counterfeits sold here, so surely look and see that yours is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse back with contempt any other fig syrup.

ARE STILL RETREATING

Germans in East Prussia May Make a Stand at Lyck—Say Kaiser Caused Disaster

STEADILY RETIRING

LONDON, Oct. 7. — Petrograd official statements continue to repeat in a general way what has been accepted here as a fact for days—that the German army along the east Prussian frontier has been more or less routed and cut to pieces, but as this is only a small portion of the front it is exceedingly hard to get anything like a clear-cut perspective of the conflict. The Petrograd correspondent of the Havas News Agency transmits the following official statement:

"The German retreat continues along the frontier of East Prussia. The Germans have been forced to evacuate their fortified positions between Wierzblow and Lyck."

"The Russian offensive campaign continues. The fortified positions on the frontier are under a heavy artillery fire. The enemy has received reinforcements from the garrison at Koenigsberg. There has been particularly desperate fighting in the Valley of Dakalargewo.

"Railroads in East Prussia are crowded with troop trains, and our aerial scouts report an uninterrupted movement of Germans in a westerly direction. German columns and German troop trains are withdrawing across the frontier."

A news agency despatch from Petrograd says:

"During the Russian retreat through the Mabur Lake District, in East Prussia, a Russian battery was surrounded on three sides by the enemy's quick-firers. The infantry was on the other side of the lake and the Russian ammunition was exhausted. In order to avoid capture the commander ordered the battery to gallop over the declivity into the lake. His order was obeyed and he himself was among the drowned.

"During an assault on the fortress of Ossowitz, a German column got into a bog. The Russians shelled the bog and the single road crossing it. The Germans in trying to extricate themselves sank deeper and deeper into the mire, and hundreds were killed or wounded. Of the whole column there were only about 40 survivors.

A correspondent of The Daily Mail says:

"The German debacle on the Niemen was due to the mistakes of the Kaiser, who is responsible for the sudden shifting of German forces. It is declared that the Kaiser misled Gen. von Hindenburg with exaggerated reports of German victories. Gen. von Hindenburg, therefore, decided to adopt the offensive, with the result that all he obtained was new losses, new transferences of troops, new vacillations and a new creation of insecurity and mistrust."

The next German stand is expected to be made at Wirballen and Lyck. Gen. Rennenkampf, in command of the Russian forces, is pushing rapidly forward, and it is believed he will soon begin the invasion of East Prussia in earnest.

The town of Marmaros-Sziget, capital of the Hungarian County of Marmaros, has fallen into Russian hands and the seat of local government moved to Huszt, 38 miles northwest of Sziget, where Cossacks were reported to have cut the railway line yesterday.

It is stated that the Russians have met with repulses at Muramarossige and Tarokoro. Engagements are in progress at Poleno and Akkos. None of these battles are really conclusive but have developed the Russian advance in good shape.

INCREASING UNEMPLOYMENT IN GERMANY.

The Berlin newspaper "Vorwarts," in a review of the economic situation, gives some interesting figures regarding unemployment in Germany. In Nuremberg, for instance, there are 85,723 labourers, of whom 41,812 are men. About 30 per cent of these have been called to the colours, and of the remaining 43,549, male and female, 11,756 are out of work. These figures are compiled from official statistics but the true numbers of unemployed are probably still higher, as some of the Trade Federations have not sent in their reports, and the "Vorwarts" estimates that at least one-third of the working population is without work in consequence of the war. While at the outbreak of war there were only 1,934 unemployed, this number increased to 9,922 in the first month of hostilities. The "Vorwarts" declares that these figures can be applied to all large towns and trades in Germany, and that it is undoubtedly the fact that unemployment is increasing week by week. Clearly, the journal adds, this question of unemployment is a very serious one for the Government.

8 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Gosseown, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis and one said I could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

Board of Education Held Its Regular Meeting Last Night

Mr. Eastwood Reports That Attendance at Industrial Classes For Men Has Fallen Off This Year—Miss Warner Resigns

The Board of Education met in regular session last night, there being present Dr. Morrison, chairman, Dr. Burnham, Col. Miller and Messrs. Crane, McGrath, Eastwood, Ackerman, Hill, Eastwood and Smith.

Attendance Decreased.

Mr. Eastwood reported that the attendance at the Industrial school classes for men had decreased from last year. It seemed that men out of employment were missing a valuable chance to learn a trade, but the fact was that the attendance was smaller, partly owing to so many being unemployed. He had been advised by Dr. Marchant, who predicted that conditions would be such, to continue the classes and that things would probably brighten up before long.

Miss Warner Resigns.

Miss Warner's resignation was to hand and it was accepted. On the motion of Messrs. Hill and Crane, the matter of securing an assistant for Miss Cameron, who will now take charge of the Kindergarten, was left with the Committee on Appointments.

The following statement of money received was to hand:

Burglars Still Busy in Lindsay

Lindsay Warder: Burglars, evidently of a youthful age, made a bold attempt to rob the hardware store of Mr. D. Cinnamon early Sunday morning, the robbery being successful to the extent of fifty cents in coppers. Goods usually found in a hardware store, may have been purloined, but as yet the proprietor has missed nothing but the half hundred coppers.

If the thieves (for it is believed that there were two or three) were youths they were bold, also adroit and physically quick. Their means of ingress was through the rear of the store. By some means they were able to climb up a distance of some ten feet along side a window and hoist themselves on to a bridge which spans across the laneway at the rear of the store with the tinsmith department.

On gaining this bridge they forced the door leading to the second-storey store-room, the lock on the door being somewhat weak. Passing down the stairs at the rear they found their way blocked by a door, which was bolted with three small bolts, besides having a regular lock. Nothing daunted they managed to hoist one of the party up to the glass window on top of the door, and by breaking one of the panes of glass, crawled through and unlocked the door for the accomplices. The glass was pulled inwards, no doubt to prevent any extra noise from falling on the floor, and carefully piled on the steps.

The thieves then made their way to the office and no doubt finding the safe locked proceeded to rifle the till. Fortunately the silver and bills had been removed and but fifty cents in coppers remained. These the thieves carried away with them. The robbery was committed during the time the fire was on in the east ward at about one o'clock Sunday morning.

Wants The Cost of Water Reduced

A correspondent sends an enquiry to The Examiner Office asking why the Water Commissioners do not reduce the cost of water to some extent, when he is required to reduce his rent in order to keep his tenants. He says he has had to make a reduction of 10 per cent. to all his tenants, and as he has to pay the water rates he thinks the City should make a reduction in the water rates.

Boiled puddings should never be turned out the moment they are done. They are very likely to break it this is done.

THE LIFE OF A WATCH

It should be cleaned and oiled once a year. Many dead watches are allowed to go without cleaning and the result is the oil is entirely dried up, the pivots get worn and the watch is ruined. It costs nearly as much as a new watch to put it right. Our prices are moderate. The old motto "A stitch in time saves nine" holds good.

GERMANS HAD PLANNED SIEGE OF TOWNS LONG AGO

Secured Property at Exact Range of Five Miles From Namur and Maubege Forts.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—A London Standard despatch from Ostend to the Tribune says:

"What I am convinced is a true explanation of the amazingly swift subjection of Namur by the Germans, and afterwards of Maubenge, has been given me by a resident of Lille, who arrived here this evening from Antwerp. The story offers so simple an explanation that I believe it will be found in due time fully confirmed by local evidence which cannot be obliterated.

"Everyone knows that the great German 42-centimetre howitzers require a concrete base, which has to be most carefully and laboriously constructed. A certain German baron has occupied for some years a chateau five miles from Namur. Last spring he made a new tennis court in the ground. German workmen were employed, and a deep concrete foundation was laid to precise measurements, with a line of rails running to its centre. Above it the asphalt tennis court then was laid. The presence of the concrete beneath, and especially the rails, which were supposed by the few persons who saw them to be simply conveniences for bringing up the concrete, naturally had no importance attached to them by those who played tennis this summer on the courts.

Place for Howitzers.

"When the Germans made their attack on Namur, giant Howitzers, which can only move at the rate of two miles an hour, drawn by thirty-two horses for each one, were placed in position on the rails, and firmly stationed on the concrete, which was exposed and cleared in a few hours by the removal of the asphalt.

"The tennis courts position gave a clear and exactly measured range to the forts of Namur, which were smashed up in two days.

Same at Maubege.

"At Maubege similar plans were made. Some forest land, five miles away, was sold two years ago for building purposes to a firm now believed to be agents of Kruppa. It built an alleged traction engine factory, for which the space was covered with a deep layer of concrete, and provided with rails. The Germans used this in the same way. It is expected that similar concrete bases were prepared for the war by German agents around Antwerp, but the Germans do not appear to have found them accessible yet, or the Belgians forestalled them, and rendered the concrete beds useless.

"A workshop near Schoenaerd was last week labelled by the Germans "not to be burned." It was built with German materials and German labour. When the Belgians returned to it, they found it contained a complete plant and material for making pontoon bridges."

Envoy Brewer Brown, who packed the Temple when he was here before, will spend the week-end and conduct a special service on Monday evening.

Great and stirring services will be on Saturday evening and Sunday. On Monday, Thanksgiving Day, the three Sabbath Schools, Brayley, Brownton and the Temple will have tea together after a great junior entertainment in the afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Then the older folks will have tea together at 5:30, followed by a great open-air and Envoy Brown telling his life story in the evening. A special soldiers meeting is being held tonight at the Temple to make final arrangements.

CROSSLEY MEETINGS

The attendance at the Crossley meetings in the Charlotte St. Church continues to grow; already the gallery is being used. The Song-Sermon was on the Seven Crowns; six of which may be ours if we will be candidates for the same; and toward the attainment of this end we should be guided by Duty or Interest. These six crowns as pointed out in Scripture are the crowns of (a) Loving-kindness, (b) Gold, (c) Glory, where honours come to us, not according to the success standard, but according to the goodness and fidelity of the Christian. Then there was the crown of immortality—of life. As an illustration he cited the martyrdom of Polycarp, at the age of 98 refused to recant and be faithless to Jesus Christ, who had been faithful to him for 86 years. He gained the crown of life being faithful unto death. Then there was the crown of rejoicing which comes to those who see that Christians are saved to serve. It is not enough, said the preacher, to save our souls and lose our lives. The call to many a Christian is to redeem the past failures and seek to save as many souls as possible. Then shall he realize the privileg and duty of the called of God: "I wil bless thee and make thee a blessing."

Here Mr. Crossley sang a solo in which he invited the congregation to join in the chorus, "Shall There Be Any Stars in My Crown?" In the Crown of Righteousness, God vindicates His dealings with us. When he reached the 7th Crown, he said all of the six Crowns should be ours as we are driven by Duty or urged onward by interest; but the 7th Crown is a Crown of Thorns, fit only for the mockers and is a Crown of shame. So strongly did he present this point that there was an evident relief to the pent up feelings when an opportunity was given to sing, "We Will Crown Him King of Kings."

To-night he speaks on "Wrong Views of God," a theme which the late Dr. John Potts most strongly commended, remarking to Mr. Crossley, 'whatever topic he might omit from his sermons in future campaigns, not to omit this one. To-night you will be given an opportunity to hear it.

Last evening Adjutant and Mrs. McElhenny from the Salvation Army, who met Mr. Crossley first at Nova Scotia, were present, as was Rev. Mr. Gardiner, from Nova Scotia.

ANTWERP SILENT AT NIGHT

All Bustle and Stir in the Daytime But in the Night Not a Sound is Heard and No Gleam of Light is Visible.

LONDON, Oct. 6.—There is just one thing certain about Antwerp that one can say without fear of contradiction, and only one. That is that on the stroke of eight o'clock every night Antwerp becomes the darkest and blackest city in the world. Not the faintest glimmer of light is to be seen anywhere. Not a sound is to be heard. Even the footfalls of the few privileged persons allowed to be out after eight o'clock are deadened. The people actually tread softly. Add to this a dark and lowering sky, and you have a real "city of dreadful night."

As we draw up to the pier we pull alongside the steamer Brussels of the Great Eastern Railway Company, her decks fairly swarming with fair-haired Belgian refugees, children outnumbering the grown-ups five to one. Most of them are wearing wooden sabots, many of them are barefooted. On the pier are several hundreds more. We shall take them back with us. They are from the villages and hamlets around Louvain and Termonde.

City of Contrasts.

Their baggage? Oh, yes, this family of five have theirs tied up in a handkerchief, which the mother clasps in her arms, while next to them a group of seven have enough almost to fill a sheet, and the two smallest children are asleep on it. Most of them have walked all the way to Antwerp, and even if the fires the Germans set in their homes spared anything, it is rather difficult to carry two or three babies and any large amount of household effects twenty or thirty miles.

There is no formality about going ashore. You simply walk off the gang plank and there you are. The customs men have a pretence of looking at your baggage, but that is all. Nobody carries more than they can walk in nowadays. We have been careful to have our passports vised at the Belgian Embassy before leaving London, but they were never looked at.

And now for this city of contrasts. For if Antwerp is a "city of dreadful night," it is all bustle and stir in the daytime. In fact, the whole city lives in the streets while daylight lasts, as if to make up for the gay evenings it is robbed of. Or perhaps it is for fear the people may miss something that is going on, some fresh rumour, that they flock to the streets.

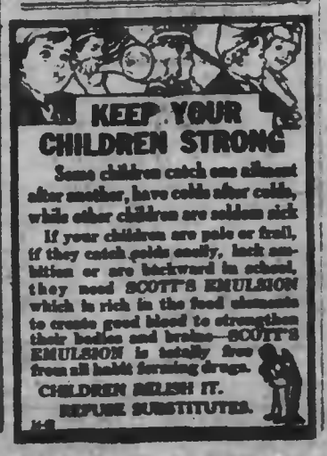
Old Women Gossip.

Even the old women sit in the open doorways hearing the gossip and now and then doing a little sewing or knitting. A flag floats lazily from the tall steeple of the cathedral, and that reminds me of a bit of conversation I heard that is hot without its grim humour.

"I am going to change hotels today," said a man to a friend.

"Why?" asked the other.

"Because I am within thirty yards of the cathedral," was the reply.



Project To Construct Radial Lines North and South Mooted

Mayor Beller Suggests a Visit From Hon. Adam Beck With This View
Busy Session of Board of Trade

At a meeting of the Board of Trade held last evening the secretary read a communication from the Eastern Townships Associated Boards of Trade requesting the endorsation of the Board of a resolution passed at a meeting of the former body at Granby, Que., on Sept. 23 last, whereby in view of the extinction of trade with Germany and Austria-Hungary the Canadian Government is petitioned to consider the advisability of calling a conference composed of duly accredited representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the banking and transportation interests, labour circles, etc., and that the Government Department prepare statistics and information of the trade transacted between the above mentioned countries during the past year so that broad plans may be initiated and matured for Canada to get her fair share of the business thus offering.

The resolution was unanimously endorsed and the Premier was wired accordingly.

His Worship Mayor Buller brought up the question of the advisability of obtaining the Hon. Adam Beck to speak in Peterborough on the question of building new Radial Railway lines in the vicinity. He thought the time was ripe to consider the building of lines north to Lakefield, Young's Point, and Burleigh, and south to Springville and Fraserville, so that Peterborough should be the hub of the district. It was the opinion of the members that to arrange for a meeting and to get the reeves of the various outlying townships together would probably occupy six weeks, and it was therefore decided to bring the matter up at the next meeting to be held one month hence.

The Board received from the Department of Trade and Commerce a copy of an Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act, setting forth that the weight of the contents of any bag, sack or package of the cereal products mentioned must be stated thereon, and that uniform weights per bushel or bag for vegetables throughout the whole of Canada must be definitely established.

A resolution was also passed that the Board endeavour to get the 1915 Fire Chief's Convention to meet in Peterborough.

AN INVITATION TO JOIN THE KITCHENER CLUB

The President of the Kitchener Club cordially invites all ladies who are interested in the work for the soldiers to join the club, as helpers are needed to knit. Those desiring to knit will be supplied with wool by calling at Mrs. Knox's, Gilmour street.

Another box was sent this morning from the Club containing 50 pairs of socks, 2 dozen handkerchiefs, 5 helmet caps, 3 mufflers.

NOMINATION FOR ALDERMAN WILL BE HELD OCT. 13

Nominations for alderman to represent the East Ward, and to fill the vacancy in the City Council caused by the resignation of Ald. Anderson, will be held next Tuesday, October 13. If an election is necessary it will be held one week later, October the 20th.

CUTTING RED TAPE

Scores of young London men who have been refused enlistment at one office for some slight physical defect have managed to get through at other recruiting stations. A Scotsman whose eyesight was somewhat defective, managed to "talk round" the doctor, a fellow countryman, who, after warning him of the order of the "test" cards he would put up, had to refuse him because he muddled up the numbers. "It a's nae guid, Mac, I kenna pass ye," he said in despair. Then, after reflection, he added, "Still, ye can go ta —— Station, and give Dr. — my compliments. But dinna repeat the blunder, for God's sake, or ye'll never see a German."

RECOGNITION OF CHIVALRY.

The "Cologne Gazette," commenting upon a report that the King paid a visit to Southampton and visited the German wounded in Netley Hospital, says: "The war which now rages has brought about so much hatred and infamy on the part of our opponents that we recognize more highly still the chivalrous feeling which lies in the behaviour of the English King."

"Rally Day Social" Held at Hastings

Under the Auspices of the Adult Bible Class—Other News

Examiner Special:

HASTINGS, Oct. 6—The "Rally Day Social," held on Wednesday night, under the auspices of the Adult Bible Class in connection with the Methodist Church, proved to be quite a success, particularly from a social standpoint. The tables were tastefully arranged and prettily decorated with cut flowers, while beside each plate in a prominent position was placed the motto of the class, "Others". After ample justice had been done to the tasty viands, several important subjects were discussed relative to the interests of the class, and a pleasant and profitable hour spent in this way. Music and recitations were rendered during the course of the evening and all went home feeling that the time had been well spent. Mr. C. Jones, the energetic teacher of the class, has every reason to be pleased with the success of the undertaking.

On Sunday morning Rally Day services were conducted in connection with the school, music and recitations being furnished by the children, who were addressed by the Pastor. The floral committee had done their part well, potted plants and cut flowers being everywhere prominent.

The evening service was in the interest of the Adult Bible Class, the speaker being the Rev. Mr. Demill of Havelock, who took for his subject the motto of the class, "Service for Others." Suitable music was furnished by the Choir, while the offering was in the interest of the Sunday School extension fund.

Rev. T. H. P. Anderson went to Havelock to take charge of the service there.

The employees of the foundry took a half-holiday on Monday and sailed to Healey Falls for an outing. The weather was ideal and everybody enjoyed the trip.

A large number of our people went to Warkworth on Friday to attend the Exhibition, and report a large attendance and a good exhibit. The "Darkey Concert" in the town hall, on Thursday night, was fairly well attended, the street parade during the day being quite an advertisement.

GOVERNMENT WILL PAY FOR DELIVERY OF LOCAL OFFERINGS

The following letter has been received by Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., from the Hon. George E. Foster:

Ottawa, Oct. 5, 1914.

Dear Sir,—The desire has been expressed by farmers of various parts of the Province of Ontario, and by several of the heads of municipalities that an offering should be made by them in recognition of their duty and loyalty towards the Government of Great Britain, in the prosecution of the war and to the relief of distress resulting therefrom.

Some deputations came to see the Government with reference to this, and as a result the British Government was communicated with and expressed its gratitude for the proffered offering. Arrangements have been made to pay the cost of transport of these donations from the point of shipment on the railway to their ultimate destinations. I have communicated with the Wardens of the various counties and am sending you this letter so that you may be advised of what has been done, and may co-operate in such way as you think best to make the offer a thoroughly representative and substantial one.

Yours sincerely,

George E. Foster.

"But I'm not too tired to dance."

RELIEF FOR BELGIANS

Encouraged by the prompt response to the appeal issued by the Montreal Board of Trade, on behalf of our suffering and devastated country, may we remind you that the atrocities reported in the newspapers are but too true, and that a large portion of our brave Belgians are absolutely in want of food and clothing, also that prompt action is required if they are to survive the winter.

"If you have not already the matter in hand we implore that you members take it up seriously and at once, the Belgian Consuls will be only too glad to co-operate."

Such were two paragraphs of a circular letter received by the Board of Trade last evening from the Central Executive Committee of Relief Work for the victims of the war in Belgium, in Montreal.

It was unanimously resolved that the Board take up the question of soliciting subscriptions for aid, prepare and send lists to the local bankers requesting them to take subscriptions, that the Treasurer of the Board also take subscriptions and that the city as well as private individuals be asked to donate towards this fund.

Subscriptions to the Board may be addressed to the Secretary, Mr. James Hamilton.

The following extract from a letter received by Mr. H. Prud-homme, General Manager of the Canadian General Development Company, will give some idea of the conditions:

We live in a terrible nightmare, and still it is less frightful than the reality. After two days of fighting, the French army retires from the Sambre-Meuse line (Givet-Dinant-Namur-Charleroi) to establish itself on the defensive behind the French frontier. Our garrison at Namur, which could have been such great help is thereby isolated and condemned to surrender soon.

The whole country, save the enclosure of Antwerp and a small corner of Flanders North of a line passing approximately by Termonde and Thourout, which cannot escape occupation long, is occupied by the Germans.

You can have no idea of the savage destruction and the atrocities committed by the German soldiers in all the country west of a straight line passing by Louvain and Huy from north to south. Everything is ravaged, burned voluntarily, and thousands of civilians, men, women and children have simply been murdered. All that had a semblance of pretence in the very compresensible lack of eagerness of our populations to obey the most humiliating requisitions of the Germans, but it exceeds anything imaginable. In Brussels and in Flanders there have been less brutalities, they say; but, no doubt, the slightest pretext will suffice to make them begin. As for our manufacturing region in Liege and Hainault, it is ravaged by the battles going on ther. There must be south of the Sambre 200,000 French and English (the latter at [illegible] on the front of the Meuse (Givet-Namur.)

[illegible] retreated to Liege and all along [illegible] to Louvain, [illegible]

The English papers have not failed to recognise loyally the importance of the [illegible] by us, and the immense service so rendered to France and England. It cannot be denied; it is known that after 48 hours of fighting at Liebe 120,000 Germans (against 35,000 Belgians) have had to ask a 24 hours' armistice to take away their dead and wounded, and that our general Leman has refused the armistice. Still, we had not had a week to prepare the defence of the intervals between the forts and we have really been attacked by surprise. Such a valour deserved better lot, and it brings up only an atrocious hatred from the Germans.

What will become of us; I do not dare to think of it.

Grand Duke of Baden—Telegraphing from Amsterdam a correspondent says that German newspapers announce the departure for the front of the Grand Duke of Baden.

TEACHERS CONTRIBUTE $318 TO THE FUND

The city teachers made their contribution to the Patriotic Fund yesterday, and a substantial donation it was, too, the offering as collected by Mr. S. J. Keyes of the Normal school, amounting to $318.75. This is practically equal to one day's pay from each of the teachers. Well done, teachers.

CUT HIS WIFE'S THROAT WITH BUTCHER KNIFE

Special Wire to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Oct. 7.—Following a long-standing domestic trouble, a Polish butcher named Solaski, on Queen Street west, today cut his wife's throat with a huge butcher knife, afterwards committing suicide by the same means. The woman is dead and the man is dying.

THE HOMELAND'S CALL

Hearken, ye whelps of the Lion!
Stir ye, awake from your dream;
Hark to the world-flung challenge,
List to the eagle's scream:
Thrown in the teeth of the nations
Terrible; menacing; grim:
Hear ye the words of defiance,
Hurled to the Empire's rim?
"Stand from the path of my southern mate,
Stand aside lest ye be too late
And I tear thee limb from limb."

Hearken, ye whelps of the Lion,
Hear ye his arrogant cry?
"Where is there one to dare me,
One who'll do battle and die?
Fear I the bear that was conquered,
Cowed by the small yellow man?
Heed I the squeaks of an upstart
I ground in the dust of Sedan?
Who talks to me of the Lion's sway?
A lion's cubs may be eagle's prey!
And mercy is none of my plan."

Hearken, ye welps of the Lion,
What says thy mother's roar?
"Who is this Teuton boaster
To prate, so loud of war?
Long have I stood his insults,
Long have I leashed my might
But never brooked dishonoured peace
The time has come to fight!
Rise then ye whelps of the Lion's breed,
Thy mother's call is the Empire's need
And battle for the right!

"Send me the men from the Southern Cross
Eager to do their part;
Send me my sons from the frozen north,
Men of the mighty heart.
Give me the men from the sun-baked veldt,
Bred to the rifle's crack;
Send me alike both rich and poor;
No fear that men I'll lack;
Making one cause with my sons at home,
Warring on land or on salt sea foam,
To fight for the Union Jack."

BRAVES ARE CONFIDENT IN SPITE OF INJURY TO THIRD BASEMAN SMITH

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 6.—The Boston National League baseball team, which will meet the Philadelphia Americans for the championship of the world, arrived here to-night to prepare for the opening game of the series scheduled for Friday. Despite the injury to third baseman Smith in to-day's game at Brooklyn, the Boston players continued to express confidence in their ability to defeat the present world's champions.

Smith's injury was the more disappointing because it was uncalled for. It was the direct result of his fight spirit and the indirect result of his carelessness. Smith was wearing a new pair of shoes, equipped with spikes longer than those to which he had been accustomed. It was quite natural that he should try for second on his long hit to right centre which bounced off the wall, for that would have left him on second with the winning run and only one out. He might have made second standing up had he kept on after rounding first. But nearing second Smith seemed to hesitate whether or not to slide. He finally decided to hit the dirt when he saw the play would be close. Cutshaw, who covered, swung in toward the runner after taking the throw-in. Smith had begun the hook slide meantime. His right shin struck Cutshaw's left leg [illegible] sign Minister, announced that the powers comprising entente (Russia, Great B[illegible] France) are taking steps the reopening of the Dard[illegible] game at the American League grounds here between the Athletics and New York Highlanders. He declared that the loss of Smith might weaken the batting strength of the Braves, but that Deal is an equally good fielder. Pitcher Rudolph and Catcher Whaling also arrived here ahead of the rest of the squad, and witnessed the Athletics in action.

Interest in the coming series appears to be greater than in former years here. Nedrly a thousand boys and men were in line to-night awaiting a chance to purchase tickets for the series at the opening of the public sale to-morrow morning. Joseph Banks, the 18-year-old Camden youth who took his place at the entrance to the store where the tickets will be sold early yesterday morning, retained his position to-night, although he was relieved several times by his brother. Many of those holding places in the line had provided themselves with cushions and lunch, while the monotony of the long wait was broken by several games of casino and pinochle.

Joseph P. McCready, who has charge of the press applications for the game, announced to-night that press credentials for Shibe Park will be ready for delivery at three o'clock Thursday afternoon, and will be available at the press headquarters here. Judging from the number of applications, he said, there will be more newspaper men present at the coming series than ever before. Among the requests for reservations are eleven from correspondents for papers in Havana Cuba.

SPLENDID ADDRESS

Civilian Rifle Association Hears Lecture From Mr. W. H. Moore on use of Rifle

30 NEW MEMBERS

Great enthusiasm was shown at the meeting of the Peterborough Civilian Rifle Association in the recreation room of the Armouries last night. There was a big attendance and thirty new recruits were sworn in, giving the club a membership after two meetings, of seventy-five. This will undoubtedly be augmented rapidly, as the keenest possible interest is being shown. The big feature last night was a splendid address by Mr. W. H. Moore, a Bisley man, and a member of the executive of the Association, upon the use of the rifle and some of the conditions that have to be taken into consideration in learning the art of rifle shooting. Mr. Moore, of course, knows the subject he was discussing thoroughly, and he made his talk a most interesting and instructive one, illustrating his explanations with black-board diagrams that drove the points home. The deep interest that was taken in the address was indicated in the unwavering attention of the audience and in the many questions hurled at the lecturer, which Mr. Moore cheerfully answered.

NO CASES OF DIPTHERIA AT KING EDWARD

The parents of children who attend the King Edward School have manifested anxiety concerning the recent outbreak of diphtheria in the south of the City. Some of them have even gone so far as to keep their children out of school to safeguard them from the disease.

While the epidemic has been of such a serious nature as to warrant action by the Board of eHalth there is little need for the parents of pupils at the King Edward school to worry, for to date there has not been a single case of the disease in the school. This being the case, children are not exposed to infection by attending the school, and do not run the slightset risk of catching diphtheira. A nurse is present every day to look after the interest of the pupils and report at once if any cases of diphtheria are discovered. In the meantime the parents have nothing to gain and much to lose by keeping their children away from school.

DEMONSTRATION CAR WILL BE ON VIEW IN MANY PLACES

As a result of the success which has attended the presentation of the Wool and Egg Exhibits of the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, at the larger Western Fairs this summer, arrangements have been made in co-operation with the Canadian Pacific Railway to place these exhibits before the people of the Eastern Provinces through the medium of a Demonstration Car. This car will leave Ottawa on or about the middle of October, and will be operated over the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway, stops being made at a large number of important agricultural centres. The detailed itinerary is now being arranged and further announcement of the date of the arrival of the car at each point will be given later. The car will be in charge of Egg and Wool Specialists of the Poultry and Sheep Divisions, respectively, and Demonstrations will be given at each scheduled stop.

The Wool Exhibit.

The object of the wool exhibit is to assist farmers and city dwellers alike to gain a more complete and definite knowledge of the character of wools grown in this and other countries, and of the products manufactured therefrom. It will demonstrate how wool may be handled to secure the best advantages to both producer and consumer. Carelessness in the preparation of Canadian wool has resulted in an injury to its reputation upon the markets of the world. In an endeavour to overcome these conditions by aiding the wool growers of Canada to place upon the market a high-grade product, the Sheep Division presents this exhibit to the public.

One of the most interesting and instructive features comprises samples of wool in both the greasy and scoured product, showing the injurious effects of using insolubile paints which are difficult to remove. There are also samples of wool tied with binder twine (sisal), which show how the sisal fibre becomes incorporated into the wool and the consequent defect in the finished cloth. The injurious effect of shearing sheep, while lousy, or of permitting the wool to become wet while in storage is exhibited, together with the damage caused by the incorporation of straw and chaff into the fleece.

Representative fleeces of the most important breeds of Canadian sheep are shown; their character and staple being further displayed by means of smaller samples. The Canadian classification is also represented by fleeces of the different grades.

The processes of woolen and worsted manufacture are illustrated by samples representing the intermediate product from the wool in the grease to the finished cloth. This serves to give the public an idea of the types of wool suiting the different classes of fabrics.

The Egg Exhibit.

The principal features of the Egg Exhibit are contained in two large show-cases, and strikingly illustrate right and wrong methods of marketing eggs. In one case, by means of models and appropriate descriptions are depicted the careless methods of handling eggs, prevailing on too large a number of Canadian farms, and in country stores. In this illustration the eggs are gathered infrequently and from questionable places. They are held until it is convenient to carry them to market and are often traded on a flat-rate basis, for merchandise, at the country store where little or no attention is paid to their preservation. Here they are frequently held indefinitely, in anticipation of a rising market, and often are shipped in damp and musty cases to the wholesale dealer, where they are candled and graded. The result of the candling is indicated and it is to be noted that but a relatively small proportion grade "select." The manner in which the average retail grocer permits eggs to deteriorate is also pointed out, and if by chance, a portion of the uncandled eggs should have gone direct to the consumer the result is very evident.

The other case shows the results that may be obtained through the adoption of improved methods, not only on the farm and in the country store, but on the part of all those who handle eggs. The models show a flock of pure bred poultry kept in a clean, well ventilated poultry house, provided with clean nesting in which the eggs are gathered frequently and regularly. The eggs are kept covered in a clean utensil in the coolest place in the farm house and marketed at least, better twice, a week. In the country store they are packed in clean, dry cases and forwarded with the minimum of delay. The result of this careful management is apparent in the Candling Room of the Wholesale Warehouse, where a decidedly large proportion of the eggs grade "select."

An additional and important feature of the Exhibit is a large candling booth, in which continuous demonstrations are given in the art of candling eggs. This phase of the work is of particular interest to consumers, for the reason that but few appreciate the fact that the quality of an egg can be accurately determined without breaking the shell.

The candling of eggs is not a difficult process and the small amount of labour entailed in candling presents no valid reason why the consuming public should not candle their own eggs. It should be recognized that as a business requirement the wholesale trade regularly, candles and grades the product which it receives. Merchants generally, however, should acquire facility in candling and every housewife will find it to her advantage to attend one of these candling demonstrations. She will be interested in observing the methods practiced and by obtaining one of the simule cardboard candling appliances which are distributed, free, she will be in a position to safeguard her family from many unpleasant occurrences at the breakfast table.

Snoggs As A Cookery Critic

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—Having been out of the City since I last wrote you I want to say that if I was asked what is producing the most discontent and dissatisfaction now I would say it is not religion or war, but ignorant cooking.

Women and girls think cooking is home-work and they are not going to slave at home, so they ain't. There is more discipline at home needed, and more ambition to keep house well, like our forenothers did, and not the canned stuff put off on hard-working men. The canvass-back pie is horrible and one can see any day that the mind of the woman is not on her home, but on some silly gimcrack stuff called dress, that makes her look like a crazy woman. She thinks she's artistic and beautiful. O ord, ain't she a peach?

Yours, etc.,
R. Snoggs.

GERMANY UNDER WAR CONDITIONS

Professor R. du Bois-Reymond, writing in the Berliner Tageblatt of the unanimity of the German people in the present war, says: "We read daily in the journals of celebrated artists and writers who have voluntarily joined the army. From the Berlin University alone 236 lecturers, that is to say, nearly half the total number, are serving their country either voluntarily or in obedience to the law. The medical faculty, of course, furnishes the lion's share, contributing 133 men."

At the monument of Field-Marshal Roon in Berlin was recently deposited a wreath bearing the inscription: "In these serious days children and grandchildren think of the grandfather who helped to sharpen the German sword. Eight brothers fight for their Emperor. Lieutenant-General Count Woldemar v. Roon, Major Albrecht v. Roon, Captain Walter v. Roon, Captain Gerhardt v. Roon, Captain Moritz v. Roon, Lieutenant Waldy v. Roon, and Lieutenant Gunther v. Roon." There is a ninth name appended, that of Field-Chaplain Wolf v. Roon.

Dr. von Sandt, the German civil administrator in Belgium, is described in the Kolnische Zeitung as "an official of brilliant gifts and a great worker, a man with an open mind and an open heart, yet a strict disciplinarian—every inch a Rheinlander, full of wit and gaiety, and, in spite of his 53 years, with some of the unconventional ways acquired during his student days at Bonn."

The paper says that even at the present time, when there is distinctions of party or religion, it may not be amiss to mention that Herr von Sandt comes of a family of good Catholics. When he left Bonn, where he had been district councillor for many years, in order to enter the ministry of the Interior as Privy Councillor, he said, at the public celebration in his honour: "I have always managed to get along well with the clergy, acting upon the principle that the Emperor, God, and the Church should receive what is their due, and being led by the conviction that the worldly and the ecclesiastical sword must join if the state is to prosper." The Emperor Wilhelm has known von Sandt since the days when they were students together and employs the familiar "du" in addressing him.

Among the German celebrities who have affixed their names to a manifesto renouncing the honours conferred upon them by British universities and other learned institutions are: Paul Ehrlich, Emil von Behring, Vincenz Czerny, Wilhelm Erb, Rudolf Kucken, Ernst Haeckel, Max Liebermann, Fritz Schaper, Adolf Wagner, August Weismann, Anton von Werner, Wilhelm Wundt, and many other scarcely less well known holders of degrees. The Assistant Police-President of Berlin, Privy Councillor Otto Friedheim, has given all the British, Russian, and Japanese orders with which he has been decorated to the Vaterlandischen Frauenverein. The proceeds of their sale are to benefit the sick and wounded.

General von Hindenburg, who has distinguished himself in the battles in East Prussia, is himself a son of that province. He was born in Posen and is 66 years old. Contrary to von Emmich and von Kluck, who always served in the field, Hindenburg was for many years employed in the Ministry of War and the General Staff.

The honour of being the youngest soldier in the German army is now being claimed for a boy of 14 years and 9 months, the "Obertertianer" Hilbert, who has just come from a school for military cadets.

Now Says that Kaiser Will Abdicate on November 7th.

EXPLANATION RE PATRIOTIC FUND

Regulations Governing the Canadian Patriotic Fund

In connection with the Canadian Patriotic Fund extracts from circulars by the Government are of interest to the public. Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., has also received letters from the Patriotic Fund authorities and from members of the Government at Ottawa which throw some light on the purposes and proceeding in connection with the fund. In regard to the separation allowance Circular No. 2 reads as follows:

Circular No. 2.
Separation Allowance and Assigned Pay.

Statement to accompany Form A.

Canadian—The rank and file will, while on active service, be paid at the rate of $1.10 per day. The wife of a married soldier will have sent to her each month, by the Paymaster General of the Militia Department at Ottawa, a cheque for $20.00. The amount receivable as separation allowance by officers will be somewhat greater. (See Order-in-Council of September 4th, 1914.)

Soldiers may, if they so desire, arrange to transfer a portion of their pay to their wives, but the Fund does not take this into consideration when estimating what a soldier's family should receive.

The local Relief Committee determines what is a reasonable amount for the maintenance of each family. It then ascertains from the soldier's wife what she receives by way of separation allowance, what the former employer of her husband grants her during his absence, what she or other members of the family do or can earn and what other sources of income are available. The total from these sources is deducted from the standard of living previously agreed upon, and the difference is paid semi-monthly to the soldier's family.

British Reservist—The wife of a British reservist receives, from the Imperial Pension Office, Butterworth Bldg., Ottawa, the sum of 1s. 1d. for herself, and 3d. for each child and the soldier is compelled to send her 6d. for herself and one penny for each child up to a maximum of 9d. Thus for a wife and three children the Imperial Government would contribute 2s. 4d. per day, or about $17. making $17.10 per month. The Imperial Pension Office at Ottawa has a list of all reservists who have gone to the front and sends out the cheques to their families monthly in advance.

French Reservists — The French Government allows each soldier's wife 25 cents per day separation allowance, and 10 cents per day for each child. This money is sent them through the Consul-General at Montreal. The wives of Belgian reservists at present, owing to the devastation of their country, are receiving only such assistance as donations to their Consul-General at Ottawa render possible.

A circular issued explaining the object of the fund and its application and organization which has been issued lately, reads in part as follows:

How to Determine What is a Reasonable Amount of Relief.

The Local Relief Committee may also be asked to provide for the families of officers. A special confidential memorandum on this matter will be furnished on application to the Honorary Secretary of the Fund. (Ask for Form B.)

Not many families will be left in total destitution. The British Government grants to each married man a separation allowance amounting to about 15 shillings per week. The Canadian Government will adopt a similar course and provide an amount relatively the same. Again, there are often wage-earners in the family who do or can contribute in part towards its support. Further many employers are continuing to pay to the family of a soldier on active service, the whole or part of the amount which such soldier as an employee had been accustomed to earn. All these sources of income should be enquired into by the local Relief Committee and carefully considered when calculating what amount a family may justly receive from the fund. For example, in the City of Montreal, if a woman applies for herself and three children, aged respectively 12, 7 and 3 years, she is regarded as entitled to receive, if she has no other sources of income whatsoever, the sum of approximately $46.00 per month. This would be made up by allowing her $1.00 per day on her own account and adding 20c. per day for a child between the ages of 10 and 15 years, 15c for a child between 5 and 10 years of age, and 10c per day for a child under five years. If, however, she receives a separation allowance of $15.00 or $20.00 per month, the Fund should be relieved to that extent and should give her only the difference between $45.00 and $20.00, that is to say, $25.00 per month. In some cases where reservists' families have relatives or friends in Great Britain, it may be wise to allow passage money to return home.

Limitations of the Fund.

N.B.—It is asked, can this fund be used to relieve a family whose breadwinner has not gone to the front, but who is out of work and in need through the indirect effects of the war? The Central Executive realises that this is a danger which threatens at many places throughout Canada, and must be adequately met, else great hardship will ensue during the coming fall and winter. But, whatever might be their inclination, the administrators of the Fund cannot legally go beyond the powers granted by their act of incorporation, and to relieve incidental troubles arising from non-employment is not one of their powers. Several cities, however, are making up what might be called double-purpose subscriptions. They are first setting aside an amount for the Canadian Patriotic Fund and then providing a further sum for the relief of the locally unemployed. In the expenditure of these latter amounts the local authorities act independently of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, for obviously with conditions differing as they do in various parts of Canada no central organization can adequately deal with this additional problem.

The following letter from Philip Morris to Mr. Burnham also relates to the Patriotic Fund:

Ottawa, October 6th, 1914.

Dear Sir,—At the suggestion of Mr. Ames, M.P., I am venturing to direct your attention to the work of the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

In the County of Peterborough branches have been formed at Havelock and Peterborough, but so far as I know these are the only organizations of this nature within the boundaries of the county. It is essential that there should be some committee to which we could refer applications for assistance from any part of the county and I have already written to the County Clerk with regard to this. I sent him a copy of the resolution recently adopted by the Council of the County of Frontenac and suggested that something should be done in Peterborough along similar lines. Enclosed I send you herewith a copy of the same resolution, together with a copy of our circulars and shall be glad if you will do whatever is in your power to stimulate action in this matter.

I would add that it is most necessary that every county within the Province of Ontario should be organized at once. Frequent applications for assistance are being received and it is most difficult to deal with them under existing conditions.

Yours truly,
PHILIP H. MORRIS,
Assistant Secretary.

J. H. Burnham, Esq., M.P.,
Peterborough, Ontario.

P.S.—I am also communicating with Mr. John A. Sexsmith, M.P., Peterborough, and suggest that you communicate and work in unison with him.

GOVERNMENT AT OSTEND.

Belgian Officials Leave Antwerp on Eve of Bombardment.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 8.—(Via London.)—The Nieuws Van Der Dag says the Belgian Government yester-

Dutch coastguards on the Dutch island Schiermonnikog, in the North Sea, off the province of Friesland.

The weather was clear and the sea calm, and the destroyer could plainly be seen cruising before the mouth of the Ems. Suddenly the observers saw a column of water rise near the bow of the destroyer. The vessel immediately turned over and sank in three minutes.

Shortly after the explosion the periscope of the submarine came above the surface of the water for a moment, but as soon as those on board the plunger saw that their torpedo had struck its mark the vessel was again submerged.

A German cruiser and torpedo boats came quickly to the rescue of the crew of the ill-fated destroyer who could be seen swimming about in the vicinity of the disaster or clinging to the wreckage of their sunken ship. As Schiermonnikog is close to the Island of Borkum, where the Germans have a naval base and within 60 miles of Heligoland and the naval arsenal at Wilhelmshaven, the dash of the submarine is considered here a particularly daring one.

A despatch to the Central News from Harwich, England, says that a rumor is in circulation there of the sinking of a German cruiser in addition to the German torpedo-boat destroyer.

RIVAL CAVALRY FORCES IN A MAD RUSH TO THE COAST

Mounted Forces Seeking to Outflank Each Other While Allies Report Advances at Severa Points.

SOUTH IS INACTIVE

LONDON, Oct. 8.—After desperate fighting only nine miles from the Belgian border, French and British cavalry yesterday defeated a large force of German cavalry which was striving to outflank the allies, it is declared in advices from the front. The mounted trops of both armies have been engaged in a mad drive for the past two days, one to reach the French-Belgian coast and the other to prevent it. The advantage gained yesterday by the allies is said to give them a continuous line opposing the Kaiser's armies from Malines to Noyon, and from Soissons eastward in the general direction of Metz.

The official communication issued by the French War Department last night announces that the ground previously ceded by the French between Chaulnes and Roye has been retaken, and that on the centre the French have advanced on certain points.

The text is as follows: "Except on the two wings where the German attacks have been repulsed there has been nearly complete calm along the front.

"On our left wing the German cavalry has been held in check; to the north of Lille it has been driven back.

"Between Chaulnes and Roye the ground previously ceded has been retaken.

"On the centre we have made an advance on certain points.

"There is nothing to report on our right wing."

Gen. Von Kluk is still endeavoring to pierce the Franco-British lines, and Tuesday night repeated assaults were delivered at different points. Although he continues to hold the advantage won on Monday, he has been unable to make any definite impression on the allied front. In fact, the fortified positions of both armies impregnable, although the German statement of yesterday acknowledges a retirement at certain points.

This statement says: "Continuous French outflanking movements against our right wing have extended the battle front until it is now north of Arras, west of Lille and west of Lens, nine miles northeast of Arras. Our advance guards are in touch with the enemy's cavalry.

"No decision has been reached in our counter attack along the line between Arras, Albert and Roye.

"The situation remains unchanged along the battle front between the Oise and the Meuse, in the vicinity of Verdun and in Alsace-Lorraine."

The French communique of three o'clock shows a strange agreement with the German statement concerning the battle of the Aisne. It says:

"On our left wing the battle still continues with great violence. The opposing fronts extend into the region between Lens, nine miles northeast of Arras, and La Bassee, thirteen miles southeast of Lille, and are strengthened by masses of cavalry which are in grips as far as the vicinity of Armentieres, nine miles northwest of Lille, and virtually on the Belgian frontier.

"On the front extending from the Somme to the Meuse there is nothing to report.

"In the Woevre district the enemy made a new effort to stop our progress, but his attacks again failed.

The following official statement was issued yesterday afternoon by the British War Office:

"North of the River Oise and Lens there was hard fighting. Elsewhere slight advance or retreat varies throughout the lines. Reports are generally satisfactory. The French army is fighting with great dash and bravery. The Germans attacking Antwerp pushed forward their position against considerable resistance by the garrison."
